There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refund to W. T. Scott and William Umdenstock, of Harrison County, Tex., or to their heirs or legal representatives, $2,750 each, that being the amount erroneously paid by them severally into the Treasury of the United States on the 17th day of September, 1881, in compromise of a judgment recovered against them as sureties on the official bond of Davis B. Bonfoey, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas December 11, 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL AT BROWNS POINT, PUGET SOUND.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8128) to establish a light and fog signal at Browns Point, in Puget Sound.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that a light and fog signal shall be established and constructed at Browns Point, on Commencement Bay, in Puget Sound, being at the entrance of the harbor of the city of Tacoma; the light and fog signal not to exceed the cost of $6,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF GILMAN SAWTELLE.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 257) for the relief of Gilman Sawtelle.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "to," to insert "the legal representative of;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Gilman Sawtelle, Priest River, Idaho, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,070, for remuneration for damages done to his property by United States troops while camping on his ranch at Henrys Lake, Idaho, in 1877.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Gilman Sawtelle."

JAMES AND WILLIAM CROOKS.

Mr. SPOONER. Some time ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 631) for the relief of James and William Crooks, of Canada. I have examined the case since then, and in view of the fact that the court held the original seizure to have been void, I regard the principle which it seemed to me ought to prevent the passage of the bill to be inapplicable. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 631 was passed. The bill stands passed.

JOHN COLLINSON.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 3723) to enable John Collinson, a subject of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, to dispose of his right, title, and interest to and in certain lands situate in the Territory of New Mexico, be now considered.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BERRY. From what committee does the bill come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Would the bill authorize Mr. Collinson to sell the lands to another citizen of England?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then would that authorize the purchaser to hold and convey it indefinitely to other citizens?

Mr. DAVIS. The same as if it were sold to a citizen of the United States.

I will say to the Senator that the bill received the very careful consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations. We heard an explanation of the history of the matter from Senator ELKINS. It seems that Mr. Collinson acquired this property in 1873. The act of Congress forbidding the purchase of property by aliens was passed in 1887; but upon looking at the facts and circumstances, Mr. Collinson having large business interests in this country, we concluded that it was a proper case in which to grant relief from the operation of the act. He can make a sale to people in London and can not make it here. We thought on the whole it was a proper thing to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, it would enable this piece of property to be held indefinitely and to be transferred by citizens of England from one to the other?

Mr. DAVIS. Just as if it were held by a citizen of the United States. Mr. President, considering the treaty we made the other day, and considering the very questionable policy of such sweeping legislation, I think this is a proper and fit bill to pass under the circumstances of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the word "Bosque," to insert "del Apache;" and on page 2, line 2, after the word "act," to insert "or statute of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That John Collinson, of London, England, a subject of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to sell, convey, transfer, and deliver, either as a whole or otherwise, all his right, title, and interest in and to certain lands situate in the Territory of New Mexico, known briefly as the "Bosque del Apache grant," to any person or persons or corporation or corporations, and that such person or persons or corporation or corporations be, and it or they hereby are, authorized and empowered to take, receive, hold, transfer, and deal with the lands and interests so acquired, notwithstanding the provisions of any Territorial act or statute of the United States now in force respecting the holding of lands in Territories of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice, with reference to the unanimous-consent agreement that the resolution No. 107, in reference to the vacant seat in this body from the State of Pennsylvania, shall be proceeded with on Tuesday next, after the conclusion of the morning business, that I shall defer asking the Senate to act under that consent agreement on Tuesday next, out of deference to the discussion of the Puerto Rican bill, but I shall ask the Senate to proceed under that order on the next day, Wednesday, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, or, if not under that order, to proceed with the resolution as the highest possible question of privilege.

GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate take up the unfinished business, being House bill 8245.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Ohio pardon me a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement that I would have made yesterday afternoon but for the fact that time would not then permit. Just as the Senate was on the eve of going into executive session I offered an amendment, announcing at the time that it was in the nature of a substitute. I do not wish to appear to be the appropriator of that which I am not really the original owner of. I desire to state that the substitute which I offered was not drawn by myself; that it is the original bill offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] for the establishment of civil government in the island of Puerto Rico, and that it is the product of the brain of the Senator from Ohio and not of myself.

I wish to state that in one or two minor particulars two changes were introduced by myself, and I desire to call attention to what they were.

In the first place, the provision which the Senator from Ohio will remember in the original bill, requiring that franchises granted in Puerto Rico should, when granted by the authorities in the island, be submitted for the approval of the President, was changed by me to the extent of making it conform to the present pending bill, making such franchises subject to the approval of Congress and reserving the right of Congress to annul.

Another change was that in the original bill, as to the district court of the United States organized there, it provided for what might be understood to be a constitutional judge with a life tenure of office. This bill was to the extent changed that it is made a Territorial judge with a four years' tenure of office.

But, Mr. President, as both of those changes are taken from the pending bill, they may also be said to be the product of the Senator from Ohio, and that, therefore, there is no line or letter in the bill or in the substitute proposed by me which is not the bill of the Senator from Ohio.

I desire to state, Mr. President, that there are one or two other minor particulars in which I shall desire to make a change. One of them which I intended to make, and inadvertently omitted to do so, is that the salary of the governor is fixed at $10,000, which seems to me to be excessive, and unless some good reason can be shown to the contrary I shall ask the permission of the Senate to strike out "ten" and insert "five" before "thousand."

One other matter inadvertently omitted by me when presenting the substitute was that section 38, which prescribes the time when the bill shall take effect, ought to have been stricken out before it was offered, and it will be stricken out by me, with the permission of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right now to modify the amendment as he pleases.

Mr. BACON. I will modify it in the points indicated. I desire to state, with the permission of the Senator, that I thought it was due to him and to myself that I should make this statement, because, of course, anyone familiar with the two measures would naturally see their identity and might suppose it was my purpose to appropriate it without giving due credit to the author.

I want to say another thing; that I have offered the amendment in the utmost good faith; that I shall be more than delighted if it can be passed, and passed not as my amendment or substitute, but as the bill of the Senator from Ohio. I have examined it with great care, and I have compared it with the Territorial bills, copies of which are included in the pamphlet which has been gotten up as a Senate document, and it is my deliberate judgment that in comparison with them it is superior to any of them in care and in the symmetry and harmony of its provisions, and in its entire correspondence in all of its particulars with the great fundamental principles of our Government and with the institutions of our Government.

I desire, Mr. President, to call attention to the particulars in which this bill has so radically commended itself to me that I have felt that it should not be discarded, and that even if it were discarded by those who originally favored it, I myself should have the opportunity, and others who think like me should have the opportunity, to vote for it.

In this original bill of the Senator from Ohio, which has been presented by me now as a substitute after it has been practically put aside by those who originally favored it, there is a declaration that the inhabitants of Puerto Rico are citizens of the United States. It imposes upon imports into Puerto Rico from foreign lands the duties levied by the Dingley tariff law. It specifically declares that there shall be no tariff duties between Puerto Rico and any other part of the United States as to goods coming from Puerto Rico or going to Puerto Rico. It establishes a legislative assembly in the island and denominates it the legislative assembly of the island of Puerto Rico, United States of America. The provision of the bill requires that in the enactment of laws by that Territorial legislature the following language shall be used: Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the island of Puerto Rico, United States of America.

It further prescribed that there shall be no legislation inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, and it provides that the existing laws of the island shall continue in force except so far as inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States.

It provides that the officers of the judicial courts shall be officers of the United States—the judges, the district attorneys, and the marshals.

There is another point which I omitted to mention. It extends over the island the internal-revenue system of the United States. Finally, it gives to the people of Puerto Rico a Delegate in Congress.

Now, I will not stop at this time to contrast that with the present measure which is now urged upon the Senate, but I desire to say that if the Senator from Ohio and those who act with him should see fit to bring to a vote in the Senate the bill as originally introduced by him with such minor amendments as may be found necessary, while I am not authorized to speak for all on this side of the Chamber, I know there are a number who would vote for it, and I do not believe there would be a dissenting voice on this side of the Chamber in support of that measure, for the reason that it accomplishes what we think ought to be accomplished.

It established in Puerto Rico a free Territorial government, just as free, just as perfect, just as satisfactory in all its provisions—as measured by the requirements of republican principles and republican institutions—as the Territorial governments which now exist in this country over the Territories of the United States known technically as such. The only possible exception which now occurs to me being in the constitution of what is known as the council, which is not an unusual feature in the inauguration of new Territorial governments, where the inhabitants have not possibly the experience which would enable them to enjoy the full measure of representative government which they are expected to enjoy afterwards.

Now, Mr. President, I repeat that I have introduced this measure in the utmost good faith, not only that we may have the opportunity to vote for it, but that, if possible, those who agree that there should be this free government for Puerto Rico may have the opportunity to vote for it, and I have made this full announcement of the origin of this bill because I know the fact that Senators who are in the majority are necessarily sensitive upon the subject of supporting a measure which comes from the minority.

This, therefore, Mr. President, is presented not as a measure coming from the minority, but as one which was introduced and appears in its original shape upon the Calendar as the offspring of a leading member of the majority, and I desire to assure the Senator from Ohio that in taking this liberty with his property I do so, in the first place, because as it appeared it was the only way in which it could be again brought before the Senate, and because in the utmost good faith I desire that, if possible, it shall be enacted into law.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am not insensible to the compliment paid me by the Senator from Georgia, both in adopting as his amendment the bill originally introduced on this subject by me and particularly in the employment by him of the kind language he has seen fit to use in making reference to the bill and to myself in connection with it. I thank him for all that.

And, Mr. President, at the same time I desire to congratulate the Senator from Georgia that he has, in the short space of two months, caught up to the place where I was in regard to this matter when I introduced this bill some six or eight weeks ago. But this is to be said:

The bill as it was introduced by me was simply a first draft. It expressed my idea at that time, without having heard the testimony that we have since listened to as to the conditions in Puerto Rico and the character of government that was suitable to Puerto Rico. It does not, however—and for that reason it would not be satisfactory now—provide for many difficulties there that must be provided for by any legislation that we may enact looking to the establishment of a civil government. I refer to matters about which I was not informed when I made this draft.

In many particulars, if it were necessary, I could point out that this draft is inadequate because entirely silent with respect to such matters. One will illustrate, and that is the subject of an exchange of the coinage, about which we had so much debate in the Senate yesterday and the day before. This bill makes no provision on that point. A number of other provisions that are now in the bill as pending and under consideration are not to be found in this original draft.

But, Mr. President, the points to which the Senator desires to call particular attention, and does call particular attention, as making this bill satisfactory to him are those in relation to citizenship, free trade, the title to be given to the legislative assembly, and the other particulars to which he called special attention. When I made this original draft I had the same opinion that I have now as to the relation of Puerto Rico to the United States. I regarded it as a possession or as a dependency and not as a part of the United States. But I recognized that the Congress had a right to make it a part of the United States if the Congress saw fit to do so, and in the framing of this bill I had that in view, and I accordingly extended the Constitution and proceeded generally upon that theory.

When, however, that question came up for consideration and discussion it was thought by my colleagues that we could at any time make it a part of the United States; that it was not wise policy to make it so now; and that for that reason such provisions in this bill as looked in that direction should be eliminated, and that the legislation with respect to Puerto Rico should be as legislation for a dependency and not as a Territory or a part of the territory of the United States in any other sense than that it belongs to the United States. For that reason all the expressions in the bill to which the Senator has called attention were eliminated. The general provisions are the same, but the expressions to which he refers, that would carry with them the idea that we were incorporating it into the Union and making it in effect a Territory if not in name a Territory, thus putting it in a state of pupilage for statehood, have been purposely eliminated.

That, Mr. President, is the reason why these changes have been made and the reason why I would not now agree to such legislation as I myself proposed when this bill was originally introduced, at least not in those particulars.

Now, Mr. President, before we consider the substitute that has been offered by the Senator from Georgia, I desire to have disposed of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] which we had under consideration when the Senate adjourned yesterday. As I remember, the Senator from Nebraska proposed that certain words be inserted at the end of section 25, on page 17 of the reprint. I ask that the Secretary may read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 25, on page 17, line 23, after the word "of," insert the words "the Territory of;" so that the sentence would read:

The legislative assembly of the Territory of Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, that was the amendment pending last night, I believe, when we adjourned, upon which I requested the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to enlighten the Senate as to why we should not treat Puerto Rico the same as any other Territory, which, in my judgment, he failed to do. We were discussing at that time the all-important question of the relation of that island under the treaty of Paris to the United States. Mr. Carman F. Randolph, an eminent member of the New York bar and a distinguished writer on constitutional subjects, has recently addressed a paper to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and it is of that important character that I will read it and make it a part of my remarks.

Mr. ALLEN thereupon proceeded to read the paper.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Nebraska is proceeding to read a very elaborate document, which I suppose he has a right to do, but I think that he ought to be permitted to append it as part of his remarks without reading it, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed as a part of the Senator's remarks, without putting him to the trouble of reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Nebraska may be permitted to print in the RECORD, as a part of his speech, the paper he holds in his hand. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the document, Mr. President?

Mr. ALLEN. The argument of Mr. Carman F. Randolph submitted to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. It is a brief or argument on the law of territorial expansion, with especial reference to the Philippines.

Mr. McCOMAS. I shall not object to the printing of the pamphlet to which the Senator refers as a part of his remarks, but I desire to have read in connection with these proceedings a statement of President Havemeyer, of the American Sugar Refining Company, which was made yesterday, in favor of free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States, consisting of about fifteen lines. I desire to have it read, as it is rather pertinent to the present argument.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have no desire to bargain with the Senator, and I will proceed to read this document.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I should like to ask him whether I entered into any bargain with him? I simply asked what the document was.

Mr. ALLEN. I was not speaking of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was about to ask the Senator of how many pages the pamphlet consists?

Mr. ALLEN. Fifty-four pages.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, while I regret that the Senator from Nebraska wishes to put so long a document in the RECORD, he has an undoubted right to read it as a part of his speech, and then it will go into the RECORD. Therefore, I do not see any wisdom in making objection to it.

Mr. ALLEN. I have never known until within the last three or four weeks of any objection being made to the printing of documents in this Chamber. If there is no objection, I will submit this pamphlet to be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the printing of the pamphlet without its being read by the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The pamphlet referred to is as follows:

NOTES ON THE LAW OF TERRITORIAL EXPANSION, WITH ESPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE PHILIPPINES.

[Submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate of the United States, March 16, 1900, by Carman F. Randolph, of the New York bar.]

Before the treaty of Paris became effective the disposition of the Philippines was an open question. Then the islands were foreign territory. The United States controlled their disposition, but stood in the broad ways of war and diplomacy uncommitted and uncompelled to a particular course. Now the islands are part of the United States, and our relation to them is defined by the law of the Constitution, complemented by treaty provisions and principles of public law conformable to its supreme authority. This statement is challenged, and the foremost challenger is the Administration, which would hold the islands in firm possession, yet aloof from the United States and beyond the ægis of the Constitution.

THE STATUS OF THE PHILIPPINES.

THE TRANSFER OF THE SPANISH TITLE.

According to the principles recognized by civilized nations as determining national title to land, Spain possessed the Philippines in exclusive sovereignty. That she had not reclaimed all parts of the archipelago nor bent all its savage tribes to her will no more affected her title than did like shortcomings affect our right to the far West in the early days. Nor was her title divested by insurrection, for the principles of public law affirm the right of a State to territory as against insurgents who do not maintain a recognized government. Besides, the insurrection must be viewed in connection with our campaign. Our hostile preparations revived it, our fleet brought back its leader, our aid made it so formidable that, when Manila fell, Spain was mistress only of the few towns in which her troops were huddled. Finally, the United States have put all question of Spain's title beyond discussion. They have determined its sufficiency by accepting the islands from her hands?

Being thus entitled to the Philippines, Spain had the legal right to cede them. The United States had the legal right to accept them. The treaty of Paris expressed the lawful intentions of the signatory powers and brought the islands under the sovereignty of the United States. And it must be insisted that our title to all the land acquired as a result of the war with Spain is derived from Spain exclusively. The President says in his message: "The authorities of the Sulu Islands have accepted the succession of the United States to the rights of Spain, and our flag floats over that territory." (Page 43.) This statement may convey the wrong impression that our interest in the Sulus differs in derivation and quality from our interest in the rest of the Philippines—in derivation, because it is strengthened by the consent of the Sultan; in quality, because the statement may imply, what has indeed been asserted, that "the rights of Spain" in the Sulus were those of a protector rather than a sovereign proprietor. The article of cession in the treaty of Paris was submitted by the American commission in what proved to be its accepted form, and its precise delimitation of the "Philippine Archipelago" embraced the unmentioned Sulu group.

The assertion of the Spanish commissioners that the "Philippines" did not include the Sulus and the great island of Mindanao was a play for better terms. They said in effect, "You are willing to pay $20,000,000 for the 'Philippines.' Here are the 'Philippines;' if you want Mindanao and the Sulus as well you must pay more." The American commissioners replied in effect, "The 'Philippines' we demand, and which you will cede without change in terms, include Mindanao and the Sulus." Of course the victors proved to be better geographers than the vanquished. Throughout the negotiations Spain's ability to transfer the complete sovereignty of all the land demanded by the United States was never questioned, and, whatever may have been her actual relation to this or that island, she assumed to cede and the United States accepted sovereignty over all. We can not afford to esteem that sovereignty as less than perfect and all-embracing. We can not go behind the treaty of Paris for confirmation of our title to any part of the Philippines. As we have not sought "the consent of the governed" from the people of Luzon, we can not even appear to recognize its necessity in dealing with slaveholding and polygamous barbarians who are only restrained from piracy by gunboats and blackmail.

This brief certificate of title sufficiently demonstrates our legal right to possess the Philippines, and with legal rights only are we at present concerned.

THE EFFECT OF CESSION.

Despite our acquisition of the Philippines there is a disposition to balk at its real effect. The islands are called a "colony," a "dependency," a "province," or other name suggestive of detachment from the United States, but it will appear that by virtue of the character of our occupation they are United States territory.

The United States may happen to control land actually or constructively without making it domestic territory. An occupation of new-found or abandoned or hostile territory involves a certain assumption of sovereignty in respect of the land itself, and also in an international sense, for among the nations the state in visible control of a country is accounted its sovereign for important purposes. (Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar vs. United States, 9 Cranch, 191, 195; Fleming vs. Page, 9 Howard, 603, 615.) Land occupied through enterprise or conquest does not thereby become United States territory in a domestic sense, even though the act be prompted or approved by the President. The President can not enlarge the boundaries of the Republic. (See Fleming vs. Page, 9 Howard, 603, 614.)

These boundaries mark the territorial jurisdiction of Congress, and Congress can not be forced to extend its jurisdiction at the pleasure of the President. Land is annexed to the United States when and only when its occupation has been authorized or confirmed by some act of legislation, a statute or treaty, asserting territorial sovereignty. Such an act is the treaty of Paris by which "Spain cedes to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands," and "cedes" her "sovereignty" thereof. If the assent of the House of Representatives is necessary to a perfect acceptance, it is given by the appropriation of $20,000,000 to carry out the treaty.

At this point we meet the suggestion that if the treaty-making body has full power to determine the status of ceded territory, the omission from the treaty of Paris of a specific designation of the Philippines as United States territory differentiates them from land heretofore acquired by a treaty or an act of Congress recognizing it in more or less definite phrase as incorporated in the United States. I think this suggestion is rebuked by the treaty itself. The ninth article declares that the Spanish-born residents of the ceded islands who shall not elect to retain their old allegiance within a given time shall be deemed to have adopted "the nationality of the territory in which they may reside."

Must not "the nationality" of Philippine territory be that of the United States, since we do not recognize the existence of a Philippine nation? And what is land impressed with United States nationality but United States territory? But, apart from this article, the suggestion is discredited by a conclusive presumption of law. The treaty-making body has, without doubt, a large discretion as to the interest it may acquire in land on behalf of the Republic, or the relation it may cause the Republic to assume toward another country. For example, our rights over Pearl River, in Hawaii, and Pago Pago, in Samoa, were not the rights of unlimited sovereignty; and by this very treaty of Paris we assume a peculiar relation toward Cuba, wholly distinguishable from sovereign proprietorship. Assuredly we may gain an interest in a country or assume a certain control over it without making it United States territory. But when land is brought within the complete and exclusive sovereignty of the Republic I find no argument of inconvenience strong enough to overcome the presumption that it is United States territory by force of the supreme tenure by which it is held.

The Philippines are not only within the United States in a general sense; they are not distinguished organically from the rest of our territory. Prior to the treaty of Paris the common property of the States of the Union, called the territory of the United States, comprised New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Alaska, Hawaii, and a number of islets. To these are now added the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Guam. These districts present different characteristics. All are not governed in the same way. Some will become States or parts of States. Others will not. Some, indeed, have been acquired under what has been called a promise of ultimate statehood (see New Orleans vs. De Armas, 9 Peters, 224, 235), but these are not distinguishable in law from the others, for the admission of new States is an act of policy within the unlimited discretion of Congress. Hawaii, annexed without promise, may enter the Union before Indian Territory, carved out of that Louisiana purchase in regard to which the so-called promise was made nearly a century ago.

All are held by the United States in sovereign proprietorship, and although we unite now in protesting the everlasting unfitness of the Philippines for admission to the Union, our prejudice does not prevent their being, in point of law, as eligible as New Mexico, nor would their admission by the next generation involve a more radical and surprising reversal of prejudice than the admission of millions of negroes to political equality by the last generation. All the districts I have named are organically alike, because each is owned by the United States in sovereign proprietorship, and when this likeness is determined all differences in condition, location, and probable destiny must be purely circumstantial.

The Constitution and the Philippines.

An anxiety to rule the Philippines free from constitutional restrictions is even more marked than the unwillingness to consider them United States territory. Indeed, this unwillingness is due to the apprehension that throughout all this territory the Constitution must be the supreme law. And so keen is the fear that we shall be obliged to administer the Philippines by constitutional rules that ingenious arguments are advanced to prove that the Constitution is really quite as foreign to these islands, unquestionably ours, as though they belonged to another nation.

Furthermore, the gravity of the issues at stake has created an impression that the question of the Philippines is not properly a question of law, but lies within that domain of policy into which the Supreme Court will not intrude; or, as some having greater respect for the powers than for the integrity of the court say, its judgment will reflect what they assume is the popular desire to exploit the islands with a free hand. The Philippine question is political, and until it be adjudicated the Administration will probably persist in misconstruing the Constitution to suit its policy. But whenever a person having access to the Federal courts alleges that one of his constitutional rights is invaded, what may have been a political question becomes an issue in a suit at law—the suitor must pay a tax, or he need not; his property has or has not been wrongfully taken. The decision may displease a faction; it may thwart a novel policy or even forbid a practice of long standing; yet the court will see only the parties to the suit and judge the cause according to the law of the Constitution.

Arguments against constitutional rule examined.

It is contended that the Constitution is not in the Philippines because it has not been carried there by an act of Congress. This argument attributes unlawful powers to the Federal Legislature. Congress is the creature of the Constitution, not its master; bound to obey it wherever it is supreme, not privileged to decide where, within the jurisdiction of the United States, it shall be supreme. Probably the argument is suggested by an improper estimate of legislative practice. Certain acts of Congress organizing Territories purport to extend the Constitution to the new district. The Supreme Court has recognized such legislation, but has never treated it as carrying the Constitution to a new field. In fact, the court in a recent case practically ignored an act of Congress purporting to establish the right to trial by jury in Utah Territory, declaring that the right was established by the Constitution. (Thompson vs. Utah, 170 U. S., 343, 346.) The acts in question are not of constitutional dignity. If the Constitution is in the Territory by its own force, they affirm an actual condition in a spirit of abundant caution; if it is not, they are merely repealable laws couched in the phrase of the Constitution, and an act of Congress dispensing with trial by jury, for example, would abrogate the privilege granted by the so-called extension of the Constitution. Of all the heresies that embarrass the fair discussion of the Philippine question few are more mischievous than the notion that Congress is competent to grant and, if to grant, to take away or withhold the Constitution at pleasure.

It is suggested that the Constitution will not affect the Philippines until Congress shall establish civil government there. Mr. Webster expressed perhaps somewhat the same idea when he said in the Senate on February 24, 1849, "I do not say that while we sit here to make laws for these Territories we are not bound by every one of the great principles which are intended as general securities for public liberty. But they do not exist in Territories till introduced by the authority of Congress." (Curtis's Life of Webster, II, 360.) Even Webster's name can not sustain the proposition that constitutional guaranties demand respect only when the establishment of civil order under the auspices of Congress renders them less likely to be needed. A monstrous doctrine indeed that the President may rule United States territory during the inaction of Congress free from the restraints which, it is conceded, affect both himself and Congress after the territory shall have been duly organized! Even a King of England can not do so much; for, as Lord Mansfield said, "If the King (and when I say the King I always mean the King without the concurrence of Parliament) has a power to alter the old and introduce new laws in a conquered country, this legislation being subordinate, that is, subordinate to his own authority in Parliament, he can not make any new change contrary to fundamental principles." (Campbell vs. Hall, Cowper, 204, 209.)

The annual report of the Secretary of War for 1899 contains the following passage:

"The treaty of Paris provides: 'The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.' I assume, for I do not think that it can be successfully disputed, that all acquisition of territory under this treaty was the exercise of a power which belonged to the United States because it was a nation, and for that reason was endowed with the powers essential to national life, and that the United States has all the powers in respect of the territory which it has thus acquired and the inhabitants of that territory which any nation in the world has in respect of territory which it has acquired; that as between the people of the ceded islands and the United States the former are subject to the complete sovereignty of the latter, controlled by no legal limitations except those which may be found in the treaty of cession; that the people of the islands have no right to have them treated as States, or to have them treated as the Territories previously held by the United States have been treated, or to assert a legal right under the provisions of the Constitution which was established for the people of the United States themselves and to meet the conditions existing upon this continent, or to assert against the United States any legal right whatever not found in the treaty." (Page 26.)

If I read this passage aright, it suggests two arguments against the rule of the Constitution. One is predicated on a provision of the treaty of Paris which will be considered presently; the other is suggested by the words: "The people of the islands have no right to have them treated as the Territories previously held by the United States have been treated, or to assert a legal right under the provisions of the Constitution, which was established for the people of the United States themselves, and to meet the conditions existing upon this continent," and we read later that the Puerto Ricans can not demand uniform tariff duties as between Puerto Rico and the United States because the constitutional provision of uniformity was "solely adapted to the conditions existing in the United States upon the continent of North America." In other words, the Constitution is supposed to have been ordained for the present and future dominions of the United States upon the continent of North America and nowhere else. The preamble, it is true, entitles our Republic "the United States of America," but I understand the suffix to be merely a descriptive term aptly chosen at the time, and not a legal restriction; otherwise we could not have lawfully annexed the Philippines. The "continental" theory is not even derived from the preamble, for it restricts the Constitution to North America. Upon what basis of fact is a constitution conceded to be adapted to the diverse physical, social, and economic conditions of our continental domain deemed to be essentially unfit for Puerto Rico? Upon what principle of law can there be read into the Constitution this or any other geographical limitation on its authority?

The last clause of Article XI of the treaty of Paris reads: "The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress." This clause is cited to show that the Constitution is not in the ceded territory, for, it is argued, were the Constitution supreme, the rights and status of the islanders would not be left to the will of Congress. This argument is based on the premise that the President and Senate may determine whether or not the Constitution shall prevail in territory annexed by their treaty. It has been shown that Congress is incompetent to grant or withhold the Constitution, and if the power denied to the Federal Legislature be vested in the special legislative body designated for the making of treaties, it must be upon the theory that this body differs from Congress in being free from constitutional restraints.

The theory that treaty provisions are a law unto themselves has a certain attraction because engagements with foreign states are presumably sacred, but this ethical principle does not necessarily bind our courts, and if Congress passes an act inconsistent with a treaty pledge, they will enforce the act and not the treaty, holding simply that an old law has been repealed by a new one. (Head Money Cases, 112 U. S., 580; Fung Yue Ting vs. United States, 149 U. S., 698; United States vs. Old Settlers, 148 U. S., 427.) And in this relation it should be noted that the clause we are considering is not an engagement with Spain, but is merely a reservation of a matter of domestic interest.

Another argument for attributing arbitrary powers to the treaty-making body is that it must be competent to act quickly and decisively in the most serious emergencies. What agreements and concessions the President and Senate might be forced to make and the Republic be forced to accept by a conqueror, suggests a circumstance too humiliating and too remote to affect the interpretation of their powers in normal cases. And the treaty of Paris is on our part a normal act, requiring no sacrifice of constitutional principle to the law of necessity.

The theory of the independence of the treaty-making power finds no place in our jurisprudence. Though the Supreme Court has never been obliged to declare a treaty provision unconstitutional, and would do so with peculiar reluctance (see Ware vs. Hylton, 3 Dallas, 199, 237), it holds, as a matter of course, that treaties are subordinate to the Constitution. (See United States vs. The Peggy, 1 Cranch, 103, 110; New Orleans vs. United States, 10 Peters, 662, 736; Lattimer vs. Poteet, 14 Peters, 414; Doe vs. Braden, 16 Howard, 635, 657; Geofroy vs. Riggs, 133 United States, 267; Thomas vs. Gay, 169 United States, 264, 271.) "It need hardly be said," says the court, "that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. This results from the nature and fundamental principles of our Government." (The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wallace, 616, 620.) Even in Great Britain it is doubtful whether the courts would respect a treaty provision repugnant to "the law of the land." (See The Parlement Belge, 4 P. D., 128; 5 P. D. (C. A.), 197; Walker vs. Baird, [1892] A. C., 491; Dicey, Law of the Constitution, first ed., 391.)

assumed that the clause in question was drafted with due respect to the higher law, and that the President and Senate did not pretend to set bounds to a Constitution not at their disposition, but simply declared the powers of Congress in regard to status and rights of less than constitutional rank.

A most objectionable yet the only plausible argument against the rule of the Constitution in the Philippines is that the Constitution was ordained for the States of the Union alone. This proposition was advanced in the Senate debates on the acquisition of Louisiana in 1803, and on the question of slavery in California in 1849. On August 12, 1848, Mr. Webster said in the Senate that Congress in governing territory "is subject, of course, to the rules of justice and propriety, but it is under no constitutional restraints;" but in the debate of 1849 Mr. Calhoun forced him to abandon this position and concede, as we have seen, that Congress is bound by the constitutional guaranties in legislating for the Territories.

The theory that the Constitution is operative in the States only appears to have consciously affected the past government of outlying territory so slightly, if at all, that there is no warrant for the boast that in denying the Constitution to our new territory the Administration emulates its predecessors.

The present policy of definitely excluding new territory from the great customs district of the Republic is contrary to precedent. (Infra, pages 23-26.)

As to the estimation of the general guaranties of the Constitution we find that in the case of Louisiana the inhabitants complained that self-government was not accorded at once, and that American rulers did not understand the local laws they were expected to administer. But it does not appear that our Government ever denied the efficacy of the guaranties in Louisiana, and the Supreme Court practically recognized their existence in Bollman's case. (See infra, page 13.)

Whatever we did in Florida before we took possession under the completed treaty of cession was done in a foreign land, and so is immaterial to this inquiry. Upon the cession General Jackson was commissioned, by the authority of Congress, "with all the powers and authorities" theretofore enjoyed by the Spanish rulers. (21 Niles Weekly Reg., 135.) Jackson was not affected, however, with a Spanish officer's irresponsibility in regard to our Constitution (see the citation from Pollard vs. Hagan, infra, page 35), though he is said to have declared that his powers were those "that no one under a republic ought to possess" (21 Niles Weekly Reg., 136); and if during his brief term he was justly chargeable with arbitrary actions, they are not evidence of a general policy.

The obligatory force of the Constitution in California was maintained by President Polk's Administration, whose position was attacked by Webster and Benton because Calhoun assumed that it permitted the carrying of slaves into the new Territory. If Calhoun argued for the Constitution in California with an unworthy motive, he at least contemplated the enjoyment of its rights by white men, while these rights are now denied to all people in the islands in order to facilitate administration, and, above all, to check industrial rivalry.

I am not aware of any act of the Government which can be construed as denying the authority of the Constitution in Alaska.

A keen search for arbitrary acts in unorganized territory may not be wholly unsuccessful; but the search is a discreditable waste of time when its purpose is to parade such acts for our commendation.

In reply to the assertion that the theory of the restriction of the Constitution to the States has the sanction of judicial opinion, I am justified in stating that it is unsupported by a single dictum of the Supreme Court, hardly countenanced, indeed, by a questioning phrase, and has been repeatedly discredited in that seat of authority.

In its opinion in Callan vs. Wilson the Supreme Court maintained the law of the Constitution beyond the States in the only case where an act of Congress disregarding it was forced upon the court's attention. The suggestion that the principle of this decision is limited to the District of Columbia, to which the act applied, is refuted in the following paragraph of the opinion: "In Reynolds vs. United States (98 U. S., 145, 154) it was taken for granted that the sixth amendment of the Constitution secured to the people of the Territories the right of trial by jury in criminal prosecutions; and it had been previously held in Webster vs. Reid (11 Howard, 437, 460) that the seventh amendment secured to them a like right in civil actions at common law. (See also American Publishing Company vs. Fisher, 166 U. S., 464; Springville vs. Thomas, 166 U. S., 707; Thompson vs. Utah, 170 U. S., 343.) We can not think that the people of this District have, in that regard, less rights than those accorded to the people of the Territories of the United States. (Callan vs. Wilson, 127 U. S., 540, 550.)" The notion that, because the District once belonged to States which ceded it for a Federal capital, its people enjoy constitutional rights denied to the people of the Territories is quite as fanciful as the conceit of the early days of the civil war, that if Maryland should secede she would carry the Federal capital with her by operation of law! If the District is held by the United States subject to a possibility of reverter for condition broken it is too remote to affect the status of the inhabitants. There is no reason of law or policy why they should be preferred to the people of Oklahoma.

When General Wilkinson arrested Bollman and Swartwout in Orleans Territory (Louisiana) upon a charge of treason and sent them to Washington for trial, all without civil warrant, the Supreme Court discharged them (Bollman's Case, 4 Cranch, 75), and Judge Story termed the arrest "a very gross violation of the fourth amendment" (Commentaries, section 1902, note).

Among the justices who have recognized the Constitution as having a broader dominion than the States are Chief Justices Marshall (Loughborough vs. Blake, 5 Wheaton, 317, 324), Taney (Scott vs. Sandford, 19 Howard, 393, 450), Waite (Bank vs. County of Yankton, 101 U. S., 129, 133), and Fuller (Mormon Church vs. United States, 136 U. S., 1, 67), and Justices Curtis (Scott vs. Sandford, 19 Howard, 393, 614, 624), Miller (Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wallace, 36, 72), Bradley (Mormon Church vs. United States, 136 U. S., 1, 44), Harlan (McAllister vs. United States, 141 U. S., 174, 188), Matthews (Murphy vs. Ramsey, 114 U. S., 15, 44), and Gray (Capital Traction Company vs. Hof, 174 U. S., 1). This consensus of opinion represents every theory of constitutional interpretation that has been expounded in the Supreme Court. Several decisions cited in opposition are readily distinguished.

In Benner vs. Porter the court held that Territorial courts are not courts of the United States within the meaning of the judiciary clauses of the Constitution. (9 Howard, 242.) This decision simply affirms the absolute discretion of Congress in creating the machinery of Territorial government. The Mormon Church case (136 U. S., 1) involved an act of Congress applying to educational uses certain property of the dissolved Corporation of Latter-Day Saints in Utah Territory. Three justices declared the act to be invalid because spoliative, thus affirming their conviction of the authority of the Constitution in the Territory. The court conceded that the constitutional guaranties were effective in Utah, but held that the disposition of the property was justified by the law of charitable uses. In Ross's case (140 U. S., 453), the petitioner had been convicted of murder before our consular court in Japan. The conviction was affirmed, though the act of Congress authorizing the court under a treaty with Japan did not provide for presentment and trial by jury.

The judge of the court was an American, yet it was not, from the constitutional standpoint, essentially different from a tribunal of mixed nationality like the one in Egypt, and in either case there is no question of carrying our Constitution to a foreign land where, as the Supreme Court said, "it can have no operation." Such tribunals are created for the protection of foreigners in uncivilized countries. As they exist, in theory of law, by the permission of the local sovereign, albeit the permission is commonly extorted, their jurisdiction is entirely a matter of arrangement. As they dispense justice in a strange environment, their procedure is largely a matter of discretion. Our former privilege in Japan does not interpret our present duty in the Philippines, for we claim territorial sovereignty over the islands, not extra-territorial privilege; the whole authority of the United States, not a fragment of authority wrung from a foreign government.

The textual criticism by which territory beyond the States is read out of the Constitution upon the theory that the "United States" covered by the Constitution comprises the States of the Union only is as harsh and artificial as that of the most strict constructionists of the old school, whom the new school resembles in denying the national and commercial unity of all who owe allegiance to the Republic. And the new school is subject to a reproach not imputable to the old. It reverses the great rule of the common law by making every presumption against the individual and in favor of the State, by attributing to the Federal Government absolute dominion over all persons and property lying beyond what it is pleased to call the "United States" of the Constitution. Unquestionably the "United States," whose people framed the Constitution and retained for themselves and the States all powers not delegated to the Federal Government, are the States of the Union only. These States and their people wield the whole political power of the Republic. In the words of Chief Justice Marshall, "the members of the American Confederacy only are the States contemplated in the Constitution." (Hepburn vs. Ellzey, 2 Cranch, 445, 452.) Unquestionably the Constitution contains clauses relating exclusively to States either in terms or by necessary implication. Other clauses embody principles of universal value and unrestricted range, and these are operative throughout the larger "United States," described by Marshall as "our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Missouri is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania." (Loughborough vs. Blake, 5 Wheaton, 317, 319.)

SOME IMPORTANT QUESTIONS AFFECTED BY THE EXTENSION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Slavery.—The first section of the thirteenth amendment of the Constitution reads: "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." Slavery exists in the Philippines, especially, perhaps exclusively, among the Mohammedan tribes, and although we shall see that these tribes may be classified as "Indians" and left with a large discretion in the management of their domestic affairs, they are within the purview of this amendment, which, in fact, has been held to forbid a system of serfdom found among the Indians of Alaska. (Sah Quah's case, 31 Federal Reporter, 727.)

Concerning an agreement negotiated with the Sultan of Sulu, the President says in his message:

"Article X provides that any slave in the archipelago of Jolo shall have the right to purchase freedom by paying to the master the usual market value. The agreement by General Bates was made subject to confirmation by the President and to future modifications by the consent of the parties in interest. I have confirmed said agreement, subject to the action of the Congress, and with the reservation, which I have directed shall be communicated to the Sultan of Jolo, that this agreement is not to be deemed in any way to authorize or give the consent of the United States to the existence of slavery in the Sulu Archipelago. I communicate these facts to the Congress for its information and action." (Page 43.) As the article in question purports to accord a qualified recognition of slavery, it is outlawed by the Constitution. We may not handle slavery with gloves. The gradual emancipation tolerated by England in Zanzibar is not permitted to us. There is not even a lawful process of emancipation. The amendment declares sharply that slavery shall not "exist," and the Supreme Court has pronounced it to be "undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation, so far as its terms are applicable to any existing state of circumstances. By its own unaided force and effect it abolished slavery and established universal freedom." (Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S., 3, 20.)

The full effect of the prohibition of "involuntary servitude" has not been determined by the Supreme Court, which has decided, however, that it does not abrogate the ancient rule of the sea whereby a sailor shipping for a voyage may be compelled to perform his contract under pain of imprisonment, nor is intended to introduce "any novel doctrine with respect to certain descriptions of service which have always been treated as exceptional, such as military and naval enlistments, or to disturb the right of parents and guardians to the custody of their minor children or wards; * * * services which from time immemorial have been treated as exceptional shall not be regarded as within its purview." (Robertson vs. Baldwin, 165 U. S., 275, 282.) Nor is it necessary to insist that a person can in no case be compelled to complete a particular undertaking; an engineer who should be prevented from willfully abandoning a pump forcing air into a mine would not be held in "involuntary servitude." But after making all exceptions warranted by inveterate usage or emergency, the thirteenth amendment appears to declare that an employer can not, of his own motion or by the assistance of the State, force an unwilling workman to perform his contract.

As Judge Cooley says, "Contracts for personal services can not, as a general rule, be enforced, and application to be discharged from service under them on habeas corpus is evidence that the service is involuntary." (Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed., 363, note.) And the Supreme Court has said, "If Mexican peonage or the Chinese coolie labor system shall develop slavery of the Mexican or Chinese race within our territory, this amendment may be safely trusted to make it void." (Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wallace, 36, 72; cited in U. S. vs. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649, 677. For a description of peonage see Jaremillo vs. Romero, 1 New Mexico, 190.) What effect the enforcement of the thirteenth amendment against the coolie system would have upon agriculture in some of our new possessions can not be known until the labor conditions are thoroughly understood. It is noteworthy, however, that Great Britain finds it expedient to maintain the coolie system in several of her colonies, shorn of many abuses, it is true, yet retaining the essential feature of compulsory service during an agreed period. And in the report on British New Guinea for 1897-98 we read (pages 10, 11) that Ordinance No. II, of 1897, "rendered it compulsory on a native to perform the work for which he may be duly engaged;" and Ordinance No. VIII, of 1897, "provides that a deserting laborer may be returned to his employer."

However, in view of the state of labor in Hawaii, we are not free at present to criticise British policy. In June, 1869, the supreme court of Hawaii confirmed the order of a district magistrate who, under the masters and servants act, had sentenced a man to imprisonment at hard labor "until he should consent to return to his master and consent to serve according to law." (Honomu Sugar Company vs. Zeluch, 60 Albany Law Journal, 213.) The prisoner was an Austrian who had been "imported" by the company under contract to work for three years. The court did not attempt to distinguish the imprisonment from the "involuntary servitude" forbidden by the thirteenth amendment, but dismissed the amendment with a curt reference to earlier opinions, in which it had pronounced the Constitution of the United States to be of no force during "the transition period."

If it shall be finally determined that in the United States Territory of Hawaii a plantation hand may be imprisoned until he is ready to perform his contract to labor, perhaps a like system will be some day established in the cotton States that have already practically disfranchised the negro.

Citizenship and civil rights.—All persons born in the Philippines after annexation and subject to our jurisdiction are citizens of the United States, though, as we shall see, they are not members of the voting body of the Republic.

This proposition is denied not only on the ground already noted that the Constitution is wholly ineffective beyond the States, but upon a peculiar interpretation of the first sentence of the fourteenth amendment, which reads: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." The last clause, "and of the State wherein they reside," is said to restrict the words "United States" to the several States. We are told that had the framers of the amendment contemplated a broader field than the States, they would have written, "and of the State and Territory where they reside." This, certainly, they would not have done. Citizenship involves allegiance. Allegiance is due only to a sovereign. The Territorial governments have no attribute of sovereignty, because they are created by Congress and exist during its pleasure. The clause is to be understood as a distinct command rather than as part of a general description. Its sole purpose is to compel each State to recognize as its citizens all persons residing therein whom the United States recognize as their citizens.

The narrow construction of the amendment that would restrict United States citizenship to persons born or naturalized within a State is disapproved by the Supreme Court, which has said that a man "must reside within the State to make him a citizen of it, but it is only necessary that he should be born or naturalized in the United States to be a citizen of the Union." (Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wallace, 36, 72.) And Justice Bradley said in the same case: "The question is now settled by the fourteenth amendment itself, that citizenship of the United States is the primary citizenship in this country, and that State citizenship is secondary and derivative, depending upon citizenship of the United States and the citizen's place of residence." (Page 112.) In a late opinion the court says: "The words 'in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof' in the first sentence of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, must be presumed to have been understood and intended by the Congress which proposed the amendment and by the legislatures which adopted it in the same sense in which the like words had been used by Chief Justice Marshall in the well-known case of The Exchange, and as the equivalent of the words 'within the limits and under the jurisdiction of the United States,' and the converse of the words 'out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States,' as habitually used in the naturalization acts." (United States vs. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649, 687.) A scrutiny of the naturalization acts, beginning with the act of 1795, will show that "the United States," wherein an applicant for citizenship must have resided for a prescribed period, and in which he may be naturalized, includes the Territories

The terms "citizen," "citizen of the United States," and "citizens of the United States" are employed elsewhere in the Constitution to describe a larger body than the people of the States. The Constitution prescribes that a Congressman must have been seven years a "citizen of the United States," and a Senator nine years. If the State of Utah unlawfully represented in the Senate on the theory that her Senators have only been citizens of the United States since Utah was admitted to statehood in 1896? Only a natural born citizen who has reached the age of 35 years and resided fourteen years "within the United States" is eligible to the Presidency. Will it be contended that a man born in Colorado Territory in 1864 was not born in the United States? Or that a man born in Ohio the same year and taken in infancy to what is, since 1889, the State of Washington has not resided fourteen years in the United States?

The fifteenth amendment reads: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This amendment plainly contemplates a power in Congress to confer the suffrage. Now Congress can neither confer, deny, nor abridge the suffrage in any State, for each State has the exclusive power to designate its voting body subject only to the limitation of this amendment. (See United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542, 555.) The field of Federal action in the matter of suffrage is then beyond the States, and the amendment declares in effect that if Congress shall create a voting body in a Territory it can not deny the suffrage to any citizen of the United States therein, that is to say, to any person owing allegiance to the United States, because of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

We need not rely upon an inspection of constitutional texts alone to sustain our broad definition of a natural born citizen of the United States. The Supreme Court declares that recourse must be had to the common law to determine who are native-born citizens (United States vs. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649), and the common law, ignorant of our State boundaries, makes all persons born within the dominion and jurisdiction of the sovereign natural born subjects, or, in our republican phrase, "citizens." The court says in the case cited: "Passing by questions once earnestly controverted but finally put at rest by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, it is beyond doubt that before the enactment of the civil-rights act of 1866 or the adoption of the constitutional amendment all white persons, at least, born within the sovereignty of the United States, whether children of citizens or of foreigners, excepting only children of ambassadors or public ministers of a foreign government, were native-born citizens of the United States." (United States vs. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649, 674.) This statement presents the opening words of the fourteenth amendment in their true light. They do not create citizenship of the United States, but affirm the preexisting common-law rule of citizenship by birth, and assure to "all persons" the benefit of this rule, which as applied by the Federal courts of this country in the past appears to have ignored the dark races.

Persons who, though born in the United States, are not citizens, because not subject to the jurisdiction, are the children of foreign ministers, of Indians, and of alien enemies in occupation of our soil. (See United States vs. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S., 649, 693.)

Tribal Indians within the domain of the original States were set apart by the Constitution as a peculiar people, and with each extension of territory other tribes have been surrounded. Congress can not make a man an "Indian" by calling him one, because, though the status of the Indian is in some respects indeterminate, and in all respects anomalous, it is settled at least that he is a person born in the allegiance of a tribe of barbarous or savage origin, having its seat in United States territory, yet being, in the language of the Supreme Court, "a distinct political community." (Elk vs. Wilkins, 112 U. S., 94, 99.) There are natives in the Philippines who appear to have maintained their political organization during the overlordship of Spain, as had the Seminoles in Florida, and who, like the Seminoles, will be segregated as Indians.

"Alien enemies" is not a legal description of the Filipinos in arms. Without suggesting a general likeness between them and the Confederates of 1861, in one respect their positions are not altogether dissimilar. Said the Supreme Court of the insurgent State of Texas and its people: "The State did not cease to be a State nor her citizens to be citizens of the Union. If this were otherwise, the State must have become foreign and her citizens foreigners. The war must have ceased to be a war for the suppression of rebellion and must have become a war of conquest and subjugation." (Texas vs. White, 7 Wallace, 700, 726.) In point of fact, the war in Luzon is waged for conquest and subjugation, yet it is not a foreign war. Like the civil war, it is an insurrection against the United States, and the status of the insurgents is determined, like that of the Confederates, by our assertion of sovereignty, and not by their assertion of independence.

The Chinese and other foreigners in the Philippines are within the protection of the rule that while an alien "lawfully remains here he is entitled to the benefit of the guaranties of life, liberty, and property secured by the Constitution to all persons, of whatever race, within the jurisdiction of the United States. His personal rights when he is in this country and such of his property as is here during his absence are as fully protected by the supreme law of the land as if he were a native or naturalized citizen of the United States." (Lem Moon Sing vs. United States, 158 U. S., 538, 547.)

What is the status of the natives living in the islands at the time of annexation, and who are not within the constitutional definition of Indians? Like the Mexicans of New Mexico, these have come under the sovereignty of the United States as former subjects or citizens of a State which has ceded the land of their residence. They have a right to reside in their native land, and they must possess in permanence at least the primary rights affirmed by the Supreme Court to aliens during their sojourn.

Having ascribed to the Filipinos the rights confirmed by the Constitution to all human beings within the jurisdiction of the United States, we come to the question of their political status. Treaties of annexation frequently provide that the subjects or citizens of the ceding state may elect to retain their old allegiance, either unconditionally or upon condition that they emigrate within a certain time. This election is sometimes called and usually treated as a right (see Cogordan, La Nationalité, 321), and it is, I think, the nearest approach to a recognition in international law of the ethical principle that government should exist with the consent of the governed in its relation to the cession of territory. This principle is not recognized to the extent of entitling the inhabitants of the territory to determine its destiny by their vote. Though the plebiscite is not unknown in such cases, it is uncommon and is not always a free expression of the people's will. (See Phillimore, International Law, I, 585, 604.)

Nor is the so-called right of election anything more than a privilege, either, granted by a conqueror, who thereby waives his right to forbid the emigration of persons whom he may hold as new subjects or citizens (see United States vs. Repentigny, 5 Wallace, 211, 260), or arranged by parties negotiating on an equal basis, and in each case often depending for its real value upon the ability of the people to find homes elsewhere. This privilege we properly accorded to the Spanish-born residents in the Philippines, for these have a fatherland to receive them should they choose to return and a government to protect them should they choose to remain. It was properly withheld from the Filipinos, as its allowance would have greatly embarrassed the United States without holding out any substantial advantage to the islanders.

The Filipinos, then, remain in the islands absolutely divested of their allegiance to Spain, and by the rules of public law they owe allegiance to the United States. Said Chief Justice Marshall of the inhabitants of Florida after its cession to the United States: "The same act which transfers their country transfers the allegiance of those who remain in it." (American Insurance Company vs. Canter, 1 Peters, 511, 542.) And the Supreme Court said in a later case: "Manifestly the nationality of the inhabitants of territory acquired by conquest or cession becomes that of the government under whose dominion they pass, subject to the right of election on their part to retain their former nationality by removal or otherwise as may be provided." (Boyd vs. Thayer, 143 U. S., 135, 162.) The Supreme Court has recognized a power to create citizens en masse by process of collective naturalization "as by the force of a treaty by which foreign territory is acquired." (Elk vs. Willkins, 112 U. S., 94, 102.)

Now, the treaties of annexation considered by the court purport to confer citizenship expressly, and so Chief Justice Marshall significantly said of the citizenship of the people of Florida who remained there after cession: "It is unnecessary to inquire whether this is not their condition, independent of stipulation." (American Ins. Co. vs. Canter, 1 Peters, 511, 542.) The treaty of Paris contains no such stipulation, but because it operates to transfer the allegiance of the Filipinos from Spain to the United States it appears to naturalize them collectively by implication. We have no word other than "citizens" to describe persons whose relation to the United States involves the reciprocal obligations of loyalty and protection. (See Chisholm vs. Georgia, 2 Dallas, 419, 456.)

The tariff.—The authority of the Constitution in the Philippines has an important bearing upon the question of the taxation of commerce. (See infra, pages 39-40.)

First, of commerce between the islands and foreign countries. After our occupation of California had been confirmed by the ratification of the treaty of cession, the Administration abandoned the military tariff imposed during the belligerent occupation, and proceeded to collect upon foreign imports the duties of the general tariff act. (Cross vs. Harrison, 16 Howard, 164.) A different practice prevails in our new territory, where the Administration imposes duties at discretion. Now, even if Congress were authorized to levy peculiar taxes upon foreign goods brought into annexed territory, the President would have no right to do so. His ability to collect duties at all rests upon a presumed intention of Congress evidenced by a tariff act, though it is not clearly decided that even such collections are valid unless they are ratified by Congress. (See infra, page 40.) To admit his right to levy taxes at discretion because of a latent power in Congress to do this would imply the existence of an Executive power to originate revenue legislation in territory belonging to the United States, in derogation of the fundamental principle that taxes shall not be imposed by Executive proclamation, and of the particular provision of the Constitution that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

We come now to the question whether Congress itself may impose special duties upon foreign goods brought into the Philippines. As a matter of fact Congress has never exacted peculiar duties in new districts, but has always extended the existing tariff laws either about the time of annexation or shortly thereafter. As a matter of law, the Administration insists that the constitutional provision that "all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," does not apply to the new islands. The Secretary of War says in his report for 1899 (page 27): "The provision of the Constitution prescribing uniformity of duties throughout the United States was not meant for them (the Puerto Ricans), but was a provision of expediency solely adapted to the conditions existing in the United States upon the continent of North America." I should call a law assuring equal taxation and freedom of trade throughout the Republic a provision of justice, not of expediency, and I fail to understand upon what principle a court must hold this provision to be operative in Maine, Louisiana, Alaska, and Ohio, and in Mexico and Labrador, should we one day annex them, yet inoperative in Puerto Rico. From this makeshift interpretation of the Constitution we turn with confidence to Chief Justice Marshall's impregnable definition of the "United States" contemplated by this very clause—"our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia, or the territory west of the Missouri, is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania; and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts, duties and excises should be observed in the one, than in the other." (Loughborough vs. Blake, 5 Wheaton, 317, 319.) Here is the law of the commercial unity of the Republic expounded by its foremost interpreter, and the Philippines being within the Republic are within the law.

We have next to consider the question of duties upon commerce between the islands and our mainland. A statement of the court in Fleming vs. Page (9 Howard, 603, 617) is often cited in this relation: " * * * Under our revenue laws every port is regarded as a foreign one, unless the custom-house from which the vessel clears is within a collection district established by act of Congress, and the officers granting the clearance exercise their functions under the authority and control of the laws of the United States." This statement misleads in so far as it lends color to the assertion that precedent sanctions the taxation of this commerce. It is conceded that a port is foreign in a fiscal sense, though the United States claim title to it, if they have not gained possession, as in the case of Baton Rouge, in the Louisiana territory, ceded by Spain to France and by France to us, but actually held by Spain for some time after we had taken possession of New Orleans; or have lost possession, as in the case of Castine, in Maine, seized by the British forces in 1814 (United States vs. Rice, 4 Wheaton, 246); and a port is foreign, too, though the United States have possession, if they await the ratification of a treaty to perfect their title, as in the case of San Juan, in Puerto Rico, or if they hold it by mere force of arms, as in the case of Tampico, in the Mexican war, which was the matter before the court in Fleming vs. Page.

But a scrutiny of administrative practice down to the end of the Mexican war shows that with perhaps trifling and peculiar exceptions, as in the case of New Orleans (see Cross vs. Harrison, 16 Howard, 164, 199), duties were not collected upon goods carried between old and new possessions after our right to the latter had been confirmed by the ratification of a treaty of cession. The notable illustration of the rule of free intercourse, however, is the case of California after the Mexican war. Upon the ratification of the treaty ceding California to the United States the Administration promptly recognized the trade between the new territory and the rest of the country as domestic, as appears by the following passage from a letter of the Secretary of State quoted by the Supreme Court in Cross vs. Harrison (16 Howard, 164, 185): "This government de facto (the temporary government of California) will, of course, exercise no power inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the land. For this reason no import duties can be levied in California on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, as no such duties can be imposed in any other part of our Union on the productions of California. Nor can new duties be charged in California upon such foreign productions as have already paid duties in any of our ports of entry, for the obvious reason that California is within the territory of the United States." And the court also refers to a dispatch from the Secretary of the Treasury "providing for the reciprocal admission of goods which were the growth, etc., of California and the United States, free of duty, into the ports of each."

The California precedent was followed upon the annexation of Alaska, the Secretary of the Treasury deciding that furs and oils brought in from the new Territory were not subject to duty. (Synopsis Treasury Decisions, 1868, pages 10 and 20.) The present Administration disregards these precedents. It treats the commerce between our islands and our mainland as foreign, and collects duties in each upon the imported products of the other, exacting in the former place a tax determined by itself, and in the latter the duties of the tariff act. It is ungenerous and unlawful to treat our new citizens as foreigners in their commercial relations and hamper an intercourse whose promotion should be our first concern. So disastrous has this practice proved to Puerto Rico that the President has said to Congress, "Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets." (Message 1899, page 50.) But as the distress is caused by his refusal to follow the constitutional practice of his predecessors, he may relieve it at once. The President is not authorized to hamper internal commerce by laws of his own making, and this he has done in levying duties on merchandise carried from our mainland to our islands. Nor is he authorized to enforce a tariff act against merchandise brought in from islands which, since its enactment, have become United States territory.

The tariff act of 1897 is entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," and by the enacting clause its operation is limited to "articles imported from foreign countries." As the islands have been made domestic territory by the treaty of Paris, they are not within the purview of an act intended to impose burdens upon foreign products exclusively. And this construction of the act is required by the Constitution, for the rule of uniformity which, as we have seen, forbids Congress to impose different duties upon foreign imports in different sections of the United States, forbids it to impose any duties whatever on commerce between them.

Our inquiry into the subject of the tariff leads to these conclusions: Under no circumstances can duties be lawfully collected in the annexed islands or the mainland upon the imported products of either. Duties collected upon foreign goods brought to the islands must be the same as imposed in the rest of the United States.

ALLEGED IMPOSSIBILITY OF CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT.

The considered arguments against the Constitution for the Philippines affect the sanction of law, but they are really arguments of inconvenience, for they rest upon the assumed impossibility or, at least, the impropriety of constitutional government rather than upon approved legal principles. The assumption can not be disproved by reciting opinions of the Supreme Court, for it suggests a question of fact determinable only by experience, but it will be shown that our constitutional powers are not presumptively insufficient and our constitutional obligations not presumptively unendurable.

The Constitution permits the pacification of the Philippines by any method which public opinion should tolerate. Surely a Government that suppressed the revolt of 11 States is competent to deal with an insurrection in Federal territory. And when reconstruction shall follow pacification, a Government that "reconstructed" the South can not decently complain of lack of power in the Philippines. It will be shown that the Constitution permits the President to govern the islands after a fashion until Congress shall exert its powers, and does not hamper Congress in providing a government for them. And the local affairs of the Philippines may be administered with as single a regard to their peculiar interests as are the affairs of a State, for the Constitution does not prescribe that all Territories shall be administered from a common standpoint, but permits the peculiar needs of each to be considered.

There is bitter opposition to applying to the Philippines the constitutional rule of uniform tariff taxes. It is asserted that Congress can not impose uniform duties on foreign imports that will be equally fair to the islands and to the mainland; but this suggests merely a phase of the persistent tariff controversy. Doubtless the new phase presents new difficulties, yet recalling that one tariff act drove South Carolina to the edge of rebellion and that another led Louisiana to the Treasury for sugar bounties, we need not apprehend more extreme results from extending our revenue system to the Philippines. Moreover, the Philippines will have no voice in making a United States tariff, and this exclusion of an interested section from the work of bargain and compromise that usually accompanies tariff legislation will make the task somewhat easier. Exclusion is not so great a hardship as it seems, for in any event an insular tariff would be dictated in Washington and not in Manila, and the islanders will be quite as well off with an assurance of equal taxation as with a possibility of lighter taxation. Federal taxation without representation may be inevitable under the Territorial system, but it is shorn of its worst possibilities where the taxpayer can not be singled out for special burdens.

The rule of uniformity that forbids Congress to impose different duties on foreign goods imported into the Philippines and into the mainland of course forbids it to impose any duties whatever on commerce between them, and here we find the chief motive for resisting its application to our new territory. Free trade between the Philippines and Puerto Rico and the mainland may affect important agricultural interests here. Should Cuba be annexed, notwithstanding our promise, serious disturbance would be inevitable. If manufactures can be established in the islands, the wave of disturbance will cover a wider area. But these results, however unwelcome, can not influence the interpretation of the Constitution. They must be accepted as practical consequences of annexation.

There is no evident absurdity in attributing the civil rights of the Constitution to the Filipinos when the nature and limitations of these rights are understood. Surely the Republic must regard life, liberty, and property everywhere as rights, not as privileges. Even these primary rights are not absolute. Each one may be forfeited for crime. Each is held subject to the legitimate claims of the State.

Of course the right to liberty confers the freedom of the Republic, and no law can check the orderly migration of Filipinos to any part of the country. "We are all citizens of the United States," says the Supreme Court, "and as members of the same community must have the right to pass and repass through every part of it without interruption, as freely as in our own State." (1 Crandall vs. Nevada, 6 Wallace, 35, 49.) A man's right to work in any part of the Republic and his right to send the lawful product of his labor to any part rest upon precisely the same foundation of personal liberty. As for liberty of speech and of the press, expressly guaranteed by the Constitution, why should not a Filipino speak and write his mind when he may be punished for abusing his rights, and hung if, like the Chicago anarchists, his utterances are linked to the crimes they are intended to provoke?

The Filipinos are entitled to bear arms, but the Constitution affirms this right for "the security of a free state," not for the benefit of insurgents; they may assemble and petition for redress of grievances, but the Constitution requires them to do so "peaceably."

Citizens of the United States not residing in States have no voice in Federal affairs, nor have they a constitutional right to regulate their own. The whole political power of the Republic, whether directed to Federal, State or Territorial affairs, is vested exclusively in the voting citizens of the several States, and each State may prescribe such qualifications for suffrage as it pleases, so long as it bars no one because of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The entire sovereignty over territory beyond the States is vested in the Federal Legislature. This proposition was questioned in the Dred Scott case (19 Howard, 393, 501) and Senator Douglas and other statesmen declared that the people of the Territories possessed sufficient "popular sovereignty" to decide for themselves whether slavery should be allowed within their borders.

The doctrine of "popular sovereignty" in the Territories was a political device for taking the question of slavery out of Federal politics. It was wholly incompatible with the fundamental conception of the union of States, and is now thoroughly discredited. (See National Bank vs. County of Yankton, 101 U. S., 129, 133; Murphy vs. Ramsey, 114 U. S., 15, 44; Mormon Church vs. United States, 136 U. S., 1, 44.) The definition of Filipinos as "citizens" carries no right to participate in governing the Republic, nor any State, nor even the Philippines. They can become members of the voting body of the United States only by coming into a State and satisfying the requirements of the local law of suffrage. They can exercise in the islands only such political franchises as Congress may grant. In the language of the Supreme Court: "The personal and civil rights of the inhabitants of the Territories are secured to them, as to other citizens, by the principles of constitutional liberty, which restrain all the agencies of government, State and National; their political rights are franchises which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of the Congress of the United States." (Murphy vs. Ramsey, 114 U. S., 15, 44.)

VALUE OF THE CONSTITUTION IN NEW TERRITORY.

In affirming the authority of the Constitution in the Philippines, I am far from anticipating the transformation of an Asiatic dependency of Spain into a well-ordered section of the United States by any magical power of written law. Constitutional rule will not prevail throughout the islands until the authority of the United States shall be as supreme in fact as it is in theory.

The gap between fact and theory, so marked in the Philippines, is not a novel circumstance in our history. A Southern Confederacy once denied the Constitution, and temporarily suspended its active authority throughout a wide area; yet the Supreme Court said of the insurrectionary State of Tennessee: "She never escaped her obligations to the Constitution, though for a while she may have evaded their enforcement." (Keith vs. Clark, 97 U. S., 454, 461.) Again, the influence of the Constitution spread slowly throughout the vast domains we have annexed from time to time; isolated communities made their own laws, sparsely peopled regions had none.

These conditions, after all, illustrate merely the general proposition that constitutional guaranties are not thoroughly efficient unless persons injured by their violation have recourse to competent tribunals for redress. How far such courts as may now sit in the islands are thus competent I do not discuss, for it may be admitted that until Congress shall institute Federal tribunals constitutional rights will receive imperfect protection. But this admission must be made in regard to the whole Republic. The only court named in the Constitution is the Supreme Court, whose original jurisdiction is strictly confined to "all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party." (See Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.) Whether Congress may destroy the Supreme Court should forever be an academic question, but certainly this tribunal of limited original jurisdiction is the only one specifically contemplated by the Constitution. What inferior courts there shall be, what their jurisdiction, when and how their judgments involving the questions mentioned in the Constitution as reviewable by the Supreme Court shall be carried up, are determinable by Congress, which can not be coerced into creating a court or directed in defining its jurisdiction, or prevented from abolishing it. Broadly speaking, the American people depend upon the facilities afforded by the judiciary acts for the orderly enforcement of their constitutional rights. And the judiciary acts are but one of many examples of legislative aid to the Constitution, for although its presence in a particular territory does not depend on the pleasure of Congress, as I have shown, many of its provisions are partially or wholly ineffective anywhere until Congress shall have effectuated them by legislation.

Before leaving the subject of the jurisdiction of courts it will be profitable to note a marked difference between the American and English systems. The judicial committee of the privy council affirmed an ancient rule when they said in Bishop Colenso's case: "It is the settled prerogative of the British Crown to receive appeals in all colonial causes." (The Lord Bishop of Natal, 3 Moore P. C., N. S. 115.) The royal prerogative, however, has long been required to be exercised in accordance with the judgment of the judicial committee, a court selected from the council according to rules established by Parliament.

This court of appeal has a broad and varied jurisdiction. For example, it will entertain an appeal from the act of a colonial governor in imprisoning an African chief (Sprigg vs. Sigcau [1897], A. C., 238); from the order of a colonial court denying certain powers and privileges to a colonial legislature (Speaker, etc., vs. Glass L. R. 3. P. C. 560); from the judgment of a police magistrate in a petty colony (Falkland Islands Company vs. The Queen, 1 Moore P. C., N. S. 299); and it will receive appeals in criminal cases generally whenever it appears that "by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done" (Dillet's case, 12 Appeal Cases, 459).

Under the British system, then, the subjects of the Queen in all parts of her dominion may appeal for redress of injuries to a permanent tribunal whose territorial jurisdiction expands with the expansion of the Empire. There is no such tribunal in the United States. Citizens in an annexed district have no recourse to the Federal courts until Congress shall so provide. In these circumstances it behooves Congress to extend promptly the Federal judicial system to the annexed Territories.

After the authority of the United States shall have been established in the Philippines, Federal courts opened, and necessary laws enacted, after the Government shall have done its part toward confirming the rule of the Constitution, the islanders must learn to live up to it before it can mean to them what it means to us. We do not hand down the Constitution to the Filipinos in the anticipation of an early acceptance of its principles. Indeed, the unanimous protest that the islands shall never be admitted to statehood affirms our conviction that the islanders can never be trusted with a share of the political power of the Republic. We do not believe, we do not wish to believe, the enthusiastic prophecy with which the Philippine Commissioners close their preliminary report: "When peace and prosperity shall have been established throughout the archipelago, when education shall have become general, then, in the language of a leading Filipino, his people will, under our guidance, 'become more American than the Americans themselves.'"

A hostile environment does not annul the Constitution, although it may impair its efficiency. In the Philippine Archipelago, as in all United States territory, the Constitution confers rights upon the ignorant and the unwilling as well as upon those who value them; enjoins our public servants to respect it in all their dealings; justifies resistance to acts forbidden by it; and, in theory of law, renders void every command and illegal every act disregarding its prohibitions.

EFFECT OF DENYING THE CONSTITUTION TO THE PHILIPPINES.

I do not belittle the inconvenience of governing the Philippines under the Constitution, but, having acquired the islands, we had better accept constitutional responsibilities in their regard than face the consequences of rejecting them. Rejection would mean to the Filipinos the rule of a new master of higher purpose, of greater ability, of kindlier disposition than the old one, yet equally free from the restraints of law. Defining the so-called rights of the islands under such a régime, the Secretary of War proffers "moral right," and "the nature of our government," and "implied contract" as efficient substitutes for legal guaranties (see Report for 1899, pages 26, 27), in disregard of the fact that the Constitution demonstrates our conviction of their inefficiency, our determination that neither prejudice of race, or class, or religion, nor the power of one or of many shall overcome the rights of man so far as the written law, enforced by the courts, can maintain them. And who shall say that the constitutional restraints so necessary in the self-governing sections of the Republic are superfluous in the Philippines? Who shall say that abuse of power decreases with the increase of opportunity in the face of the unprincipled bill now pending in Congress, discriminating against our fellow-citizens in Puerto Rico?

Were the Filipinos alone concerned, we might perhaps be seduced to try our hand at absolutism, but the evil course would have far-reaching consequences.

Should the Constitution be denied to the Philippines on the ground that it is only effective in the States, the people of the Territories and the District of Columbia would be deprived of its protection, and they would suffer this wrong not because of their deserts, but by the operation of a rule fabricated for the handling of a host of Malays over whom we have hastily asserted dominion. If to live beyond the States is to live beyond the Constitution, New Mexico, Arizona, Oklahoma, Alaska, and Hawaii and Puerto Rico as well, will instantly present a moral claim to statehood that we may find it difficult to disregard.

Should the Constitution be denied to the Philippines upon any pretext, a drawback from indiscriminate expansion will be removed. While acquisition of territory means the enlargement of the United States and the reception of new citizens, while Congress must govern all country within its jurisdiction as a commercial and social unit, the American people will not covet outlying land if its acquisition means fellowship with uncongenial multitudes.

THE CONSTITUTION AND A COLONIAL POLICY.

We are told that the United States are a nation and are therefore competent to deal with the Filipinos as any other nation, especially Great Britain, might deal with them under the circumstances. This is true in the sense that there is an ultimate authority in the Republic substantially similar to the authority of the British nation. It is not true in the intended sense that this authority is lodged in the Federal Government. The British Parliament is the British nation for every purpose. The Federal Government is the American nation only for the purpose of exercising the powers delegated in the Constitution by the people of the several States, who have reserved to themselves or to the States all powers not delegated and the right to amend the Constitution.

The immeasurable difference between the limited powers of Congress and the omnipotence of Parliament is recognized by our courts (see Van Horne's Lessee vs. Dorrance, 2 Dallas, 304, 307; Justice Harlan's opinion in Robertson vs. Baldwin, 165 U. S., 275, 296), and it can not be too strongly emphasized at this moment, when a sudden admiration for English colonial policy has begotten the desire to imitate it.

The will of Parliament is the fundamental law of the British Empire whose parts are united by their common subjection to it, and Parliament governs the scattered lands and the polyglot people with equal and unfettered power. England and the Gold Coast, the citizen of London and the native of India, are on an equal footing before an authority that knows no legal restraint. The Constitution is the fundamental law of the United States. So long as its broad guaranties run throughout their territory all the people are equal before the law in respect of their civil rights. But if these guaranties are not general all are not equal before the law. There is the law of the Constitution for some, the pleasure of Congress for others. The difference between British and American legislative systems shows how repugnant the British colonial policy would be to the spirit of our institutions even were it agreeable to their letter. An opportunist colonial policy, so harmonious with the British scheme of government, would be a strange graft on American institutions, which are distinguished, and, as I think, admirably distinguished, from all others by their imposition of real restraints upon governmental power.

By the law of the Constitution all land within the sovereignty of the United States is one country; all people within their jurisdiction are one people, who enjoy life, liberty, and property of constitutional right without regard to which side of a boundary line between State and Territory or of lines of latitude or longitude they happen to live; these lines can not be made a hindrance to the course of legitimate commerce. A few months ago this statement was generally accepted as good law and policy, and it might not be so seriously questioned to-day had the treaty of Paris limited our acquisitions to American territory. It is the circumstance of conquest in Asia, with its suppressed but inevitable suggestion of further aggrandizement in the East, for while we talk of the Philippines we are thinking of China, that provokes the assertion that at last we have gone beyond the proper sphere of the Constitution.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the assertion is true, or at all events expresses the deliberate wish of the American people, how shall we deal with the question it presents? Certainly not by accepting an injurious rule as a perpetual obligation or by refusing to admit that the Constitution must come at last to reflect a matured public opinion. If the supremacy of the Constitution in the Philippines will cause serious embarrassment, the approbation of law will not make it endurable. Or, if the American people are unwilling to treat the islands as United States territory in any circumstances, no rule of law will long compel them. I am convinced that either event should move us to relinquish sovereignty over the country we can not or will not govern according to our Constitution. Any abandonment of constitutional for arbitrary rule must weaken the moral supremacy of the Republic, and the taking over of millions of Asiatics who are deemed unfit for fellowship must increase its burdens without bringing new strength to bear them.

But should these considerations be overborne by a determination to hold the Philippines as a subject province at all cost, let the Constitution as it stands remain unspoiled by interpretations restricting it to the States or conditioning its efficacy in Federal territory upon the pleasure of Congress or the treaty-making body. Let us frankly admit that in ruling without the restraint of organic law the Government would assume an office requiring the approval of imperial standards for its acceptance, the delegation of imperial powers for its administration, and then approve these standards and delegate these powers in a special amendment of the Constitution. I have seen no considered suggestion that the Constitution be amended, yet it must come to this if the United States are to embark upon a colonial policy with lawful, adequate, and unquestioned powers. A short amendment would serve to distinguish the Republic, governed under the old organic law, from outlying provinces, ruled as policy shall dictate.

THE GOVERNING OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The incorporation of the Philippines into the United States, and their subordination to the Constitution, are legal results of our acquisition of territorial sovereignty through the operation of the treaty of Paris. Whether sovereignty should have been acquired is strenuously disputed. That it has been acquired is the controlling factor in the situation, and while it is maintained we must address ourselves to practical questions of government and policy involved in the administration of United States territory, some of which have been already considered.

EFFECT OF ANNEXATION UPON THE OLD ORDER.

One of the first questions suggested by the coming of a new sovereign to a country has regard to the fate of that old order which is evidenced by the local law. Chief Justice Marshall says, "The law which may be denominated political is necessarily changed." (American Insurance Company vs. Canter, 1 Peters, 511, 542.) This statement is true in the broad sense that the peculiar attributes and powers of the old sovereign are not transmitted to the new one, nor do the laws through which such powers have been exercised become its laws. As the Supreme Court said in a later case (Pollard vs. Hagan, 3 Howard, 212, 225; see also New Orleans vs. United States, 10 Peters, 662, 730), "It can not be admitted that the King of Spain could, by treaty or otherwise, impart to the United States any of his royal prerogatives; and much less can it be admitted that they have capacity to receive or power to exercise them. Every nation acquiring territory, by treaty or otherwise, must hold it subject to the constitution and laws of its own government, and not according to those of the government ceding it." And other parts of the law termed "political" may, for one reason or another, lapse upon a transfer of sovereignty.

Although the new sovereign has a right to change all the political institutions of the annexed district, Chief Justice Marshall did not mean that the act of annexation necessarily effects this sweeping result, and governmental agencies consistent with the new order may be utilized without confirmatory legislation. The vitality of municipal agencies, for example, is illustrated in the case of California, where the State courts have even sustained grants of pueblo (town) land made during the existence of the military government by ayuntamientos acting under the old Mexican law. (Hart vs. Burnet, 15 California, 530, 559. See also Townsend vs. Greeley, 5 Wallace, 326.) So the courts of a country are not necessarily closed by its cession. The treaty of Paris recognizes this in the provision that civil suits undetermined at the time of the exchange of ratifications may be prosecuted to judgment in the court in which they are pending, or in such court as may be substituted therefor. And the courts of California have affirmed the validity of proceedings in tribunals of Mexican origin acting under the military government. (Mena vs. Le Roy, 1 California, 216; Ryder vs. Cohn, 37 California, 69.) In regard to civil as distinguished from political law it is well settled that a system of jurisprudence already established in annexed territory is not supplanted by the system of the acquiring State by the mere act of transfer, but subsists until the new sovereign shall see fit to change it. (Campbell vs. Hall, Cowper, 204; United States vs. Percheman, 7 Peters, 51, 80; Strother vs. Lucas, 12 Peters, 410, 436.) And the United States observe both the rule of public law and the obligations of the Constitution in respecting private property and rights in annexed territory which have become duly vested under the old laws. (United States vs. Percheman, 7 Peters, 51, 86; United States vs. Moreno, 1 Wallace, 400.)

Except as they are the foundation of private rights already vested and compatible with the Constitution, the laws of annexed territory impose no permanent obligation upon the United States, yet all may not be in one category.

Laws conflicting with the Constitution impose no obligation whatever.

If an act of Congress extends of its own force to the ceded territory, it displaces all laws inconsistent with its provisions. This statement is made rather for the sake of precaution than with a definite suggestion as to its practical bearing, for, while certain acts may be, perhaps, in some sense self-extending (see Cross vs. Harrison, 16 Howard, 164, 197), there has not been established a general rule according to which this quality shall be attributed. Certainly self-extending acts must be exceptional, for it is presumed that a legislature enacts a law with regard to the known requirements of the country then within its jurisdiction, and not to the unknown requirements of after-acquired territory. This presumption is sustained by the common practice of our Government, and by our observance of the rule, just mentioned, that the laws of annexed territory generally subsist until they are definitely superseded; a rule of little value did the general statutes of the United States extend to the territory of their own force.

All other laws stand until changed by the authority of Congress.

THE POWERS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The President is in possession of the Philippines and governs them by military agents. This government originated in a belligerent occupation of foreign territory, and, agreeably to the precedent approved by the Supreme Court in the case of California, it was not dissolved by the transfer of the islands at the end of the war, but continues until superseded by Congress. (Cross vs. Harrison, 16 Howard, 164, 193.)

The rightful existence of this government being conceded, we must determine its powers. The President's message states that the government of Puerto Rico is maintained by the executive department "under the law of belligerent right" (page 50), and of course this statement includes the Philippines, since both districts are in like case. It is not perceived how the President can act under this law in any territory acquired from Spain. Belligerent right is predicated upon a state of war. Puerto Rico is at peace. Chief Justice Chase declared the invariable rule when he said in Milligan's case (4 Wallace, 2, 140), "Where peace exists the laws of peace must prevail." Belligerent right is predicated upon a state of formal war. There is an insurrection in the Philippines, but there is not a formal war. We have carefully refrained from treating the insurgents as belligerents. What powers the President might enjoy under the law of belligerent right I do not discuss, for it is as inapplicable in the ceded territory as it was in the like case of California, of which President Polk said:

"Upon the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace with Mexico * * * the temporary governments which had been established over New Mexico and California by our military and naval commanders by virtue of the rights of war ceased to derive any obligatory force from that source of authority. * * *" (Messages of the Presidents, IV, 638.) The President's governments in Puerto Rico and the Philippines are precisely alike in origin and powers. They are, indeed, military as distinguished from civil governments established by Congress, but they are not to be administered according to the laws of war. In the disturbed Philippines, as in quiet Puerto Rico, the President is the steward of territory belonging to the United States, in virtue of his office, and the fact that this territory is under the jurisdiction of Congress, though not yet organized under its laws, goes far toward indicating the duties, the powers, and the limitations of his stewardship.

The President is bound to uphold the sovereignty of the United States, and they magnify his office who urge him to recognize a Filipino republic or declare a protectorate or acknowledge in any way the existence of a local sovereign. The islands are in his charge, not at his disposition. They have been annexed by treaty and, unless wrested from us, can not be dissevered except by legislation of equal solemnity.

Of the strictly military powers of the President it need only be said that in the face of insurrection he enjoys precisely the same authority in the Philippines as elsewhere in the territory of the United States. And these powers extend, of course, to the maintenance of peace generally.

Although the authority of the President is called "military," it has a civil side. We have seen that the annexation of a country does not necessarily abolish all its old laws and governmental agencies, and perhaps some laws of Congress may extend to it by their own force. Unquestionably the President is competent to enforce these laws and utilize these agencies, as far as circumstances permit. Thus far the President's powers are normal, being wholly of an executive nature.

There remains the question whether the President may exercise legislative powers in the ceded territory pending action by Congress, and I mean by legislative powers the enactment of new laws and the repeal, alteration, or suspension of old ones, the extension of acts of Congress, the creation of offices, the imposition of new taxes and the appropriation of their revenue—in fine, the powers of Congress. Sir William Anson says of English practice: "Colonies acquired by conquest or cession fall at once under the legislative powers of the Crown in council, subject always to these limitations, that Parliament might intervene and make provision for the government of the colony, and that the Crown could not make laws 'contrary to the fundamental principles' of English law, nor presumably enforce such laws if found among the colonists at the time of cession." (The Law and Custom of the Constitution, The Crown, 2d ed., 274.) The power to legislate for ceded territory thus vested in the Crown in council is not enjoyed by the President when the United States acquire territory; it vests in Congress, whose jurisdiction attaches at once, and within this jurisdiction there is no room for an executive prerogative of legislation even by the permission of Congress. In the words of the Supreme Court, "That Congress can not delegate legislative power to the President, is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution." (Field vs. Clark, 143 U. S., 649, 692.)

The prohibition against executive legislation in United States territory is not affected by the judgment of the Supreme Court upon the Kearny Code of New Mexico. This code was promulgated by Gen. Stephen M. Kearny in 1846, while in command of our forces in hostile occupation of New Mexico. It was argued that the code lapsed upon the termination of the belligerent status of the territory by its formal cession to the United States, leaving the old Mexican law as the law of the land. But the court held that the Kearny Code was entitled to respect as the law in force at the date of cession. (Leitensdorfer vs. Webb, 20 Howard, 176.) Here was a code of purely executive, indeed of belligerent, origin recognized by the court, yet the decision is not an authority for the exercise of general legislative powers in annexed territory, for this is a part of the United States, while the Kearny Code was proclaimed in a foreign land. In other words, the powers of legislation which, according to Leitensdorfer vs. Webb, may be exercised by the President as Commander in Chief of our forces in belligerent occupation of foreign territory, where Congress has no jurisdiction, are not enjoyed in the United States, where Congress is supreme. Nor is the prohibition affected by the decision in Cross vs. Harrison (16 Howard, 164): After the ratification of the treaty ceding California to the United States had been communicated to our military governor in occupation of the territory he ordered that the duties of the tariff act should be collected upon foreign imports, created the office of collector, and appointed a civilian thereto with a salary.

In dismissing a suit for the recovery of duties paid under protest the court sustained these acts of a legislative nature, saying, "It has been sufficiently shown that the plaintiffs had no right to land their foreign goods in California at the times when their ships arrived with them, except by a compliance with the regulations which the civil government were authorized to enforce—first, under a war tariff, and afterwards under the existing tariff act of the United States. By the last, foreign goods, as they are enumerated, are made dutiable—they are not so because they are brought into a collection district, but because they are imported into the United States. The tariff act of 1846 prescribes what that duty shall be. Can any reason be given for the exemption of foreign goods from duty because they have not been entered and collected at a port of delivery? * * * The right claimed to land foreign goods within the United States at any place out of a collection district, if allowed, would be a violation of the provision in the Constitution which enjoins that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. Indeed, it must be very clear that no such right exists, and that there was nothing in the condition of California to exempt importers of foreign goods into it from the payment of the same duties which were chargeable in the other ports of the United States." (Page 193. The italics are mine.) The gist of this paragraph is that a tariff act is so far binding upon territory acquired after its passage that the President, in possession, is expected to collect the duties, but the court did not appear to be thoroughly satisfied with this position, for at the close of the opinion we read:

"We do not hesitate to say, if the reasons given for our conclusions in this case were not sound, that other considerations would bring us to the same results;" and the last of these considerations, which are generally of a practical nature, is "that the Congress has by two acts adopted and ratified all the acts of the government established in California upon the conquest of that Territory, relative to the collection of imposts and tonnage from the commencement of the late war with Mexico to the 12th November, 1849, expressly including in such adoption the moneys raised and expended during that period for the support of the actual government of California after the ratification of the treaty of peace with Mexico. This adoption sanctions what the defendant did. It does more—it affirms that he had legal authority for his acts."

From the opinion in Cross vs. Harrison we gain the impression that the acts of the President in California were made good by Congress rather than warranted by his own powers.

In applying the rule that the President is without legislative power in United States territory to the present case I do not suggest an invariable test by which administrative decrees issued from Washington directly, or through the military government in the islands, are to be approved as executive regulations or condemned as acts of legislation. It is sufficient for our purpose, however, to note that decrees plainly of the forbidden sorts are promulgated in the annexed territory. (See General Davis's Report on Puerto Rico, October 13, 1899, pages 107–156.)

Perhaps some examples of Executive usurpation of the powers of Congress may be unearthed, but the present Administration appears to be the first that has ever made laws for United States territory under claim of right. The incapacity of the executive department to legislate for unorganized territory was recognized by President Jefferson in the case of Louisiana (Messages of the Presidents, I, 363), and by President Polk in the case of California (Messages, etc., IV, 589, 638), and the wretched plight of Alaska, a Territory neglected by Congress for more than thirty years, has been laid before Congress by every President, none of whom has supposed, however, that the inactivity of the Legislature has given him the right to act in its stead. Yet, while President McKinley's last message recites that, "there is practically no organized form of government in the Territory [Alaska]. There is no authority except in Congress to pass any law no matter how local or trivial. * * *" (page 48). We find no expression of doubt as to his powers to legislate for the unorganized Philippine territory, and that these powers are not really assumed upon the plausible though mistaken ground of the existence of insurrection is shown by the fact that the same powers are exercised in the peaceful territory of Puerto Rico.

As the Administration declares that its government of the islands "is maintained by the law of belligerent right" (supra, page 37), it may harbor the idea that it enjoys the broad powers of a conqueror. Or, as it seems to be committed to the doctrine that the Constitution is inoperative in the ceded territory, it may arrogate to itself all governmental powers upon the theory that the constitutional separation of powers does not affect the President as the custodian of the Philippines. Neither of these positions is tenable, as I have shown. Whenever the Administration has legislated for Puerto Rico and the Philippines since their annexation it has invaded the province of Congress, and all arguments of extenuation must come at last to the plea of necessity.

In considering this plea we must dismiss at the outset the notion that the assembling of Congress in stated session worked a change in the President's powers as administrator of the annexed territory by depriving him of legislative functions enjoyed of necessity during the recess. These powers are the same in recess as in session, as in the theory of law the President never lacks the cooperation of the Legislature, except perhaps during the brief time needed to convene it in special session. If, then, the President possessed legislative powers of necessity when he might have called Congress but did not, his right must be based upon the mere inaction of Congress, and not upon the physical impossibility of its acting, for this was due to his failure to convene it, and on this theory he would possess legislative power now while Congress sits, but does not act. And this appears to be the opinion of the Administration, for the Secretary of War has lately decreed an order forbidding the foreclosure of mortgages in Puerto Rico for six months, unless Congress shall otherwise provide. In opposition to this theory, I submit the proposition that no legislative powers accrue to the President because of the inaction of Congress. If, in his judgment, legislation for annexed territory is necessary, he may commend it to Congress in regular or special session. If Congress shall not legislate on his motion or its own, it is presumed to be satisfied with the existing body of law comprising the Constitution, the old law of the territory, and such United States statutes as may extend of their own force.

Whatever moral weight a plea of necessity may have when in a recess of Congress instant action is required to avert a threatened peril, it has none in this case. The governing of the islands is not an emergency in itself. Congress had provided for their acquisition before it adjourned in March, 1899, and must be presumed to have anticipated that the President would probably take charge of them during the usual recess. If, before the next regular session, there had arisen a need for legislation, the President should have convened Congress. He can not plead the emergency of a condition caused by his failure to call the Legislature.

Breaches of the rule against Executive legislation are not condoned by the good intentions of a Chief Magistrate or by the excellence of his decrees.

When the people commenced the Constitution with the law, "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States," they laid a prohibition upon all Presidents at all times. Yet breaches are not always beyond repair.

The redeemable legislative acts of a President are those which Congress could have passed and can ratify. For these President McKinley should seek legislative approval, as President Taylor sought it for some acts of the military government of California (Messages of the Presidents, V, 19) and as the British Government sought it in the case of "the forty days' tyranny" in 1763, during which it suspended the laws permitting the export of corn. Irredeemable acts are those which Congress is constitutionally incompetent to ratify.

THE POWERS OF CONGRESS.

Congress is supreme in the Philippines, and it acquired jurisdiction the moment the islands became United States territory. The impression that Congress will not be supreme until it actually legislates for the islands is erroneous. Congress is paramount over all United States territory, and in legislating for the Philippines it will not newly take jurisdiction, but will exercise jurisdictional right already vested in it by the operation of the treaty of Paris.

Whether the power of Congress to govern territory be derived from the provision of the Constitution which reads: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State" (American Insurance Company vs. Canter, 1 Peters, 511, 542), a provision plainly relating to the management of property, especially in public lands, and not to the governing of people, or whether the power be derived, logically, from the "right to hold territory" (Sère vs. Pitot, 6 Cranch, 332, 336; Scott vs. Sandford, 19 Howard, 393, 443; United States vs. Kagama, 116 U. S., 375, 380), all will agree with Chief Justice Marshall that "whichever may be the source whence the power is derived, the possession of it is unquestioned" (American Insurance Company vs. Canter, 1 Peters, 511, 543). And the scope of the power must be the same whichever its source.

The scope of Federal power over territory beyond the States is thus defined by the Supreme Court: "By the Constitution, as is now well settled, the United States have rightfully acquired the Territories, and being the only government which can impose laws upon them, have the entire dominion and sovereignty, national and municipal, Federal and State, over all the Territories so long as they remain in a Territorial condition." (Shively vs. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 48; see also National Bank vs. County of Yankton, 101 U. S., 129, 133.) In virtue of these powers Congress enjoys a wide discretion in prescribing a government for the Philippines. Any form is permissible, from an organization chosen by the islanders to a governor or commission appointed by the President. But a Territorial government is essentially subordinate and precarious. Congress remains the sovereign body, and may alter or abolish it at will and exert superior legislative powers during the term of its existence. The unquestioned power of Congress to establish a Territorial government without enlisting the cooperation of the people, or even consulting them, results from the necessary denial of popular sovereignty in the Territories; but this government, however arbitrarily imposed, can not be arbitrary in conduct, for it must obey the law of the Constitution.

The current session affords Congress the first opportunity to exert its constitutional powers in the Philippines, and though it should not legislate freely in respect of the islands in advance of reliable information of their requirements, a general policy of deliberation will not excuse neglect of prompt efforts to ameliorate some of the worst conditions.

Each day of unrest in the Philippines makes our presence more hateful and postpones our opportunity for helpfulness; indeed, if resistance be greatly prolonged we may learn one day that we have demoralized a people we promised to benefit. The Republic itself may be menaced by persistent disaffection, for if it shall be involved presently in a new and greater war, the enemy will find allies in the Philippine territory. The Administration is blameworthy for having belittled the strength of the insurrection. If the President shall now call for troops to garrison the islands thoroughly, he will not be blamed for exaggerating it. But whatever may be the state of the insurrection, the peace we want is contentment—not merely the end of strife; and we can not hope that one will follow the other while we treat disaffection as wanton opposition to a benign sovereign, and armed resistance to its authority as unnatural rebellion.

The attitude of regretful surprise that Filipinos should resist our benevolence is a dishonest pose. When we recall that a few months ago we knew nothing of the Philippines, know little now in fact, we may comprehend how ignorant must be the islanders of the institutions and spirit of our Republic, how possible it is that with their experience of white rulers they should view the United States as more dreadful than Spain because more powerful. In these circumstances conciliation is not an improper overture to rebels. It is a generous effort to allay the mistrust of a strange people, and to assure mutual comprehension between parties brought unexpectedly into a difficult relation. In pursuance of these ends let Congress cause proclamation to be made that the Philippines are not a dependency, but are part of the Republic and within the protection of the Constitution; and especially that citizenship and civil rights are bestowed in the Philippines as in all other United States territory, and that trade between all parts of the Republic is free. This proclamation should not be withheld because proclamations of the President and his representatives have failed, for as a message from Congress declaring the law of the Constitution it will be of higher dignity and promise. Nor should it be issued with an exaggerated hope of its influence, since the sending of a message is, after all, but a one-sided dealing at arm's length with a situation that requires intimate discussion. Representative Filipinos should be invited to attend a conference to be held at Washington, and they should be received neither as traitors nor as heroes, but as people of a new territory come to discuss the vital question of its government.

If it be objected that any intercourse with insurgents is beneath our dignity let us remember that President Lincoln left his capital to talk with Confederate leaders at Hampton Roads, set in his own opinions, with no expectation of changing theirs, but determined that no chance for peace should be lost through lack of consideration on his part.

The President's government in the Philippines is so incompetent that Congress should supersede it at once. A bill has been introduced providing "That when all insurrection against the sovereignty and authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, shall have been completely suppressed by the military and naval forces of the United States, all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the said islands shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion."

A precedent for this bill is said to be found in the action of Congress after the annexation of Louisiana. On October 31, 1803, ten days after the exchange of the ratifications of the treaty of cession, Congress passed an act authorizing the President to take possession of Louisiana and providing "that until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion." (2 Stat. L., page 246.) The Louisiana act was followed substantially in the case of Florida (3 Stat. L., 523), and may have inspired a part of the act annexing Hawaii (30 Stat. L., 750), but it will be shown that it is not a precedent for the Philippine bill.

The government of Louisiana, such as it was, was established definitely. The Philippine government is to be called into being by the President upon the happening of an event of which he is to be the sole judge—the suppression of insurrection. And in this relation the bill is open to the serious objection that it recognizes, inferentially, the law of belligerent right as the present foundation of Executive jurisdiction in the islands.

The Louisiana act continued the old government of Louisiana and merely authorized the President to fill its offices. The Philippine bill enables the President to erect a government at will, manned by "such person and persons * * * as he may direct."

The Louisiana act did not purport to confer legislative powers upon the President, and Governor Claiborne's first proclamation expressly recognized the obligation of the old laws and municipal regulations. The Philippine bill seems to concede to the President full legislative powers.

The Louisiana government was to last no longer than the then session of Congress, though the new government ordained by Congress on March 24, 1804, was not actually installed until October 1, 1804. The Philippine government is without term.

Viewing the bill as an Administration measure and recalling the opinion of the Administration that the Constitution is not law in the Philippines, it seems that it purposes to invest the President with the right, or perhaps I should say to recognize that he has the right, to hold all legislative powers in the island and exercise them at his pleasure. If this be the purpose of the bill, it approves the powers of the British Crown over dependencies not regulated by Parliament without imposing the checks upon their abuse which obtain in the British system, where the Crown can do nothing "contrary to the fundamental law" (see supra, page 38), and where relief from injustice may be had through an appeal to the judicial committee of the privy council. (See supra, page 30.)

The Philippine bill is a halting measure of doubtful legality. It merely conveys an impression that some day, in some way, something ought to be done for the Philippines, whereas it is the duty of Congress, and well within its power, to act at once. Probably Congress is not now in a position to prescribe an elaborate system of government; but it is able to substitute for the present makeshift an organization that will be in all respects at least lawful and competent. Congress could ordain a government modeled broadly upon the act of March 24, 1804, creating a temporary government for Orleans Territory, composed of a governor, a legislative council, and a court, all appointed by the President and vested with sufficient powers. Such a government would serve until Congress shall perfect a scheme for a permanent government.

THE DISPOSITION OF THE PHILIPPINES.

I have defined the status of the Philippines and partially outlined the law governing our relation to them in order to determine the responsibilities of the Federal Government in their regard. I have written as though there were no question of renouncing sovereignty over these islands, because the opportunity for renunciation in nowise lightens the obligations now cast upon us; yet my conviction of the impolicy of annexation, expressed before the ratification of the treaty of Paris (see Notes on the Foreign Policy of the United States, June, 1898; A Note on the Question of the Philippines, October, 1898; Constitutional Aspects of Annexation, December, 1898; Harvard Law Review, January, 1899, reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD January 11, 1899), has been so strengthened by later events that I would have the voting citizens of the Republic view the disposition of the Philippines not as settled by destiny, but as an open question.

As it is the purpose of these notes to deal chiefly with legal questions, I shall pass over the moral and political principles that enjoin us to relinquish sovereignty over the Philippines, and simply point out the undoubted right and the probable method of relinquishment.

THE RIGHT OF DISPOSITION.

Although the law requires us to treat the Philippines as part of the United States, it does not compel us to hold them forever. The implied right of acquisition under which we annexed the islands has its opposite in an implied right of disposition, at all events in the case of territory beyond a State.

Voluntary relinquishment of territory is not unexampled. Witness the cession of Louisiana by France to the United States; of Alaska by Russia to the United States; of Java and Heligoland by Great Britain to Holland and Germany, respectively; of St. Bartholomew by Sweden to France. The right of disposition is conceded by the Administration in the agreement with the Sultan of Sulu, which provides that the United States will not sell the Sulu Islands without his consent. The concession is important as showing that, in the opinion of the Administration, the annexation of the Philippines has not closed discussion as to their future disposition, but the provision itself is derogatory to our sovereignty. We acquired the Sulus from Spain without the consent of the Sultan, and we shall not require his permission to sell them.

There is, however, a presumption against the ability and willingness of a State to give up a section of its territory, and this is strengthened where the section has been deliberately acquired or long occupied or, above all, is identified with the rest of the country through national unity or community of interest. At the outbreak of the war the American people neither wished nor expected to annex the Philippines, and, whatever individual hope of aggrandizement lurked behind the plan of campaign in the East, the Administration maintains that aggrandizement was not the purpose, though it was well advised of the probable opportunity. (See Admiral Dewey's letter from Hongkong, March 31, 1898, Senate Document 73, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.) Indeed, the prevailing argument for annexation is apologetic: The law of war forced us to the islands; the law of necessity has chained us there. Our occupation of the Philippines is not only of yesterday, but will probably be, during an indefinite period, merely an armed occupation. Not only is national unity beyond prophecy, but race hatred confronts us, and we are so far from even desiring community of interests that we actually tax the trade between the islands and the mainland, and would view an immigration of Filipinos as an Asiatic plague. When we add that the Philippines are not even an outer line of defense, but rather a vulnerable outpost, and are neither the home of American colonists nor the seat of American investments it is perceived that we are not embarrassed by considerations that usually place relinquishment of territory beyond the pale of discussion.

THE PROTECTORATE.

The United States relinquishing sovereignty over the Philippines may have a choice of courses, but, as at present advised, they will be persuaded to a protectoral relation. The President says in his message:

"The suggestion has been made that we could renounce our authority over the islands and, giving them independence, could retain a protectorate over them. This proposition will not be found, I am sure, worthy of your serious attention. Such an arrangement would involve at the outset a cruel breach of faith. It would place the peaceable and loyal majority, who ask nothing better than to accept our authority, at the mercy of the minority of armed insurgents. It would make us responsible for the acts of the insurgent leaders and give us no power to control them. It would charge us with the task of protecting them against each other and defending them against any foreign power with which they choose to quarrel. In short, it would take from the Congress of the United States the power of declaring war and vest that tremendous prerogative in the Tagal leader of the hour." (Page 44.)

The humiliating relation here depicted is a travesty of a real protectorate. A brief examination of the law and custom of protectorates will show that the United States may assume the office of protector without allowing a minority of armed insurgents to terrorize the peaceable islanders or permitting an Aguinaldo to call the American people to arms at his whistle.

A protectoral relation always suggests the comparative weakness of the protected country, but not, in its broadest sense, supervision by a guardian. In this sense perhaps the United States may be called the protector of Central and South American states, because in the Monroe doctrine they declare their intention to resist foreign aggrandizement upon this continent. An extension of the Monroe doctrine to the Philippines would not enable us to fulfill our present responsibilities in their regard. We should establish a closer relation—a protectorate.

"Protectorate" is a name for so great a variety of political relationships that of itself it defines none accurately, but a few general observations will suggest the relation I have in view. The protectorate will be founded upon a treaty or agreement with a Philippine state whose organization and fundamental law shall be satisfactory to the United States. I do not mean that we should draft an ideal constitution for the islands, as did Locke for the Carolinas, nor commend as of course our own as the perfect model, but we must condition our protection upon the adoption of a practicable scheme of government as enlightened as we have a right to expect.

The Philippine state will not be an exception to the rule that a protected state is never sovereign in all respects. It will not be officially known in the family of nations, for it will hold no relations with foreign states, neither making treaties nor exchanging ministers, nor will it fly a national flag upon the high seas. At every point of contact between the state and the world at large the United States must stand the promoter of its interests, the defender of its rights, the surety for its good behavior. This denial of official foreign intercourse is necessary if only for the reason that as the protector must defend the protected, it must deprive the latter of opportunity to embroil itself with a foreign state, and in anticipation of the possibility of payment of damages by the United States on Philippine account, the treaty should provide a method of recoupment.

As the responsibility for the defense of the island requires that the means be within our control, the establishment of a protectorate will not be followed by the withdrawal of all our forces nor by the maintenance of a Philippine army at the discretion of the local government. The disposition of our troops will depend upon our own judgment, and so will the size and composition of a native force.

If it shall be advisable that foreigners be employed for a time in certain offices in the military and civil services in an advisory or responsible capacity, the employment must be open to Americans alone, for the admission of other foreigners might lead to bickering and intrigue.

A protector may commend, and, in fact, often dictates, a foreign commercial policy to the protected state, and any action of the United States in this direction should tend to open the door to the Philippines as wide as the exigencies of revenue will allow.

Should it appear that native courts ought not to administer civil or criminal justice where Americans or other foreigners are concerned, the treaty may provide and Congress maintain tribunals competent to try these cases.

To suggest in a general way the protectoral attitude of the United States toward the Philippines, it may be said that in matters of foreign concern our interest will be very broad, but in domestic affairs it will be limited to the maintenance of the Philippine state and the security of the protectorate. While it is to be hoped that the people of the northern islands will range themselves under a single government, if not of a national, at least of a confederate, character, race antagonisms may necessitate the recognition of more than one, and it is quite likely that the southern, or Mohammedan, islands will require a separate protectorate.

The study of the protectoral relations of other governments will be profitable, but it is not likely to suggest a model. Apart from the Mohammedan districts, which appear to be much like the protected states of the Malay Peninsula, the Philippines are quite dissimilar from any country now under protection, for we find there a population largely of Malay origin whose dominant portion has been Christianized and civilized to a degree by Spanish influence. More importantly, our action must be inspired by uncommon purposes. A protectorate frequently precedes annexation; ours would be the sign of disseverance. A protectorate is often a cloak for substantial ownership, but if ownership be our real purpose we must continue to govern the islands constitutionally as part of the United States, and not set up a mock state through which our Government may give arbitrary orders to a subject people.

A protectorate is usually established without period, though its end may be conditioned upon the happening of an unexpected event; thus it is written that Great Britain shall hold Cyprus until Russia shall surrender Kars. Our protection should be accorded in the expectation of its withdrawal. The battle of Manila Bay has opened up interests and opportunities in the East that will broaden with years, but our shortcomings at Washington have not necessarily saddled us with interminable responsibilities in the Philippines. Assuming that a protectorate will be declared with a reasonable anticipation that a Philippine state will one day be able to maintain a place among the smaller states of the world, the treaty of protection should fix its own duration, though some provisions might be accorded a longer or shorter term.

The exigencies of the protectorate may require the presence of a considerable force in the Philippines, which would thus be a practicable base of hostilities in the event of war, and for this reason would be open to attack. (See Despagnet, Essai sur les Protectorats, 343.) Yet it is hard that a country should be the theater of a war in which its people have no national interest, and to avoid this hardship the establishment of a protectorate over the Philippines should be accompanied by negotiations with the maritime powers looking to their neutralization. Moreover, an earnest attempt to neutralize the islands would prove that we are not in the East as the foe or the ally of any nation, and its success would give us substantial advantages. While the Philippines are open to assault, they are a remote and vulnerable outpost requiring the presence of a large force, and subject to the danger of a native uprising in aid of foreign invasion. Neutralized, they will require only a force commensurate with local necessities.

A protectorate is not necessarily unconstitutional. So long as it is an honest relation and not a subterfuge for complete control, it is one of those foreign relations maintainable by the United States as well because they are one of the family of nations as by the express contemplation of the Constitution. While the United States have never entered into a relation with another state like that commended in the case of the Philippines, they have occasionally assumed a protectoral office; notably in respect of the possible routes of interoceanic canals. And our relation to Samoa, now in process of alteration, is not only distinctly protectoral, but is complicated by partnership with Great Britain and Germany. It is open to criticism only for reasons of policy, and such reasons alone were given by President Cleveland for withholding the United States from participating in the Kongo Protectorate. (Messages of the Presidents, VIII, 330.)

Our courts have never been required to define the position of the United States in respect of protected territory, but it may be indicated. Bearing in mind that the establishment of a protectorate will mark our relinquishment of territorial sovereignty it is perceived that the Philippines will pass straightway from the territorial jurisdiction of Congress to that of the protected state, for as Justice Story states the rule, "The laws of no nation can justly extend beyond its own territories, except so far as regards its own citizens. They can have no force to control the sovereignty or rights of any other nation within its own jurisdiction. And however general and comprehensive the phrases used in our municipal laws may be they must always be restricted in construction to places and persons upon whom the legislature have authority and jurisdiction." (The Apollon, 9 Wheaton, 362, 370.)

Another statement of the Supreme Court will suggest our manner of dealing with the protected state. "By the Constitution a government is ordained and established 'for the United States of America,' and not for countries outside of their limits. * * * The Constitution can have no operation in another country. When, therefore, the representatives or officers of our government are permitted to exercise authority of any kind in another country, it must be on such conditions as the two countries may agree, the laws of neither one being obligatory upon the other." (Ross's case, 140 U. S., 453, 464.) This was written of our consular jurisdiction in Japan, now ended by limitation, but it applies to any protectoral relation we may assume toward the Philippines. Upon the establishment of a protectorate, the Federal Government will be no longer the government of the islands. Any authority it may have therein will be exerted in a foreign land by agreement with its sovereign. Our rights under this agreement will be maintained by the President like other treaty rights. Any legislation that Congress may enact in regard to the Philippines will be of an ancillary nature, based upon a general power to provide the means for maintaining the lawful rights and obligations of the United States without regard to locality.

This jurisdiction of Congress is not territorial jurisdiction in a foreign country, but is a power to be exercised in furtherance of rights lawfully acquired by the United States in that country. That is to say, Congress can not impose its will on a Philippine state because it is the Legislature of the United States only, but it may aid in effectuating the rights defined by the treaty of protection. Its aid may take the form of new legislation; for example, an act creating an international court and defining its jurisdiction. More often it will be given by an appropriation of money. For some years the act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service has contained this item: "For the execution of the obligations of the United States and the protection of the interests and property of the United States in the Samoan Islands, under any existing treaty with the government of said islands, and with the Governments of Germany and Great Britain, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the President."

I shall not sift the mass of conflicting opinion as to whether the Filipinos are able to administer a protected state, because the report of the Philippine Commission seems to bear sufficient testimony in their favor. The commissioners describe the Filipinos as being "of unusually promising material" (I., page 130); "strongly desirous of better educational advantages" (page 41); and say that, after the insurrection has been suppressed, the majority will be found to be "good, law-abiding citizens" (page 120). They testify to the marked ability of the educated class, who, "though constituting a minority, are far more numerous than is generally supposed, and are scattered all over the archipelago." (Page 120). In the matter of government the commissioners remark a striking likeness between the Filipino ideal and American achievement, going so far as to say that the leading Filipinos have selected "almost precisely the political institutions and arrangements which have been worked out in practice by the American people; and these are also, though less definitely apprehended, the political ideas of the masses of the Philippine people themselves." (Pages 91, 119.)

Finally, the commissioners cap their appreciation by earnestly recommending for the islands a Territorial government substantially of the first class. (Pages 111, 112.) It is true that in spite of these tributes to Philippine competency the commissioners are at some pains to discredit the possibility of establishing a protectorate (pages 90, 106); but, like the President, whose views they reflect, they narrow their consideration of protectorates to the obviously impracticable. And their disapproval must be weighed with due regard to the fact that a recommendation of a method of relinquishing sovereignty, or even an open-minded inquiry for practicable methods, would have been altogether foreign to their official instructions.

The American people, relinquishing sovereignty over the Philippines, still may fulfill every duty they can be truthfully said to owe to the islanders, and promote every legitimate interest in the commerce of the East. Best of all, in the face of a great temptation they will hold by the cardinal truth that a remote country teeming with people who, however competent to develop a nationality of their own under our protection, can never safely be admitted to statehood, is an undesirable possession for a republic whose strength is the "indestructible Union of indestructible States."

Mr. McCOMAS. I have asked in this connection to have published the statement of Mr. Havemeyer, the president of the New York sugar trust, published in the Chicago Tribune of March 30, 1900, which consists of about fifteen lines. I ask consent to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and the paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK BUREAU CHICAGO TRIBUNE,
New York, March 29.

President Havemeyer, of the American Sugar Refining Company, was the center of interest in speculative circles to-day, owing to the cut of 5 cents a hundred pounds announced by the Arbuckles and the possible action of the Havemeyer interests. The sugar king, in discussing the whole situation, was plain and outspoken regarding the position of Puerto Rico and the Philippines, and declared that there was no reason in the world why sugars should not be admitted free of duty from those countries.

"I am much in favor of it," he said, "and I believe the time is not far off when they will be admitted free of duty. Why, both of those countries are part and parcel of the United States, and no matter what action Congress takes, I am confident the Supreme Court will hold that the products of those colonies are entitled to free entry here.

"There is no more reason why a duty should be placed upon the products of Puerto Rico than on stuff coming into New York from Long Island. There is only a wide ditch between the United States and Puerto Rico. Well, if Puerto Rican sugars are brought in free, it will not be long before some similar policy is adopted with reference to Cuban products."

Mr. McCOMAS. I thought it was apt that it might appear from the highest authority that the distinguished Senator from Nebraska and the principal of the sugar trust were in entire accord in respect of free trade in sugar between Puerto Rico and the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I have never before known the opinion of a layman to be cited or read in this Chamber on a question of law. I do not know what knowledge Mr. Havemeyer may have or what the Supreme Court of the United States will finally decide, nor do I understand that it detracts from the opinion of Mr. Havemeyer that he and I agree upon one question, nor do I think it adds anything to the glory or the prestige of the most distinguished and learned jurist from Maryland that he should refer to that fact on this occasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to the amendment of the committee, inserting, as a new section, section 25.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting section 25 as a new section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was, at the top of page 18, to insert as section 26 the following:

SEC. 26. That for the purposes of such elections Puerto Rico shall be divided by the executive council into seven districts, composed of contiguous territory and as nearly equal as may be in population, and each district shall be entitled to five members of the house of delegates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 5, to insert as a new section the following:

ELECTION OF DELEGATES.

SEC. 27. That the first election for delegates shall be held on such date and under such regulations as to ballots and voting as the executive council may prescribe; and at such elections the voters of each legislative district shall choose five delegates to represent them in the house of delegates from the date of their election and qualification until two years from and after the 1st day of January next ensuing; of all which thirty days' notice shall be given by publication in the Official Gazette or by printed notices distributed and posted throughout the district, or by both, as the executive council may prescribe. At such elections all citizens of Puerto Rico shall be allowed to vote who have been bona fide residents for one year and who possess the other qualifications of voters under the laws and military orders in force on the 1st day of March, 1900, subject to such modifications and additional qualifications and such regulations and restrictions as to registration as may be prescribed by the executive council. The house of delegates so chosen shall convene at the capital and organize by the election of a speaker, a clerk, a sergeant-at-arms, and such other officers and assistants as it may require, at such time as may be designated by the executive council; but it shall not continue in session longer than sixty days in any one year, unless called by the governor to meet in extraordinary session. The enacting clause of the laws shall be, "Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico;" and each member of the house of delegates shall be paid for his services at the rate of $5 per day for each day's attendance while the house is in session, and mileage at the rate of 10 cents per mile for each mile necessarily traveled each way to and from each session of the legislative assembly.

All future elections of delegates shall be governed by the provisions hereof, so far as they are applicable, until the legislative assembly shall otherwise provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was on page 19, after line 15, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 28. That the house of delegates shall be the sole judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, and shall have and exercise all the powers with respect to the conduct of its proceedings that usually appertain to parliamentary legislative bodies. No person shall be eligible to membership in the house of delegates who is not 25 years of age and able to read and write either the Spanish or the English language, or who is not possessed in his own right of taxable property, real or personal, situated in Puerto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 24, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 29. That all bills may originate in either house, but no bill shall become a law unless it be passed in each house by a majority vote of all the members belonging to such house and be approved by the governor within ten days thereafter. If, when a bill that has been passed is presented to the governor for signature, he approve the same, he shall sign it, or if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that house in which it originated, which house shall enter his objections at large on its journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be considered, and if approved by two-thirds of that house it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal of each house, respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislative assembly by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law: Provided, however, That all laws enacted by the legislative assembly shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority, if deemed advisable, to annul the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 21, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 30. That the legislative authority herein provided shall extend to all matters of a legislative character not locally inapplicable, including power to create, consolidate, and reorganize the municipalities, so far as may be necessary, and to provide and repeal laws and ordinances therefor; and also the power to alter, amend, modify, and repeal any and all laws and ordinances of every character now in force in Puerto Rico, or any municipality or district thereof, not inconsistent with the provisions hereof: Provided, however, That all grants of franchises, rights, and privileges or concessions of a public or quasi-public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, and all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I have an amendment to this proposed new section which I ask to submit at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] submits an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the section it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have no power or authority to enact any law in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not desire to discuss the question at all, but I desire to have the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. PETTUS to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama demands the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], but I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], but it is suggested to me that I shall transfer that pair, so that the Senator from Washington may stand paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and I will vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENNEY. I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota, as we have done heretofore, that we transfer those pairs, so that we can both vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. KENNEY. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], so that the Senator from Connecticut will stand paired with the Senator from South Dakota, and I vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS. I have transferred my pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. BARD], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLEN. I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is detained from the Senate by sickness. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce, once for all, that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and I are paired. We are now necessarily engaged in the consideration of one of the appropriation bills, as we have been for the last two days, and that accounts for our not being recorded as voting. We have been paired with each other and will be for the balance of the day.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I inquire whether the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Illinois has not voted.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have a general pair with that Senator, but I will transfer the pair to my colleague [Mr. MONEY], so that he and the Senator from Illinois will stand paired. I vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]; but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Kenney,	Pettus,
Bate,	Culberson,	Lindsay,	Sullivan,
Berry,	Harris,	Martin,	Turley.
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,

NAYS—31.

Allison,	Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,
Baker,	Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Quarles,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Kean,	Ross,
Carter,	Foster,	Lodge,	Scott,
Chandler,	Frye,	McBride,	Simon,
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger,	McComas,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Gear,	McMillan,	Warren.

Depew,	Mason,	Stewart,
Elkins,	Money,	Taliaferro,

So the amendment of Mr. PETTUS to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment of the committee, inserting section 30 as a new section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, there are two principal questions which lie at the very foundation of the pending bill. One is a question of Congressional power and the other a question of national policy. The first has been somewhat exhaustively discussed, particularly during the last few weeks, in both the Senate and the House. In fact, it has been discussed more or less since the Louisiana purchase, almost a century ago. It is impossible to recall a precedent or authority which has not been invoked in support of one or the other contention and with which the country and the Senate have not already become entirely familiar. The fact is, that so much attention has been devoted to the constitutional question by the able expounders of the Constitution that scant consideration has been given to the question of policy; and the urgency of the situation as respects relief for the Porto Ricans has been very largely overlooked.

I shall not detain the Senate by the citation of authorities which have been so frequently presented that its patience is already overtaxed, but shall content myself with some generalizations with respect to the power of the Congress over Porto Rico which are based upon what I conceive to be the overwhelming weight of authority and sound reason.

POWERS UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.

The Federal Government possesses in the most comprehensive manner all powers which pertain to the sovereignty of nations. It was not created by the fathers with any limitation upon those powers which are inherent in the sovereignty of the nations of the world.

It has been invariably recognized that one of the attributes of sovereignty is the right to acquire and govern territory as the result of war, and I am not disposed to read into the powers of the United States an abridgment of those rights which pertain to other sovereignties.

The Federal Government has very broad powers under the Constitution which are distinctly expressed or necessarily implied. The implied powers are such as are essential to give force and effect to those which are expressed and are of equal force and virtue with the latter.

The Constitution of the United States clearly vests in the Federal Government the exclusive function of declaring war and of making treaties. As an indispensable incident of this power, the Government is authorized to acquire territory. In the language of Chief Justice Marshall, territory may be acquired "either by conquest or by treaty." The authority to so acquire territory without the amplest power to govern and to legislate for it would be contradictory and abortive. Our right to govern it does not, however, rest upon mere implication, although that is quite sufficient, but has been distinctly conferred by the Constitution, wherein it is declared that—

> Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

No matter what doubts have arisen from time to time, they have been resolved in favor of the power of the Government to acquire territory. Such was the case when we acquired Louisiana in 1803, Florida in 1819, Texas in 1845, California in 1848, the Gadsden purchase in 1853, Alaska in 1867, and Hawaii in 1898—acquisitions which are now the strength, the pride, and the glory of the Republic. How richly has been vindicated the wisdom of the statesmen who invoked the powers of Government to extend the national sovereignty by the acquisition of territory, without which we would be unable to-day to successfully challenge leadership among the nations of the earth.

Whether the Constitution extends automatically to a territory acquired has been a much-debated question. Divergent views have been and still are sharply entertained upon the subject. Such differences of opinion will continue until the Supreme Court, in the serenity of yonder judicial chamber, shall, in a case raising squarely the issue, determine the question. Its supreme judgment will be accepted by the country, for in its wisdom and in the integrity of its purpose there exists no doubt. Until it shall interpret and define the powers of Congress under the Constitution the Congress should reserve to itself the widest possible liberty, the amplest discretion in dealing with the problems and conditions which are now facing us and which were not within the contemplation of the wise framers of the Constitution.

Our Constitution, for which the American people have a respect and veneration next only to their respect and veneration for Holy Writ, was framed for the government of a people who had in them the seed of self-government which had germinated and grown for centuries, a people who were familiar with the privileges conferred and the duties imposed by the Constitution, and who knew how to exercise and observe them. It was formed for a people whose wants and capacities were distinctly known and understood.

In its essential principles, in its most exalted purpose, the Constitution can be adapted to many peoples and many countries who are without preliminary training or experience; but as to others it would be illy adapted, and some modification as to details would become necessary, if it were to be applied to them. The spirit of that immortal instrument may go everywhere, but many of its fixed and absolute provisions would rest imperfectly upon those peoples and races whose traditions and conditions are entirely unlike our own.

GOVERNMENT OF NEW POSSESSIONS.

We are charged with the responsibility of providing a government for new possessions and new peoples. We are only partially informed as to their necessities and capacities. There is no one, I dare say, who approaches the task before us with that complete confidence in the information before him which is so essential to wise decision. While we have a sympathetic interest in the people who have come to us and a profound desire and purpose to lift them into as full enjoyment as possible of the priceless liberties which we cherish, we should have the wisdom to know that we should proceed with caution and sound judgment; that we should advance according as we have light and information, always looking toward granting them the amplest privileges consistent with their capacities and the welfare of our own country. There is no thought or desire in this Chamber, or elsewhere, to subordinate these people, to impose upon them any arbitrary or unjust rule, or to withhold from them for a moment the enjoyment of religious freedom and all of the opportunities which shall make for their greatest social and commercial progress.

The greatest danger, Mr. President, in dealing with the new problems which engage our attention is undue haste, inconsiderate action. There will be no difficulty in solving them if we will be content to act only upon ample information, and be willing to retrace our steps if we go wrong. There is no mind so gifted as to be able to see the end from the beginning. We must obtain the best lights possible and follow them in the settlement of the questions before us, actuated always by the exalted purpose to deal justly and liberally with those who, through one of the great revolutions in history—may I not say evolutions—are committed to our care.

We should remember that free government did not spring Athene-like into existence, but is the fruit of centuries of trial and tribulation, and that education and experience are essential before any people can appreciate and exercise that government which we enjoy and which we believe is the best that human wisdom has devised.

Congress can not instantly create a form of government for the island which shall meet the requirements and satisfy fully the demands of the people. Time is required to formulate a scheme and put it in full operation.

We should proceed with all reasonable dispatch, it is true, but the form of government, its adaptability to these people, with whom we are more or less unfamiliar, is the essential and should be the first consideration.

They are not without present insular government. True, it is a military government, but it has so rapidly adapted itself to the needs of the people that there is more of liberty in it, more of republicanism in it, more of justice in it, than any which they have ever enjoyed.

NOT A PARTY QUESTION.

Another danger which now besets us is that our course with respect to the people for whom we must provide government may be controlled by purely partisan considerations. The questions are of such high moment that they should be settled free from partisanship. They should not be determined in the heat of political contests or made the football of purely partisan contention, but under our system of government, where party so largely controls, we must expect to find parties dividing upon questions affecting the administration of the newly acquired territory. The danger is that parties will divide, not so much upon the merit of the questions which may concern the domestic welfare of the people of such territory, but as shall seem to promise the greatest party advantage in the exigency of a political campaign in the United States.

Mr. President, the responsibility of administering for the present the islands committed to our keeping rests upon the party in power. I regret to see a disposition on the part of those in opposition to assume an attitude of antagonism to measures proposed for the welfare of the people of these islands.

I am not concerned lest the Congress of the United States, created by the people and directly responsible to them, shall not decide the questions before us wisely. I have no fear, sir, that it will not now, and in the future, patriotically carry into all its laws and acts the spirit of the Constitution, and that it will not carry that great charter into the new territory as soon as the people therein are fitted for its enjoyment, and that it will not be observant of the rights and liberties of those, even to the humblest, who are committed to us by a treaty of peace at the close of a triumphant war.

HISTORY OF THE ISLAND.

Mr. President, we are now immediately concerned with the administration of Porto Rico. There were ceded to the United States by the treaty of Paris the island of Porto Rico and other islands under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies. Aside from Porto Rico there were some three small islands embraced in the cession. The principal one of these is Vieques, distant 13 miles from the eastern shore of the main island. It is quite 21 miles in length, with an average width of about 6 miles. It is now under cultivation. There are one or two other smaller islands of no great importance.

Porto Rico embraces about 3,668 square miles. It is some 90 miles in length, with an average width of about 35 miles. Although the interior is mountainous, the entire island is more or less arable and productive.

It has been under Spanish rule for some three hundred and ninety years. The population is, according to the best statistics obtainable, about 950,000 people. There is much wealth and intelligence among certain classes of the people, but the great mass are poor and ignorant. Fully 85 per cent are unable to either read or write. There is only one modern schoolhouse in the island, and that has been built within the last six months. There is a great desire among the people for the establishment of schools. They are anxious for the education of their children, and by the extension of the American school system there is every warrant for the belief that the people will rapidly avail themselves of the opportunity offered for education. The people are docile, kind, and courteous, and accept with pleasure the change from the blight of Spanish government.

COMMERCE.

The commerce of the island has heretofore been chiefly with Spain. Prior to American occupancy fully 40 per cent of the exports and imports was between it and the mother country, and about 21 per cent was with the United States. The exports and imports of the island for the period of five years prior to 1898 averaged about $11,000,000 a year each, making approximately a total of $22,000,000 per annum. During the year 1899 about 40 per cent of the commerce of the island was with the United States. The exports to the United States were $3,416,686, and the imports were $3,499,356.

The chief articles of export are coffee, sugar, and tobacco.

Coffee, which constituted about $\frac{7}{10}$ per cent of the exports, has found a market chiefly in Europe. It is a superior article, ranking with the best.

A slight export duty was imposed upon it by Spain, but this has been abolished by Executive order since American occupation.

In order to protect the Porto Rican interests against the cheap Brazilian coffee, a duty will be necessary, solely in the interest of Porto Rico. The pending bill fixes the rate at 5 cents per pound.

Sugar is next in importance to the coffee crop. The average production has been about 60,000 tons per annum, but this year the yield for export is estimated at about 45,000 tons. The Dingley duty upon this product this year would average about $30 per ton, and, according to the Ways and Means Committee, it would aggregate about $1,350,000.

The proposed duty of 15 per cent of the Dingley rates would reduce this to $4.50 per ton, so as to yield for the administration of the island the sum of $202,500, a saving to the owners of sugar, on the basis of the Dingley rates, of $1,147,500.

There were consumed by us last year some 2,000,000 tons of sugar, of which only about 600,000 tons were produced in the United States. It is obvious that the 45,000 tons imported from Porto Rico this year will have no appreciable effect upon the price of our domestic product, nor will the island, if cultivated to its full capacity, yield sugar sufficient to concern our domestic producers.

The tobacco crop is estimated at 4,000,000 pounds per annum, and under the existing rates will pay a duty of 35 cents per pound, or $1,400,000. On a basis of 15 per cent of the present rates, or 5¼ cents per pound, the duty will yield $210,000. The amount of tobacco which would be imported from Porto Rico if the entire crop were sent here would have no perceptible impression upon the tobacco interests of the United States, which amount to about 450,000,000 pounds per annum.

By reducing the duties now in force under the Dingley law to 15 per cent, it will be seen from what has preceded that there will be derived from the duty on tobacco and sugar the sum of $412,500, while under the rates fixed by the Dingley law the amount would be $2,750,000—a total reduction in Porto Rican sugar and tobacco of $2,337,500.

Aside from coffee, sugar, and tobacco, the island produces cattle and tropical fruits.

The total imports into the United States during the calendar year 1899, as heretofore observed, amounted to $3,416,681. Of this amount there was admitted free of duty $268,727, leaving the total dutiable imports $3,147,954. Estimated duties under the rates of the present tariff, $2,051,574.52.

The total value of the exports for the year ending December 31, 1899, was $3,499,356. Upon the basis of existing rates the duty thereon would have been $1,210,104.68. But by order of the President, breadstuffs, provisions, and some other articles necessary for the poor were placed upon the free list.

Duties will continue under existing law until reduced or repealed by act of Congress. By a reduction to 15 per cent, according to the present measure, the estimated duty on the basis of last year's commerce will be only $489,271.89.

THE HURRICANE.

A hurricane visited Porto Rico on the 8th of last August and wrought great havoc and destruction throughout the island, especially to the coffee plantations, and it is estimated that quite five years must elapse before there is a complete restoration of the coffee-growing industry. Other crops were seriously injured and the homes of many of the people destroyed. At the request of the President, the people of the United States made quick response, as they always do, and sent relief to the suffering. The War Department rendered prompt assistance to relieve the distress in no illiberal or parsimonious way.

MILITARY RÉGIME.

Porto Rico since the treaty of peace has been under military control. There has been a general improvement in administration throughout the island. Municipalities are better governed than under the Spanish régime; the insular government has been conducted with improved results and at greatly diminished cost. There has been an improvement in the civil and criminal judicial administration.

At the time of American occupancy the prisons were filled, some two thousand persons awaiting trial, being held upon trivial and often false complaint. Corruption and injustice attended the whole judicial administration. Under the improved system the number of jails has been reduced, speedy trial has been given the accused, and the number of persons awaiting trial has decreased nearly one-half. The number of judicial officers has been reduced and the cost of administering justice has been diminished and a large saving in money has been effected for the people.

A large number of useless and expensive officials, favorites of the Crown, has been dispensed with, and the civil expenditure has gradually been brought more and more to conform to the standard maintained in the States and Territories of the Union.

The task of changing from a monarchical to a republican system has been an arduous and tedious one. The habits of the people can not be changed in a day. The process of educating them to the new order of things, to the new duties and responsibilities, is necessarily slow and attended with difficulties.

It should be our policy to educate the Porto Ricans in public administration as rapidly as possible, and, so far as the best interests of the service will warrant, appoint them to fill their own public offices.

The Porto Ricans have shown a commendable willingness, in fact a desire, to conform to the views and methods of the authorities of the United States in the island.

A gentleman in the island familiar with the situation informs me that—

> Almost without exception the native Porto Ricans, and many Spaniards as well, made haste to express gratification over the change of government, and to avow their loyalty to the United States. All had a thorough understanding of what they had changed from, but very few had any sort of true conception of what they had changed to. The responsibility of citizenship was a new and novel idea to them, and it was plain to be seen that their expectations were paternal. They confidently relied on the Government of the United States to take care of them. From this condition there must be an awakening—rude, too, it may have to be—and then, at best, it will become effective only gradually, as generations pass away.
> I base this belief on the fact that the Government of Spain in her possessions has ever been paternal. She ground the natives to earth for centuries, wrenched from them in taxes, imposts, fines, or bribes the rewards of their toil, but ever held before them the assurance that they were the children of the Crown and its constant care. By keeping them in ignorance and poverty, with a plentiful display of military effulgence to awe them, * * * it is easy to understand why we found them in this condition and to appreciate the burden of lifting them up to a realization of their rights, duties, and responsibilities as American citizens. The wise legislator will recognize in this a stumbling block in the path of progress toward even a Territorial form of government for Porto Rico.

The whole policy and example of the Spanish régime was calculated to teach the natives immorality, dishonesty, deception, and chicanery. Spanish officials came here to accumulate wealth to carry back to Spain for future enjoyment. The quicker each could gather in the amount that would satisfy his cravings the sooner he could return home. Every possible department of government, with minor positions galore, was instituted, and Spaniards, almost without exception, filled the offices. If a native did creep in it was through sycophancy and fawning, and because he could be used to further the schemes of the chief. The Spanish administration was always rotten, woefully rotten. Money was extorted from the people in every way possible and boldly diverted to the enrichment of officials.

The selection of General Davis as military governor has been fully justified by the results. He has enlisted the cooperation of the Porto Ricans more and more in administering the affairs of the island. He appreciates the desirability of establishing a system of government in which the natives shall participate in the fullest possible measure. He has not been a military autocrat, but at all times a wise and conservative executive.

The reports of the governor-general as to the conditions and needs of the island have been ample, although the report as to the results of the hurricane made on the 5th of last September was found by his subsequent and more careful investigation to be incomplete. The deficiencies of that report were supplemented by his report to the Secretary of War on the 15th of December, after the President's annual message to Congress. In his later report he shows that the results of the hurricane were more destructive and conditions were less favorable than he had at first believed.

The President has desired that the Porto Ricans should be given the amplest possible measure of local self-government. In his annual message of December 5, 1899, he brought the subject earnestly and distinctly to the attention of Congress.

It is desirable—

said he—

that the government of the island under the law of belligerent right, now maintained through the executive department, should be superseded by an administration entirely civil in its nature. For present purposes I recommend that Congress pass a law for the organization of a temporary government, which shall provide for the appointment, by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, of a governor and such other officers as the general administration of the island may require, and that for legislative purposes upon subjects of a local nature not partaking of a Federal character a legislative council, composed partly of Porto Ricans and partly of citizens of the United States, shall be nominated and appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, their acts to be subject to the approval of the Congress or the President prior to going into effect. In the municipalities and other local subdivisions I recommend that the principle of local self-government be applied at once, so as to enable the intelligent citizens of the island to participate in their own government and to learn by practical experience the duties and requirements of a self-contained and self-governing people. I have not thought it wise to commit the entire government of the island to officers selected by the people, because I doubt whether in habits, training, and experience they are such as to fit them to exercise at once so large a degree of self-government; but it is my judgment and expectation that they will soon arrive at an attainment of experience and wisdom and self-control that will justify conferring upon them a much larger participation in the choice of their insular officers.

From the message it appeared that $392,342.63 had been expended through the War Department for the relief of the Porto Ricans.

TARIFF FOR REVENUE.

According to the best estimates thus far made it will require $2,000,000 for the ordinary civil administration of the island for the current year. The necessity for the construction of schoolhouses, the inauguration of a comprehensive system of education, and the construction and improvement of public roads all appeal strongly for the appropriation of money and more than $3,000,000 could be judiciously spent. The committee thought it wise and entirely just, without going into any comprehensive taxing system, that some measure should be provided for supplying the island with some portion of the revenue so obviously needed. It seemed to it that one method of providing a part of the revenue was through the customs offices. It recommends, therefore, a reduction in the existing tariff duties of 85 per cent, leaving in operation a duty of 15 per cent.

Some criticism is indulged in because the present measure does not completely abolish the existing duties, but merely makes a reduction of 85 per cent.

The committee regarded the Dingley rates as protective, and excessive under the circumstances, and the 15 per cent to which they are reduced as purely and simply a very moderate revenue duty. The amount realized is to be used for the support of the insular government. Every dollar is to be faithfully dedicated to the benefit of the Porto Ricans; not a cent is to be retained and used for the benefit of the United States.

Their commerce is not restricted in any wise for our benefit, but is to all intents and purposes absolutely unrestricted so far as we are concerned, the small duties being imposed for the purpose of raising needed revenue for the benefit of the people of the island. On the basis of last year's commerce a reduction of the Dingley rates to 15 per cent would yield, as I have heretofore observed, a total sum of about $439,271.89, or an average of less than 50 cents per capita of the people of Porto Rico. And yet there are those on the opposite side of the Chamber who challenge the duty as if it were conceived in an ungenerous spirit and for an unholy purpose.

The necessity of providing revenue for the support of the island was more manifest the more familiar we became with the actual conditions prevailing, and with what was needed to rehabilitate it. Upon a closer and more minute inquiry it seemed impossible, or at least inadvisable, to attempt to raise the entire amount required to support the insular administration by a direct tax upon the people.

The President recommended unrestricted free trade, leaving it, of course, to Congress, whose duty it is under the Constitution to provide revenue for the support of the administration of the island. It was deemed just and equitable by the committee charged with the responsibility in the premises to retain a slight duty upon imports and exports until a temporary government could be established competent to deal locally with the subject and to hold the entire revenue collected for the sole and exclusive benefit of Porto Rico.

This conclusion was not arrived at hastily and without the amplest investigation and most deliberate consideration.

The committee was at particular pains to ascertain from General Davis what revenues could be derived for the support of the local administration, the purpose being to provide revenue for temporary purposes, if it fairly could be done, without calling too largely upon the Treasury of the United States.

He testified that:

The budget for this year, prepared in May or June, contemplated an expenditure of $2,000,000 for the insular government. That does not include municipal expenditures. Two causes have reduced that figure. One, the continual adding of articles to the free list so as to bring the necessaries of life to the consumers at less cost.

The CHAIRMAN. Who has been making those additions?

General DAVIS. The Secretary of War, by order of the President, in order to cheapen the necessaries of life for the poor.

And I may pause here, sir, to say that from the beginning of the Spanish war to the present hour nothing but the most generous treatment has been accorded by the President to those who, by the chance of war, have come within our control.

General Davis further testified that because of the industrial depression, intensified by the hurricane of last August, that:

The expected income from customs alone of one and one-half millions will probably very little exceed a million; it may reach a million two hundred thousand. I do not think it can exceed that. Half a million was expected from internal taxation of various kinds, included in which is a hundred thousand of back taxes owed during different years under Spanish control. But the destruction caused by the storm, and the industrial depression, has made it impossible for a great many of the people to pay their taxes. It is not likely that on that item more than $250,000 can be collected this year. Judging from the capacity of the island to pay taxes, and on the basis of present tariff rates and the condition of their industries, I should say it would be imprudent to expect to obtain more than a million and a half from all sources.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Suppose we should repeal the tariff, so as to have free trade with the United States?

General DAVIS. That would cut it still more.

Mr. PETTIGREW. How much?

General DAVIS. It would cut it about in two.

Mr. NELSON. What does your plan contemplate in regard to customs and internal-revenue taxes. Are they to go into the general fund, or be devoted exclusively to that country?

General DAVIS. It is, of course, immaterial where the money comes from, but they must have a large revenue to administer the affairs of government. My suggestion is that all collections inure to the country; but I am looking to see the sources from which a revenue can be obtained. A general system of taxation to produce revenue enough to carry on the government would amount to confiscation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can you collect revenue enough to maintain the government?

General DAVIS. Not for two or three years on any basis.

General Davis was asked by Mr. NELSON:

Have you any system of taxation akin to our internal-revenue taxation?

General DAVIS. Only on two articles. One, the liquor tax, of which I have spoken, of 3 cents a liter, and the other a tax on matches, the manufacture of matches.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you levy the tax readily, or with difficulty?

General DAVIS. With difficulty; no man pays his tax readily.

Shall we further increase taxes on the articles named, or enter upon an enlarged system of direct taxation pending the formation of a local government? An elaborate internal-revenue system and the requisite machinery for making it effective is a work requiring time and intelligent attention. That is a work which more properly should be left to the citizens of the island. Justice demands that we confer upon the Porto Ricans at the earliest moment possible the requisite authority to levy such internal taxes as their necessities require or they may see fit. But may we not in the meantime, in absolute justice to them, without contravening our constitutional or moral obligations, continue a slight tariff duty under which a part of the revenue may be raised? And if we do it who can call in question the integrity of our purpose, or hold the act to be un-American or as wanting in the fundamental elements of justice and right? No one, Mr. President, can question the fact that such an act is founded in absolute equity.

How, Mr. President, are the revenues required for the support of the insular administration to be obtained? Obviously in one of four ways. First, by an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States; second, by a loan; third, by direct taxation in the island; fourth, by the imposition of tariff duties.

The first method proposed, namely, a direct appropriation by the United States, is to be adopted only in the event there is no other just and equitable means of providing the requisite revenue. As heretofore observed, the people of the United States have already liberally contributed from their Treasury for the benefit of the Porto Ricans. They have done it with a generous hand, as they always do when mercy requires it. They are willing to do more when occasion demands, but in working out the Porto Rican problem it must not be understood that the Porto Ricans are to be treated as mendicants, as mere helpless wards, always dependent upon the bounty and charity of the people of the United States. They must bear their full share of the burdens of civil government according to their capacity, be that great or small, and there is every reason to believe that they are perfectly ready and willing to do this.

The second method of supplying the insular treasury, namely, by a loan, can not be made effective until an insular government is erected upon the island. Congress is now engaged, and has been since its attention was invited to the subject by the President in his annual message, in devising a form of government endowed with executive, legislative, and judicial functions suited to the needs and capacities of the people of Porto Rico. Until such a government is created there will be no power to authorize an issue and sale of bonds to meet the present urgent necessities.

The third plan which has been proposed is impracticable for the reasons heretofore indicated. The imposition of additional direct taxes would, in the opinion of General Davis, amount practically to confiscation. Then there is wanting the necessary local machinery for devising a scientific and just system of direct taxation.

The fourth plan which has been proposed is that which for more than a century has been the most acceptable method in the United States, and that is through the imposition of tariff duties. This is known as the indirect method. This revenue is collected at the custom-houses upon goods and commodities passing through them.

I will not pause to consider the question as to whether the exporter or the consumer pays the tax.

The Dingley law was enacted before the Spanish-American war and has been in full force since then and is in force to-day with respect to imports from Porto Rico. The duties collected under this law since the evacuation of the Spanish forces on the 15th of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900, amount to $2,095,455.88. Under a law recently enacted this sum has been placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Porto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, for public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein, until otherwise provided by law. Future duties collected are to be placed at the disposal of the President in the manner as above.

It has been ungenerously charged elsewhere that the amount appropriated is to be used in the payment of large salaries to unnecessary American officials. The charge is scarcely worth the answer. The history of the administration of the island is a sharp denial of the charge. Under Spanish rule there were twenty-one officers in the island drawing salaries of $4,000 a year. Under the present administration there are but two receiving this salary. The Spanish governor of the island received a salary of $12,000 per year, which was paid by the people. General Davis, the present military governor, is paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Other military officers engaged in the civil administration are likewise paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The civil list has been very greatly reduced.

It will be interesting to observe in this connection how, according to the testimony of General Davis, Spain diverted the revenues of the island from proper uses.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Under Spanish authority were the revenues derived from the tariff and internal taxes in the island devoted to the general government of the island entirely?

General DAVIS. Not entirely. About half a million were sent to Spain to pay the expenses of her ministry of the colonies; about a million went to the army in the island, and 160,000 or 170,000 pesos to the support of the clergy.

Small duties have been imposed upon many articles imported into Porto Rico for the benefit of the insular administration. In order that the necessaries of life might be secured as cheaply as possible, for the benefit of the poor, the President directed that the following, among other articles, should be admitted into the island free: Flour, rice, codfish, pork, bacon, fresh beef and mutton.

It is obvious at the present time that the duty upon the existing stocks of sugar and tobacco in Porto Rico will be paid by the large planters and by the sugar and tobacco trusts of the United States; that the burden will not in anywise fall upon the mass of the people of Porto Rico.

The statement has been made that the existing duties have resulted in the reduction of the wages of the laborers on the plantations. Such a statement has been repeatedly made upon the floor of the Senate. It is not supported, however, by the testimony before the committee in charge of the pending bill.

The committee in the other branch of Congress, upon which devolves the duty of originating revenue measures for the support of the Government, proposed a reduction of the duties provided by the existing Dingley law upon imports into the United States from Porto Rico to 15 per cent of such duties, and it likewise provided that a duty of 15 per cent of the Dingley rates should be imposed upon certain articles and commodities imported into Porto Rico from the United States. The duties imposed were for the purpose of raising a part of the revenue required for the support of the insular administration.

It will be observed that this method of raising revenue is quite in accordance with the recommendations made by General Davis. Said he:

The island must, it is supposed, ultimately derive its principal revenue from internal taxation, but this can not be until a new scheme of taxation for the whole island can be worked out. This work requires very careful consideration and can not be properly done until the general policy to be pursued with respect to the future status of Porto Rico is known.

While recommending that trade should be left as free as possible with the United States, he clearly contemplated the necessity of the present retention of some customs duties, and he so advised Congress. Said he:

It is recommended that the trade between the United States and the island be left as free as possible, and that the customs revenues collected here be left to the island temporarily as an income for local expenditure. As soon as a new local internal-revenue tax law can be framed and put into operation, the custom-house collections would inure to the General Treasury, but for a few years it will be very difficult to balance the budget without this aid.

The proposition is to make the island self-supporting, and to maintain all services here, including posts and quarantine, as a charge against local revenues; to extend the existing wagon roads and railroads, to build hospitals, schools, and asylums, to deepen the harbors, to extend or create dock facilities, and to foster and promote the general welfare by utilizing for this purpose all available resources as well as the proceeds of wisely placed loans.

Henry K. Carroll, special commissioner for the United States to Porto Rico, in his full and able report, says with reference to Porto Rican affairs, among other things:

The taxes need a complete readjustment. The main dependence has been on the customs revenue, and must continue to be until the future government of the island is determined. The estimates of receipts for the year ending June 30, 1898, amounted for both the government and the provincial deputation to $5,157,200.

Of this amount $3,377,900 was derived from customs.

Said he, further:

It must be remembered * * * that large sums will be needed almost immediately for the public schools and for various internal improvements indispensable to the development of Porto Rico. Fortunately there is no debt, so far as can be learned; surpluses have been the rule in the insular accounts, though they do not seem to have been carried over, but used for Spanish exigencies in Cuba and elsewhere.

It would seem to be prudent not to revise the Porto Rican tariff so as very greatly to reduce the customs revenue, at least for the period ad interim.

Mr. Carroll spoke from a thorough and careful investigation of the commercial conditions existing in Porto Rico, and concurs in the conclusion reached by the committee that during the period of transition from a military government to a civil government a portion of the revenue to meet insular requirements should be derived from the customs.

TRUSTS ARE OPPOSED TO DUTIES.

The statement has been frequently made that the duties were modified and imposed at the dictation of the sugar and tobacco trusts. Those on the opposite side of the Chamber have frequently referred to the action of the committee as having been inspired by some mysterious, occult influence for an obvious purpose.

These trusts have so offended against the public interest and so aroused popular resentment that nothing should be done in the premises either at their suggestion or for their especial benefit. While the subject is still within our control we should know, so far as possible, whether these statements are true or whether they are mere idle and unfounded assertions.

Let us briefly analyze the situation. In what way would they be interested? They can not be concerned certainly in the imposition of duties upon commodities entering the island, for they neither ship sugar nor tobacco nor any other commodity into it so far as we are advised. Therefore, whether a duty be imposed or not upon such articles as enter the island is a matter of no possible concern to them.

It is quite obvious also that whether a duty is imposed upon coffee, which constitutes, as before observed, by far the larger part of the exports from the island, or other articles, excepting sugar and tobacco, exported from the island to the ports of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and elsewhere, is alike a matter of no possible interest to them.

Their interest, therefore, if there be any, is limited to the two articles—sugar and tobacco—which are exported to the United States.

The sugar trust, as we are advised, is interested chiefly, if not exclusively, in the refining of sugar. It requires the raw sugar which is produced in the United States, in Porto Rico, and other countries. These sugars are refined for domestic use.

Is it, therefore, interested in the question as to whether raw sugar purchased in Porto Rico shall be admitted into the United States free or with a tariff of 15 per cent of the Dingley rates imposed upon it?

The least observant mind must perceive that it is interested in the absolute free admission of raw sugar, and that it is, in the very nature of things, opposed to the imposition of any duty whatever. The suggestion, therefore, that the sugar trust could have inspired a duty on raw sugar must originate with those who have entirely misconceived the interest of the trust. It is inconceivable that it would advocate the imposition of a duty upon its raw product, so as to increase the price thereof to itself, unless we attribute to it less sagacity than it is supposed to possess.

It is estimated that there are at present in Porto Rico some ten thousand tons or more of raw sugar awaiting shipment to the United States upon the reduction or entire removal of the Dingley rates.

A large quantity is said to be stored in the bonded warehouses of New York to be held pending action upon existing duties.

If a duty of 15 per cent of the Dingley rates is paid upon this sugar and other sugars which are purchased by the trust and those in like interest, who will be the beneficiary; that is to say, for whose benefit is the money paid at the custom-house? It will not go into the Treasury of the United States, but will be used for the exclusive benefit of Porto Rico. This contribution for the support of the insular government will not be made by the masses of the people, but will be contributed, in a very large measure, by the sugar trust, or by the wealthy Spanish importers. General Davis informs us that: "A large part of the mercantile and exporting houses are owned and conducted by Spaniards, men who, under the treaty, preserve their Spanish nationality."

What is said with respect to the sugar trust applies with equal force to the tobacco trust. It is interested, if at all, in the absolute free admission of tobacco. It is, like the sugar trust, interested directly in having tobacco, its raw material, raised and delivered at its factories at the lowest possible price. The exaction of any duty whatever at the custom-house is directly opposed to its selfish interests. The removal of the entire duty and unrestricted free trade would undoubtedly meet with its cordial and enthusiastic approval. Can there be the remotest possible ground to doubt this?

The tobacco producers in this country who are hostile to the trust are the farmers, who would naturally favor a duty and oppose the free admission of tobacco. They desire a protective rate, yet it will be found, I believe, that the amount of tobacco produced in Porto Rico will be so inconsiderable compared with the vast amount required and consumed in the United States as to have practically no prejudicial influence whatever upon the tobacco-growing interest in this country.

A few weeks ago a suit was brought against the collector of customs in the city of New York to recover some two million dollars collected on imports from Porto Rico, upon the ground that the Constitution extended to Porto Rico, and that the duties could not be lawfully collected. It will be instructive to note who are the plaintiffs suing. They are Lawrence, Turnure & Co., American Sugar Refining Company, L. W. & P. Armstrong, Muller, Schall & Co., John Farr, and Melchor, Armstrong & Dessau. One of the principal parties, it will be seen, is the American Sugar Refining Company, which is the corporate name of the sugar trust. Of the amount collected, 90 per cent, or some eighteen hundred thousand dollars, represents the duties paid on sugar and tobacco.

To maintain the suit, the sugar trust denies the constitutional power of the United States to collect any duty whatever. There are those in this Chamber, as heretofore observed, who have openly or by insinuation suggested that the small duty which is to remain upon sugar has been dictated by the trust. Strangely enough, the opposition would have us believe that while the trust was in the courts denying the constitutional power of Congress to impose any duties upon the raw sugars imported by it at New York, it was in Washington advocating before Congress the imposition of a duty upon sugar. I do not believe that anyone will fail to understand how utterly contradictory and absurd the proposition is.

The only legislation suggested in the present Congress which was in the interest of the sugar and tobacco trusts was proposed by the honorable senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who, on the 15th day of this month, introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill proposing:

> That all duties collected to this date upon articles imported into the United States from Porto Rico since the 11th day of April, 1899, the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace between Spain and the United States, be returned to the persons from whom they were collected, and from and after the passage of this act no duties shall be collected on articles coming from Porto Rico.

If the Senator's amendment had been adopted, the $2,000,000 collected on imports from Porto Rico would be returned to the sugar trust and other importers now suing the Government.

The money collected from the trusts and importers in New York has recently been appropriated by act of Congress and will in a few days be sent to Porto Rico, to be expended in public works, in the cause of education, and in granting relief to the poor people requiring it.

It must be perfectly clear, therefore, that the statements made and the insinuations indulged in by the opposite side of the Chamber, to the effect that some subtle and mysterious influence emanating from these two trusts dictated and changed the policy from free sugar and tobacco to a small duty upon them, are unworthy of a moment's consideration. Whoever professes to believe that these trusts in any way, shape, or manner could have influenced the retention of any duty upon their raw products can not deceive anyone, unless it be themselves.

For one, Mr. President, I would regard myself recreant to the trust committed to me and false to the best interests of the people of the United States if I did not by my vote compel these trusts and their allied interests to pay some part of maintaining the Porto Rican government, which they do pay under the duty upon their raw products, rather than increase the direct taxes upon the people in the island, or, in the alternative, appropriate it from the Treasury of the United States. Let us not delude ourselves; let no one be deceived, for the duty of $4.50 per ton which will be collected on sugar will not add a solitary dollar to the burden of the people of Porto Rico.

It should be observed that those who have been paying the full Dingley rates upon sugar have been paying at the rate of about $30 a ton. By the pending bill this is reduced to 15 per cent of existing rates, or to $4.50 per ton. One is a protective and the other a revenue duty. Every dollar collected is to be used for the support of the people of Porto Rico. If this duty is not collected, an equivalent amount will in all probability have to be paid directly out of the Treasury of the United States.

Shall the great staples, sugar and tobacco, pay nothing toward the support of the government of the island? If so, then we should admit them free. If, on the contrary, they should be taxed and made to contribute for governmental purposes, as all property is required to do in the various States and Territories of the Union, how shall the tax be imposed and collected?

By act of Congress now upon the statute books, by virtue of Republican, Democratic, and Populist votes, we send the Federal taxgatherer into Alaska and compel contribution from those engaged in various lines of business there; and by the same power and code of morals may we not compel the owners of sugar and tobacco in Porto Rico to pay some reasonable tax upon their products?

Can anyone successfully question our authority or the fairness of its exercise? If the tax is not imposed upon sugar and tobacco in the factories or warehouses in the island and they enter the customs-house untaxed, may we not impose a duty or tax upon them there?

The money is to be used in either case for the same purpose—the support of the insular government, construction of public roads and other public utilities, the erection of schoolhouses, and the like. In other words, does it matter materially whether we levy a tax of $4.50 a ton on sugar in the factory or impose a duty of $4.50 a ton at the customs-house?

Sir, it is the substance of the act and not its mere form which we should consider. Unless we are wanting in constitutional power we may compel sugar and tobacco as well as other articles of merchandise to pay just tribute to the Government which gives them protection, and whether the tribute is required of them in the form of excises or imposts is of no possible consequence.

And yet, Mr. President, there are some in Congress, well meaning and patriotic, who say that this act is not only unconstitutional but immoral; that it is violative of the principles for which our forefathers contended.

PRESENT POLICY UNLIKE THE POLICY OF GEORGE III.

The question before us is quite different from the one against which our forefathers so resolutely and successfully protested.

When George III imposed taxes without representation, there existed a system of colonial governments, with capacity to provide for the public necessities of the people. They were competent and capable of levying their own taxes. The taxation imposed by England was a part of her permanent policy—the assertion of a power to be exercised arbitrarily and without limit as to time, and the money to be raised would "increase the fees and salaries of the crown officers in the plantations and the pensions and sinecure places held by favorites in England," and to maintain a military establishment in the colonies.

On the other hand, Porto Rico is without capacity to provide for the public needs. The existing duties are to be reduced, and continue in force only until there shall be erected in the island a government capable of levying taxes for its support, and not to continue longer than two years in any event. The pending bill, which provides for the reduction of the Dingley duties to almost a nominal basis, provides for a most liberal form of government, under which the people of Porto Rico are to be given plenary power over the subject of their own revenue. The proposed duties are to meet a temporary exigency and are not a part of the permanent policy of the United States. Sir, there is not the slightest difficulty in differentiating the broad, liberal, unselfish purpose of the present bill from the narrow, sordid, and indefensible policy of George III.

PORTO RICAN LOBBY.

Mr. President, it has not escaped public attention that a lobby from Porto Rico has been maintained here during the consideration of the pending bill. It is headed by a British subject, a most admirable gentleman personally, who has been insistent for free trade between Porto Rico and the United States. His opinion has frequently appeared in print in criticism of the policy proposed. The gentleman in question is one of the largest producers of sugar in the island, having over $800,000 invested in his sugar enterprises. It is quite natural that he should desire that his product should reach the American market without any duty whatever, although the duty, if imposed, should be returned as soon as collected to help support the government of Porto Rico, which must be maintained at large expense for the protection of his and other like investments.

BILL JUSTIFIED AS A REVENUE MEASURE.

We rest the justification of the pending bill upon the broad and simple proposition that it is the duty of Congress to provide revenue for the territory belonging to it, and to provide it in a just and equitable manner. There is no power save and except Congress which can legislate for Porto Rico. For the time being the Congress sustains the relation to the island that the legislatures sustain to the several States and Territories. It is, of course, true that the Porto Ricans have no choice in its selection and have no representation in it, and yet, in the due and orderly operation of law recognized by the usages of mankind, it has become its duty to enact laws for their government. It is entirely within the competency of the Congress to legislate forever for them, but to do so would be in contravention of the genius of our institutions and contrary to the wishes of the Congress and the people.

It is the duty of Congress to provide a government for the people at the earliest date practicable, so that they may administer their own domestic affairs, but until then—and we trust that the time may be brief—Congress must provide revenue for the support of the administration of the island. It must make provision so far as it reasonably can that will enable the people to support the present honest and economical administration. No expressed or implied duty rests upon the Congress to provide for their public safety, public health, and their general welfare out of the Treasury of the United States, although the United States has spent and is spending a large sum of money for their support.

If the Congress proceeds with all reasonable dispatch, as it is doing, to erect an insular government, there can be no ground for impeaching its policy or purpose. It has no desire to impose any tax burdens upon the island or its people for a solitary day longer than is imperatively required. It desires to create and clothe a government with adequate powers, so that the citizens of the island may adopt and execute their own revenue policy. If the Congress was disposed to delay making provision for an insular government or would wholly refuse to provide one, and then should insist upon the imposition of taxes for the support of the people, there might be good ground for questioning its purpose or its wisdom.

UNWISE TO NOW EXTEND THE CONSTITUTION.

We are so familiar with the Constitution and have so long enjoyed its blessings that many of our friends are unable to see any reason why it should not be forthwith extended to Porto Rico, if it is not already there. There are those on the opposite side of the Chamber who profess to see in our refusal to immediately extend it some ulterior purpose, some drift toward imperialism—a much misunderstood and misapplied word. This could not occur to anyone who has studied the situation and who has familiarized himself with the history of the island and its present condition.

Assuming that the Constitution does not extend into newly acquired territory ex proprio vigore, is it now wise that it should be forthwith extended to Porto Rico?

Its extension will carry with it the right to trial by jury, one of its most beneficent provisions, it is true, the splendid fruit of Anglo-Saxon civilization. But are the people of Porto Rico prepared to appreciate and enjoy this right? We must determine the question not by mere sentiment, but by our best reason and sense. The committee charged with the consideration of the pending bill desired to extend to the Porto Ricans all the privileges enjoyed by the people of the United States, so far as possible, and were careful to ascertain whether our jury system could be safely extended to the island. They have taken testimony bearing directly upon the subject, for it is an important one, and from the best information obtained it would seem utterly impracticable and unwise to extend the system to the island at the present time.

Mr. Curtis, a member of the Insular Commission, which outlined a form of government, was very positive and strong in his belief that the extension of the jury system should not now be attempted. His testimony in brief was as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You did not extend the Constitution and laws of the United States?

Mr. CURTIS. Only as locally applicable there. We did not extend the right of trial by jury for this reason, that we thought the people were not ready for it. We found that if Congress legislated trial by jury must take place, even before justices of the peace, where $20 or more was involved. We found that foreigners were not put on juries in this country. To make a jury of 12 persons out of those ignorant peons who have lived in a country where bribery is at a premium and favoritism is a good thing—compelling trial by jury, as the Supreme Court had held necessary in the case of the District of Columbia and in all Territories, in such courts would make a trial in the courts of justice a farce. But in the Federal court we provided for a jury to be selected largely in the manner I understand General Davis selects a jury now in the one provisional court. The marshal and the clerks of the court prepare lists of 200 or 300 men from all over the island, who are qualified, and they are drawn from a box. In that way, taking the whole island in, you could get one jury; but to get juries in all cases is, I think, without any possibility of being mistaken, making a farce of justice on the island, and the people so regard it. You can not find a man, hardly, who will not say that they are not ready for the jury system.

General Davis concurred fully in the conclusions reached by Mr. Curtis. Said he:

As respects a trial by jury I agree entirely with what Mr. Curtis says, that the attempt to utilize the jury system in Porto Rico should not now be made. They have no conception of it and can have none for many years, it seems to me. I think it would be imprudent to attempt to establish the grand jury and petit jury and trial by jury throughout these municipalities and remote districts in that ignorant population.

Shall we brush aside these opinions as entitled to no weight? Shall we be guided by the advice and opinion of competent men who are familiar with the situation and desire only the best results, or shall we plunge headlong into the future, heedless of existing conditions? Shall we attempt to strain a point to extend the Constitution when its extension must inevitably result in confusion and embarrassment? It seems to me, Mr. President, that it were inexcusable for us to adopt any happy-go-lucky policy in dealing with this delicate and important subject. The jury system goes with the Constitution. Unless the Constitution is already there, we should be slow to extend it in its full force by Congressional act in the face of the opinion of men of sound and disinterested judgment, who solemnly advise us that the jury system should not now be extended. Sir, let us first be right, and then go ahead.

If the system is withheld for the present we can extend it later, whenever, under the educational processes now being inaugurated in the island, the people are qualified to enjoy this among the greatest of all the privileges conferred by the Constitution. I grant that we should be quick to extend the full operation of that immortal instrument when, in the evolution of the Porto Ricans, they are fitted to enjoy its provisions.

It should further be borne in mind that the extension of the Constitution to Porto Rico necessarily carries with it our entire internal-revenue system of taxation. Would or would not this system prove beneficial to the people of the island? In the language of the Constitution, "duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States." The conditions existing in Porto Rico are so different from those existing here that it would be unwise, to say the least, to impose upon the Porto Ricans the rates which are imposed here, for they must rest upon them with special severity. According to General Davis, the increase of rates upon some important articles upon which taxes are now imposed in the island would amount to confiscation. The wisdom of reserving to the Porto Ricans so far as possible the supreme control over subjects of local taxation must be manifest to those who give the subject attentive consideration.

Furthermore, if the Constitution be now in Porto Rico, or if it be soon extended there, the coffee industry in the island will be seriously injured unless a duty is hereafter imposed upon coffee coming into the United States. Brazilian coffee is inferior in quality and value to it and would be imported into the island to the injury of the local industry unless excluded by a suitable duty. The present bill imposes a duty upon it of 5 cents per pound. This is solely in the interest of Porto Rico and does not prevent in any wise the free admission of coffee from the island and other coffee-producing countries into the United States.

From these observations it will appear that whether or not the Constitution should be extended to Porto Rico is a problem of grave and practical moment, and the question should receive the most careful and profound consideration.

HAWAII AND PORTO RICO.

It has been said that we impose no duties upon the commerce between Hawaii and the United States, and that a different course should not now be pursued with respect to Porto Rico.

It is well to bear in mind the clear distinction between the respective situations of Hawaii and Porto Rico. The former came to us with an organized, self-supporting republican form of government. It had the requisite laws and machinery for its own support without drawing upon the Treasury of the United States. There was no period in Hawaii, as there is in Porto Rico, when there was no government having jurisdiction over the entire island. In the one case it was not necessary to provide revenue for the support of the government, while in the other case it is.

Mr. MASON. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should make a suggestion?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I would prefer that the Senator should not interrupt me now, if agreeable to him, but that he should wait until I conclude. I will gladly reply then to any inquiry he is pleased to make.

Mr. MASON. I only want to suggest that we paid the debts of Hawaii, amounting to something like $3,000,000, as I remember it; more than we pay to Puerto Rico.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That does not concern or alter the principle which I am considering. That is a mere matter of detail. Is the Senator through?

Mr. MASON. That is all I care to say.

Mr. SPOONER. That was a part of the bargain of annexation.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; that was embraced in the treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. That was a part of the contract of annexation.

ALASKA AND PORTO RICO.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There is no essential difference in the manner in which Congress treats Alaska and Porto Rico. Alaska is without organized government. Congress imposes taxes in that Territory different from those levied elsewhere, and without any representation. No one has thought that the Congress by so doing was violating the fundamental principles of our institutions or was arbitrarily and unjustly exercising the taxing power.

It will not have escaped attention that Congress at the last session enacted a law requiring persons and corporations doing business in the district of Alaska to obtain licenses for the purpose, and to pay therefor specific amounts per annum. Among the many pursuits embraced in the law for which license fees are to be paid are the following: Banks, $250; brokers, $100; billiard rooms, $15; breweries, $500; electric-light plants furnishing light or power for sale, $300; hotels, $50; jewelers, $25; quartz mills, $3 per stamp; meat markets, $15; railroads, $100 per mile upon each mile operated; sawmills, 10 cents per thousand feet upon the lumber sawed; theaters, $100. There was no party division upon the proposition. There was and is complete and absolute acquiescence in the power to do this and in the wisdom and justice of doing it.

The quality of this act does not differ in any respect from the retention of the small duties necessary in raising revenue for the temporary support of Porto Rico. In the case of Alaska it is the fixed and permanent policy of Congress to levy direct taxes for the support of the Government there and elsewhere. These taxes are local to Alaska alone. If the Constitution is in the Territory, the taxes imposed are laid in positive violation of the provision of the Constitution which requires uniformity of taxation throughout the United States, and are therefore unconstitutional and void. There is no reason why the residents in Alaska should not share the burden of government and not cast it upon the people of the United States, and there is no more reason why the good people of the United States should do more for Porto Rico than they should do for Alaska. What is warranted by the law in Alaska, what is lawful and equitable there, is none the less justified and defensible in Porto Rico.

The people of Alaska since 1867 have been obliged to pay import duties which were imposed upon them by Congress without representation. It is true they have paid no duties upon goods of the United States going into Alaska. There has been no necessity for requiring them to do so.

It is unnecessary to dwell upon similar legislation with respect to the Indian Territory and other Territories belonging to the United States. So far as I am advised, no one upon this floor has called in question its absolute validity, and the present contention of our friends in opposition to the effect that the Constitution extends by its own force into all the territory belonging to the United States would seem to be an afterthought. If the Constitution is in Alaska and in the Indian Territory and in other Territories, the direct taxes imposed by the Congress, without partisan division, were certainly ill advised and unlawful.

PORTO RICO TO CONTROL HER OWN REVENUE SYSTEM.

It is the purpose of the pending measure to give to Porto Rico the entire control of her own revenue affairs and at the earliest moment practicable.

It is provided that the customs duties contemplated by the pending measure shall cease absolutely on the 1st day of March, 1902, and that whenever the legislative assembly has enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the insular government, upon notice of such fact to the President he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereafter all commerce between Porto Rico and the United States shall be free and unrestricted.

The pending bill provides a civil government, republican in form and ample, so far as we can now judge, for all present requirements. It establishes executive, legislative, and judicial departments. Provision is also made for a commission to carefully revise the laws and report such legislation as may be necessary to extend in fullest measure "the benefits of a republican form of government to all the inhabitants of Porto Rico."

CONCLUSION.

Mr. President, we should approach and consider the subject before us in no illiberal or dogmatic spirit. No matter what shades of opinion there are with respect to the best course to be pursued and the wisest measures to be adopted with reference to Porto Rico, there is perfect unity of purpose among all parties to provide the most liberal form of government and just laws under which her welfare may be promoted in the very highest degree.

Sir, the pending bill commands my judgment, my conscience; it shall have my vote.

It has not been given to finite mind to read the future of Porto Rico, but we may believe that under the inspiration of republican laws and the impetus of American example her people will grow in knowledge, strength, and power, and forever bless the great Republic.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of taking up any time of the Senate. I have heard the remarks of the Senator from Indiana with the greatest interest, and do not propose to controvert them at any length or, indeed, at all. It is well known that for my own part I do not believe at all in this system of building up a wall against commercial intercourse between the United States and Puerto Rico. I rise merely to say that the other day I made some observations upon the effect of this legislation as contrasted with certain treaties now pending before the Senate, observations which have attracted some degree of attention and in some degree have been challenged. I have prepared with considerable care two papers, Exhibits A and B, the one showing, in the first place, the free list as prescribed by the Dingley Act. It shows, also, in paragraphs printed in italics, the free list as extended by the orders of the War Department.

It will be borne in mind that the pending bill provides that there shall go on the free list as between the United States and Puerto Rico the articles in the free list of the Dingley statute, and in addition thereto the articles made free by the orders of the War Department. I have also prepared a paper, Exhibit B, which sets forth the stipulations of the pending treaties, by which it is shown and will be seen upon comparison with the statutes wherein and whereby the inhabitants of the British colonies in repeated instances will have an advantage over our own people of Puerto Rico. I ask that these papers may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the papers submitted by the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The papers referred to are as follows:

"A."

[Paragraphs printed in italics comprise articles not on free list of tariff act of 1897, but placed on free list by order of President.]

FREE LIST.

Mr. DAVIS. If entirely convenient to the Senator from Ohio, I desire to offer certain amendments to the pending bill. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me make an inquiry before any order is made. Does the Senator from Minnesota offer the amendment at this time with a view of having it discussed and disposed of now?

Mr. DAVIS. That was my intention.

Mr. FORAKER. I would prefer to get through with the committee amendments first. There was consent given that the committee amendments should be disposed of, and we are pretty nearly through with them, and if we can conclude them, then the Senator's amendment may be taken up next. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. DAVIS. How long, may I ask, will the consideration of the committee amendments probably take?

Mr. FORAKER. We are down to the thirty-first section. I do not know how much objection there will be, but I hope we may complete the reading of the bill by sections and at least develop whether there is to be opposition to some of the amendments.

Mr. DAVIS. Can I be assured that I shall have sufficient time to offer the amendment before the final vote is taken?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, certainly, so far as I have any control of the time. I have not the slightest objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota having given notice of his proposed amendment, it will be in order even when 4 o'clock is reached on Tuesday.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the arrangement to be different.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator's amendment can be voted upon.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood that at 4 o'clock on Tuesday the final vote was to be taken and amendments would be shut off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The final vote on the bill and all amendments of which notice shall have been previously given is to be taken at 4 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed, then, and lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. It has been printed. Let it be returned to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be returned to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. FORAKER. So many Senators have given notice of a desire to speak that I take advantage of this opportunity to ask unanimous consent that beginning at, say, 1 o'clock on Tuesday speeches be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. CULLOM. May I make a suggestion? I suggest that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock Monday and Tuesday both.

Mr. FORAKER. I made that suggestion to some Senators, and there was objection, and I did not press it.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will be done. Otherwise there will be Senators who desire to say something who will not have an opportunity.

Mr. FORAKER. I shall be very glad if we can meet at 11 o'clock on Monday and also on Tuesday.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that suggestion will prevail.

Mr. PETTUS. It will disarrange all of the committee work entirely to meet at 11 o'clock, and I hope it will not be done. We have our committee meetings already appointed, notice given of them, and important work to do, and I do not think it ought to be interfered with in that way.

Mr. FORAKER. Has the Senator from Alabama a committee meeting on Tuesday morning? That is the last day when this bill can be considered.

Mr. PETTUS. I have, and other Senators have also.

Mr. BATE. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not urge his objection. I find a great many Senators, five or six, who want to make speeches on Monday and Tuesday. Four have already given notice. I think it would be a convenience to them and no inconvenience to the Senate to come here on Monday at 11 o'clock, because very few committees meet on Monday, anyway. I hope the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio will be accepted, and let us meet at 11 o'clock both Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. CULLOM. I will submit a motion to that effect, if I have an opportunity. I hope the Senator from Ohio will ask unanimous consent that we may meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand I have asked unanimous consent, and if I have not, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate meet on Monday at 11 o'clock and also on Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope consent will be given.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTUS. There is objection, and I was going to state it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the end of it. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it in order to make a motion to that effect?

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. PETTUS. I claim the right to explain what I mean. Other Senators do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. PETTUS. The Judiciary Committee meets Monday. It has a large amount of very important work to do. The Committee on Privileges and Elections meet Tuesday, and they have sent word for persons in various parts of the United States to be here on that day. We have framed our business to meet the regular hours of the Senate, and gentlemen do not consider how much they interrupt other business when they change regular hours.

Mr. CULLOM. The only reason why I shall make the motion, if it is in order to make one, is that the final vote is to be taken on Tuesday at 4 o'clock, and, as the Senator from Tennessee has said, there are a number of Senators who desire to speak Monday and Tuesday and this is rather an exceptional case. I, of course, would not like to interrupt the business of committees ordinarily, but I think the Senator from Alabama, under the circumstances, might consent to this arrangement.

Mr. PETTUS. I suggest, if gentlemen want more time, to defer the time for a vote for a day or two days, or until they want to take a vote; but this way of changing hours is no economy. It is a waste of time.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that we may proceed with the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I rose during the discussion by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] to ask a question. I have given notice that I desire to speak after the routine business on Tuesday, which was the only hour I found open. I desire now, in less than two minutes, to ask a question to which some lawyer who is to speak upon the other side of this case will, I hope, reply.

There is no claim, and I shall make no claim when I announce my reason for voting against this bill, that Congress has not legislative power over the Territories. My contention is that the legislative power is limited by the Constitution. I am informed that the distinguished lawyer and Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is to speak upon this question on Monday. I have great respect for his judgment as a Senator and lawyer, and I want to call his attention to, and I want some explanation of, this point. I am anxious to understand the law. I understand there is a rule in the Senate that you must never mention the Constitution except once, and that is when you swear to support it, and that if you speak of it thereafter——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator must admit that that rule is violated every hour of every day in the session.

Mr. MASON. Yes; like every other rule of the Senate. They are made for the purpose of being violated.

There is a vast difference between what is proposed here and the taxes levied in Alaska upon theaters, circuses, hotels, etc., spoken of by the distinguished Senator from Indiana. The Constitution does not say taxes shall be uniform. It says, in Article I, section 8, that Congress has the power to lay and collect taxes, duties and excises, etc., but the limitation does not go to taxes. "But all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." If not uniform, then it must be levied, if it is an impost duty, under paragraph 2 of section 10 of the same article, which does provide that States may levy an impost duty, but only to the extent of executing its inspection laws.

When we levy this impost duty we do it either as a Congress or a legislature sitting for the Territory of Puerto Rico; and if we exercise it as we do by saying, "coming into Puerto Rico," we exercise it as the legislative power of Puerto Rico. That is clear. If we levy the impost duty and escape section 8 of Article I, we must do it under paragraph 2, which permits a State to levy impost duties. This is the language:

> No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.

Then, further—

> And the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States.

This bill provides that it shall not be for the benefit of the Treasury of the United States. It provides that it shall be set aside as a special fund in the hands of the President for this particular Territory. I ask the distinguished Senator, when he speaks on Monday, to say whether we levy this impost and export duty under the clause of the Constitution which delegates to Congress the power of levying an impost duty, or whether we levy it under the power conferred by this article, which says that a State or Territory may levy such duties; and, if under the one last mentioned, I ask him if a law is constitutional which provides that the net proceeds of such duties shall go to Puerto Rico, when the Constitution provides that the proceeds of a duty levied in that way must go to the Treasury of the United States and for the benefit of the United States?

I am not contending, and I shall not contend, and I do not consider it necessary for the argument I purpose to make, that the Constitution of its own vigor extends to the Territories. Whether or not I think so as a lawyer will not be discussed, but I ask the Senator to find me one case where the Supreme Court of the United States has said that you may make a law in this Congress that goes to any place in the world and governs any peoples in the world that is in violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Chief Justice Marshall said in the case I have cited to you that wherever our government goes this restriction of the Constitution goes with it; in any place, he says. It may be contended, possibly it will be, that under this other branch of the Constitution we are going to levy this duty; but if you do that, then I insist you are governed by the restriction of the Constitution which says that the net proceeds of any such impost duty shall go to the Government and not the State or Territory which levies it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of the request made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that speeches on Tuesday shall be limited to fifteen minutes, I think I ought to state that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has given notice that he desires to address the Senate on that day after the routine business, and I have asked the Chair to recognize me at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Illinois. But I think it proper to state that if it is the wish of the Senate to proceed as indicated by the Senator from Ohio, I shall not insist on speaking at that time.

The Senator from Georgia asks me why I do not speak on Monday. I understand that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] all expect to address the Senate on that day, and for a young man, unused to the Senate, I did not particularly desire to follow so many distinguished Senators, even if there were time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was to insert as a new section the following:

THE JUDICIARY.

SEC. 31. That the judicial power shall be vested in the courts and tribunals of Puerto Rico as already established and now in operation, including municipal courts, under and by virtue of General Orders, No. 118, as promulgated by Brigadier-General Davis, United States Volunteers, August 16, 1899, and including also the police courts established by General Orders, No. 105, promulgated November 29, 1899, by Brigadier-General Davis, United States Volunteers, and the laws and ordinances of Puerto Rico and the municipalities thereof in force, so far as the same are not in conflict herewith, all which courts and tribunals are hereby continued. The jurisdiction of said courts and the form of procedure in them, and the various officials and attachés thereof, respectively, shall be the same as defined and prescribed in and by said laws and ordinances, and said General Orders, Nos. 118 and 105, until otherwise provided by law: Provided, however, That the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court and the marshal thereof shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the judges of the district courts shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the executive council, and all other officials and attachés of all the other courts shall be chosen as may be directed by the legislative assembly, which shall have authority to legislate from time to time as it may see fit with respect to said courts, and any others they may deem it advisable to establish, their organization, the number of judges and officials and attachés for each, their jurisdiction, their procedure, and all other matters affecting them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 32. That Puerto Rico shall constitute a judicial district to be called "the district of Puerto Rico." The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal for said district, each for a term of four years, unless sooner removed by the President. The district court for said district shall be called the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico and shall have power to appoint all necessary officials and assistants, including a clerk, an interpreter, and such commissioners as may be necessary, who shall have like power and duties as are exercised and performed by commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States, and shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizant in the circuit courts of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court.

The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error and certiorari, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in such matters and proceedings as between the district court of the United States and the courts of Puerto Rico. Regular terms of said court shall be held at San Juan, commencing on the second Monday in April and October of each year, and also at Ponce on the second Monday in January of each year, and special terms may be held at Mayaguez at such other stated times as said judge may deem expedient. All pleadings and proceedings in said court shall be conducted in the English language.

The United States district court hereby established shall be the successor to the United States provisional court established by General Orders, No. 88, promulgated by Brigadier-General Davis, United States Volunteers, and shall take possession of all records of that court, and take jurisdiction of all cases and proceedings pending therein, and said United States provisional court is hereby discontinued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 33. That writs of error and appeals from the final decisions of the supreme court of Puerto Rico and the district court of the United States shall be allowed and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner and under the same regulations and in the same cases as from the supreme courts of the Territories of the United States; and such writs of error and appeal shall be allowed in all cases where the Constitution of the United States, or a treaty thereof, or an act of Congress is brought in question and the right claimed thereunder is denied; and the supreme and district courts of Puerto Rico and the respective judges thereof may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are grantable by the judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States. All such proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States shall be conducted in the English language.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 34. That the salaries of all officials of Puerto Rico not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall be such, and be so paid out of the revenues of Puerto Rico, as the executive council shall from time to time determine: Provided, however, That the salary of no officer shall be either increased or diminished during his term of office. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials of Puerto Rico, appointed as herein provided by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall also be paid out of the revenues of Puerto Rico on the warrant of the auditor, countersigned by the governor.

The annual salaries of the officials appointed by the President, and so to be paid, shall be as follows:

The governor, $8,000; in addition thereto he shall be entitled to the occupancy of the buildings heretofore used by the chief executive of Puerto Rico, with the furniture and effects therein, free of rental.

The secretary, $4,000.
The attorney-general, $4,000.
The treasurer, $5,000.
The auditor, $4,000.
The commissioner of the interior, $4,000.
The commissioner of education, $3,000.
The chief justice of the supreme court, $5,000.
The associate justices of the supreme court (each), $4,500.
The marshal of the supreme court, $3,000.
The United States district judge, $5,000.
The United States district attorney, $4,000.
The United States district marshal, $3,500.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio why the salary of the governor is put at the figure that it is. I understand that the original proposition was $10,000. That has now been modified to $8,000. I understand that is a great deal more than the governors of any of the Territories receive, but I suppose there is reason for it. However, I have not been advised of that reason, and I take the liberty of asking the Senator from Ohio by what they were guided in fixing this amount.

Mr. FORAKER. We were guided in fixing that amount by the fact that the governor of Puerto Rico will have a great deal more work to do than falls to the lot ordinarily of a governor of a Territory. He will be there at the head of a million people, enough, as the Senator thinks, to constitute a State, if other things were equal.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly enough, as he thinks, to put them in a state of pupilage for statehood. I mean make them a Territory.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. As he suggested this morning. This is not to be compared, as the committee thought, to the ordinary case of a Territory where there would be perhaps only a few thousand people—100,000, or possibly 200,000 at the most. I do not know of any Territory that has that much of a population. Ordinarily we establish a Territorial government when there are but 40,000 or 50,000 people, and perhaps less than that number. In the case of Louisiana and, of course, in the early Territorial governments we established them when there were very few people in the Territory and when conditions were such that they could not pay very large salaries.

But, Mr. President, here is an island which we are giving all these revenues to, and in that way providing for the administration of government, an island where they will be able to pay, and where, until the government is established and in successful operation, the man who is at the head of affairs will have constant and the most arduous labors to perform, requiring the very highest order of ability. It was thought by the committee that was not, under all the circumstances, an unreasonable salary to pay. It was thought that he would earn as large a salary as the governor of any State in the Union would earn, measured by the work he would have to do and by the results that we would expect him to accomplish. The salaries in most of the large States of the Union are larger than the salary named here for this governor. Besides, this is a much less salary than has been paid heretofore to the chief executive officer of the island, and it is a salary that the people of the island are willing to pay, so far as we are advised. No objection coming from the people who pay it, we thought it might be allowed. It is to be paid by the island out of the revenues provided by this act.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I have proposed an amendment to this section, which has been on file for several weeks. It is to strike out lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, on page 26.

The bill in this particular section provides for the payment of the salaries of the officers of Puerto Rico, and that is well enough. The officers whose salaries I propose to strike out of this section are not officers of Puerto Rico in any proper sense—not in any sense whatever. They are not officers of Puerto Rico; they are officers of the United States in Puerto Rico. They are not charged with any of the business of Puerto Rico. They are charged with the duties which pertain, and pertain alone, to the courts of the United States. Their duties do not concern Puerto Rico any more than the circuit court of the United States in the State of New York concerns the State of New York. It is not put there to execute the laws of New York at all. That is not the purpose of it. It is not a court in any sense pertaining to New York. It is a court organized by the United States to transact its business in New York. There is no more propriety in having the people of Puerto Rico pay these salaries than there is to have the State of Pennsylvania pay the salaries of the United States judges there. Therefore I move to strike it out.

While on this subject, Mr. President, I will just suggest to the Senator from Ohio who has charge of this bill, and who seems to mold it at his will, that if he will make a genuine United States district court in Puerto Rico, give it all the powers of a district court, all the powers of a circuit court, and make it a genuine constitutional court, or give it the constitutional term of the judges, it would confer more benefit on the island than almost anything else he could do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves to strike out certain lines in the amendment which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, in the following words:

The United States district judge, $5,000.
The United States district attorney, $4,000.
The United States district marshal, $3,500.

Mr. PETTUS. In order that this amendment may not be misunderstood, I move to strike it out of this section, because the preceding part of the section provides that all these salaries shall be paid out of the treasury of Puerto Rico. I do not make this motion with a view of preventing these salaries from being paid at all. I want to get them out of this section because this section is the one which provides for the payment of salaries to the officers of Puerto Rico. When it is once out of this section there can probably be a provision inserted that they shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and then I should have no objection to the salaries.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think there is an eminent propriety in leaving section 34 as it is. It is provided in this bill that all the revenues collected there, although collected by United States officials—that is, by officials appointed by the President—all tariff duties collected in the island, all taxes of every kind, shall be turned over to the insular treasury for the support of that government; and inasmuch as we give them all these revenues, amounting to millions of dollars, there is no hardship in requiring them to pay the salaries of officials who conduct the government and execute the law of Congress in regard to their government. So I hope the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 35. That the provisions of the foregoing section shall not apply to the municipal officials. Their salaries and the compensation of their deputies, assistants, and other help, as well as all other expenses incurred by the municipalities, shall be paid out of the municipal revenues in such manner as the legislative assembly shall provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 36. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from Puerto Rico; but taxes and assessments on property, and license fees for franchises, privileges, and concessions may be imposed for the purposes of the insular and municipal governments, respectively, as may be provided and defined by act of the legislative assembly; and where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by Puerto Rico or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law to provide for expenditures authorized by law, and to protect the public credit, and to reimburse the United States for any moneys which have been or may be expended out of the emergency fund of the War Department for the relief of the industrial conditions of Puerto Rico caused by the hurricane of August 8, 1899: Provided, however, That no public indebtedness of Puerto Rico or of any municipality thereof shall be authorized or allowed in excess of 10 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out of the section, where it speaks of taxation, in line 9, page 27, the word "ten" and insert "five." I think 5 per cent is quite enough.

Mr. FORAKER. I think that 10 is perhaps higher than it ought to be. The situation there is somewhat peculiar, though. I think 7 per cent will perhaps be a good compromise. I appreciate what the Senator has in his mind, and if he will agree upon 7 per cent, I think that would be enough. Five is high enough ordinarily, but just now they have got to issue bonds to a considerable amount.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not this bill exhaust itself in two years?

Mr. FORAKER. By this bill there will be a commission appointed, and they must make a report here at the end of one year after its passage, and the commission are to frame a government, etc.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think there is any State in the Union that authorizes the bonding of the property of the State or Territory at a rate to exceed 5 per cent of the assessed valuation. That is very high.

Mr. FORAKER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that General Davis and all others agree that there should be a loan made at once of something like $10,000,000, and that would be 10 per cent of $100,000,000. That is what I had in view when I drafted the provision.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator fix the minimum rate of interest on the bonds?

Mr. FORAKER. All that will be subject to approval by Congress, I suppose. I did not try to fix any minimum rate. The governor and the executive council, I imagine, will be men to whom that can be safely intrusted.

Mr. ALLEN. The only thing I have in mind is to prevent an irresponsible tentative government flooding the island with long-time bonds at high rates of interest.

Mr. FORAKER. I appreciate what is in the Senator's mind and I fully sympathize with his thought. I put it at 10 per cent simply because the testimony was that there would be an immediate necessity for a loan of something like $10,000,000. The necessities were pointed out by General Davis in his testimony, and I have great faith in all that he said. But I think if 7 per cent were the limit, it would perhaps be enough.

Mr. ALLEN. I will consent to a modification and make it 7 per cent.

Mr. FORAKER. I will accept that if the Senator moves that amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be 7 per cent. But I do wish the Senator would fix a limit to the length of time the bonds can run and fix a maximum rate of interest.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know enough about how their securities would be regarded in the market to undertake to deal with that in this law. I hope that the President will appoint a governor and executive council to whom that can be safely intrusted.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Is it in regard to this matter?

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. FORAKER. Then let this change be put in first.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish simply to state that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] has withdrawn his objection to meeting on Monday at 11 o'clock, and I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to strike out "ten" and insert "seven," in line 9, on page 27.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 37. That the qualified voters of Puerto Rico shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1900, and every two years thereafter, choose a resident commissioner to the United States, who shall be entitled to official recognition as such by all Departments, upon presentation to the Department of State of a certificate of election of the governor of Puerto Rico, and who shall be entitled to a salary, payable monthly by the United States, at the rate of $5,000 per annum: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide citizen of Puerto Rico, who is not 30 years of age, and who does not read and write the English language.

Mr. BACON. I do not know whether the Senator from Ohio desires to press that amendment now in the face of the fact that it will be opposed.

Mr. FORAKER. If it is likely to meet any extended opposition and extended debate, it may be passed over. I understand that there are Senators here who prefer that this amendment should not be adopted, but I hoped that they might not care to argue it, because it is only a part of what has been determined upon in other portions of the bill, and I thought they might be satisfied with voting against it.

Mr. BACON. I regard it as the most radical and vital section of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I shall be glad to pass it over, then, until Monday. I want to hurry through with everything we can agree upon in order that I may have a reprint of the bill.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. I hope the Senate will have time to take up that section on Monday, because, as I said, it is an extremely important one, and it makes two very radical changes. It is a new departure, so far as legislation in this country is concerned. One change is that it denominates these people as citizens of Puerto Rico and does not accord to them the privilege of citizenship. That is a repetition really of what is another section. Am I correct? I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that the language in that section is partially the same and covers the same ground as to citizenship as that in section 4, which has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I will pass this amendment over. I think that course would be better.

Mr. BACON. It also goes to the extent of denying to these people the right of representation by a Delegate, and provides for a commissioner in the place of a Delegate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed as section 37 will be passed over. The Secretary will read the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 38. That a commission, to consist of three members, at least one of whom shall be a native citizen of Puerto Rico, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to compile and revise the laws of Puerto Rico; also the various codes of procedure and systems of municipal government now in force, and to frame and report such legislation as may be necessary to make a simple, harmonious, and economical government, establish justice and secure its prompt and efficient administration, inaugurate a general system of education and public instruction, provide buildings and funds therefor, equalize and simplify taxation and all the methods of raising revenue, and make all other provisions that may be necessary to secure and extend the benefits of a republican form of government to all the inhabitants of Puerto Rico; and all the expenses of such commissioners, including all necessary clerks and other assistants that they may employ, and a salary to each member of the commission at the rate of $5,000 per annum, shall be allowed and paid out of the treasury of Puerto Rico as a part of the expenses of the government of Puerto Rico. And said commission shall make full and final report of all its proceedings and recommendations to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert, after the words "Puerto Rico," in line 12, page 28, the words "which shall be in the English language."

Mr. BACON. I do not think it would be proper to limit it to the English language. It would be very much in the condition of the lawmaker who hung his laws so high that the people could not read them.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me understand the amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. BACON. The laws certainly ought also to be published in Spanish, if we expect the people who are to be governed by them to understand them.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not my purpose to require a translation into the Spanish language. All official communications, in my judgment, ought to be in the English language, and all judicial procedure should be in the English language.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the laws of Puerto Rico, in view of the fact that 95 per cent of the people speak the Spanish language and no other, ought to be printed also in the Spanish language—that is, for the time being.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not object to that.

Mr. SPOONER. I remind the Senator from Ohio that for many years the laws of New Mexico were printed in both the Spanish and English languages.

Mr. FORAKER. What I was going to say is that I will agree to an amendment——

Mr. ALLEN. What I want is simply that the official copy shall be printed in English, and the judicial procedure. That is all.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that after the words "Puerto Rico" there be inserted "in both the English and Spanish languages."

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; shall be printed in both English and Spanish.

Mr. BACON. Where does the Senator propose to insert that?

Mr. FORAKER. After the words "Puerto Rico;" so as to read "to compile and revise the laws of Puerto Rico and prepare the same in both the English and Spanish languages."

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator that if inserted at that point, it would not include the other publications which are provided for in this section; it would not include those in the subsequent sentence to the effect that all of the publications which are to be made by this commission shall be in both the Spanish and in the English languages, because the Senator will perceive that there are a number of things required to be compiled by the commission which are not specified preceding line 12, but, on the contrary, they are specified subsequent to line 12.

Mr. FORAKER. If it will meet the approval of Senators, I will suggest that we add at the end of the section:

And all the proceedings of said commission shall be published in both the English and Spanish languages.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean by proceedings?

Mr. BACON. I think that is an objectionable word.

Mr. FORAKER. The proceedings of the commissioners would require the revising and the codifying of the laws and the codes of procedure and all the systems of jurisprudence, etc.

Mr. SPOONER. In order that when laid before the legislature and before the people, they may be intellectually accessible to all classes?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. I think the amendment I have suggested at the end of the section will meet the requirements of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 38 add:

And all the proceedings of the said commissioners shall be published in the English and Spanish languages.

Mr. CHANDLER. "Proceedings and recommendations."

Mr. BACON. Compilations.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought the word "proceedings" would cover everything.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Ohio will look he will see he uses the words "proceedings and recommendations" two lines before; and if he now provides that there shall be published in both languages only the proceedings, it would by implication exclude the recommendations, and the recommendations are the very things that ought to be in both languages.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, before we make any other suggestion, let us understand it. I do not suppose there is any necessity in having it reported to Congress in the Spanish language.

Mr. BACON. I will suggest to the Senator that he use the words "compilations, revisions." If used after the word "proceedings," in line 3, on page 29, they would cover the requirements, for the commission are required to compile and revise; consequently their work would consist of compilations and revisions.

Mr. FORAKER. But before that provision comes another duty which is imposed upon the commission; that is, of also compiling and revising the various codes; and the language employed would cover that.

Mr. BACON. The words "compilations, revisions," I think will answer. The commission do not legislate.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I will accept that suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I hardly see the necessity of the publication of the proceedings of a commission revising statutes.

Mr. FORAKER. I have withdrawn that and accepted the wording suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me, it has many times happened, and it has been very valuable, that where commissions were appointed to revise the statutes of a State they have reported their recommendations, and have accompanied their reports with explanatory notes as to what the law was, and the changes that had been made; and I think if the Senator—I hope that idea will commend itself to him—will change the language so as to embrace all reports the commission may make—that is, that when they recommend a provision they shall accompany it with explanatory notes showing the changes and the reasons for the changes—that will probably more effectually accomplish what the Senator desires than the language employed in the bill as it now stands.

Mr. FORAKER. I will direct the Senator's attention, if he will allow me, to the last sentence of that section, on page 29, which now reads:

And said commission shall make full and final report of all its proceedings and recommendations to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

Why not insert there—would it not answer the purpose?—the additional words "make a full and final report of all its proceedings, revisions, compilations, and recommendations in both the English and Spanish languages?"

Mr. SPOONER. As this report is to be made to Congress, and as we are to act upon it, we ought to be advised of the reasons which lead the commission to make changes—a statement of the law as it was and the reasons why they make their emendations.

Mr. FORAKER. With notes.

Mr. SPOONER. With explanatory notes.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. It would then read:

And said commission shall make full and final report, in both the English and Spanish languages, of all its proceedings, revisions, compilations, and recommendations, with explanatory notes, to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know what would be regarded as "proceedings" in contradistinction to "explanatory notes." Of course, when the commissioners meet they take the text of the law and discuss it from various standpoints, and they arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. BACON. Would it not be well to insert the word "record?"

Mr. SPOONER. This is the record. "Explanatory notes" covers all of that.

Mr. FORAKER. I think that will answer.

Mr. SPOONER. "Revisions, with explanatory notes," would cover it all.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I move, to meet the suggestion of Senators, on page 29, section 38, line 4, after the word "report," to insert "in both the English and Spanish languages;" then, in the same line, after the word "proceedings," to insert "revisions, compilations;" and in the same line, after the word "recommendations," to insert "with explanatory notes;" so that the sentence as amended would read as follows:

And said commission shall make full and final report, in both the English and Spanish languages, of all its proceedings, revisions, compilations, and recommendations, with explanatory notes, to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me a moment, it appears to me that it is almost impossible to make a record of the details of the proceedings of a commission to revise statutes. If the Senator will strike out the words "proceedings and," before the word "recommendations," in line 4, so that it will read "recommendations, with explanatory notes, showing the changes and the reasons therefor," that will give to us everything that will enable us to act intelligently upon the report of the commission.

Mr. FORAKER. Then you would have it read "in all its revisions, compilations, recommendations," etc.?

Mr. SPOONER. "With explanatory notes as to the changes, and the reasons therefor."

Mr. FORAKER. "With explanatory notes as to the changes and the reasons therefor?"

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose that information would be in the report, of course; but if that is satisfactory, I will insert the words in that form.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio to restate his last revision, so that we may understand it before voting upon it.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to ask the privilege of doing that. The proposition is to insert, in line 4, on page 29, section 38, after the word "report," the words "in both the English and Spanish languages;" in the same line, after the word "its," to strike out "proceedings" and at that place insert "revisions, compilations;" in the same line, after the word "recommendations," to insert "with explanatory notes as to the changes and the reasons therefor."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that amendment being disposed of—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not disposed of as yet.

Mr. BACON. I understood it was.

Mr. FORAKER. I agreed to it, so far as I was concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the clerks at the desk have not stated the amendment. The amendment will be stated to the Senate from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In section 38, on page 29, line 4, after the word "report," it is proposed to insert "in both the English and Spanish languages;" in the same line, after the word "its," to strike out "proceedings" and insert "revisions, compilations;" and in the same line, after the word "recommendations," to insert "with explanatory notes as to the changes and the reasons therefor;" so that the clause, if amended as proposed, would read:

And said commission shall make full and final report in both the English and Spanish languages of all its revisions, compilations, and recommendations, with explanatory notes as to the changes and the reasons therefor, to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that while that makes a very proper and satisfactory disposition of the manner in which the report shall be made and of the languages in which it shall be made, there still remains unprovided for in this section what I think is very important, to wit: That these compilations and revisions themselves—not simply the report of them, but the compilations and revisions themselves—should be published both in Spanish and in English; and I would suggest to the Senator that there ought to be language, if not at that particular place, at some other point in the section, which would make provision for this very essential requirement.

Mr. FORAKER. I supposed that was the proper interpretation of this language. The commission can not very well make a full report of the revisions and compilations without publishing the reports and compilations themselves. I think the provision as it stands covers the matter.

Mr. BACON. Of course it would be true that the commission would report to Congress in both languages; but does the Senator understand that that covers the publication which would be required for local use? Of course it is not necessary to report in both languages to Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. Until Congress takes final action upon the report of the commission, of course the acts recommended would not be the law, and I suppose there would be some changes made.

Mr. BACON. Possibly the latter suggestion of the Senator is the proper one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment inserting section 38 as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as section 39 the following:

SEC. 39. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of April, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment to that section, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 8, in section 39, after the words "day of," it is proposed to amend by striking out "April" and inserting "May;" so as to read: "1st day of May, 1900."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask to go back to the beginning of the bill and to act upon the recommendation of the committee that the preamble immediately preceding the enacting clause be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the bill has been finally passed, a motion will be in order to strike out the preamble.

Mr. FORAKER. Perhaps that will be the better practice. I will pass that. Then I move that the bill be amended so as to strike out the word "Puerto" wherever it occurs and insert "Porto," so that it will read "Porto Rico" instead of "Puerto Rico."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that wherever the name of the island occurs as "Puerto Rico" it be changed to "Porto Rico." Without objection, that will be agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, on page 4 I want to strike out, at the end of line 17, the word "such," and I want to strike out the same word in line 19 on that page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 4, line 17, after the word 'all," it is proposed to strike out "such;" and in line 19, after the word "any," to strike out "such;" so as to read:

And from and after such date all merchandise and articles shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty; and in no event shall any duties be collected after the 1st day of March, 1902.

Mr. BACON. What is the end to be accomplished by that, I inquire of the Senator?

Mr. FORAKER. It is to make it more definite and certain. Speaking of the last provision first (as I have that before me), that after the 1st day of March, 1902, there shall not be collected any duties levied on goods going into Puerto Rico or coming from there into the United States—and the other relates, as it now reads, to certain goods previously described—I want to make it certain that on no goods going or coming, either way, shall there be any duties levied. That is the only purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to this amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; I want to ask the Senator from Ohio if he calculates to change the title or name of the government of Puerto Rico?

Mr. FORAKER. I have indicated an amendment that I shall ask to have made after the bill is passed. I understand that, according to the practice and the rule, the title and the preamble are never acted upon until after action is had upon the passage of a bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I am speaking more particularly of the classification of the government, whether it is to have a definite legal status and definition.

Mr. FORAKER. No; if the Senator will look at the bill, he will see printed there the amendment I propose to offer at the proper time.

Mr. ALLEN. In other words, yesterday I called the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that this island was entitled to a Territorial government, and I asked him to consent to the insertion of the word "Territory," so as to make the legal proceedings there run in the name of the "Territory of Puerto Rico," which he declined. I asked him to assent to strike out the words "the people of Puerto Rico" and to insert "Territory of Puerto Rico," which he declined; and he added in that connection that, under the treaty by which we acquired that island, the people of Puerto Rico were not entitled to a Territorial government in the ordinary acceptation of that term, but were only entitled to such a government as Congress saw fit to give to them.

Now, I do not want to unnecessarily consume the time of the Senate, but I think it important that I should call attention to the fact that the words "territory" and "territories" are used six or seven different times in this treaty; and the word "territories" is used in a connection that would indicate as strongly as language is capable of indicating that the people of that island are entitled to a Territorial form of government. These references are to be found in the treaty. In Article IX of the treaty the following language will be found:

Spanish subjects, natives of the Peninsula, residing in the territory over which Spain by the present treaty relinquishes or cedes her sovereignty, may remain in such territory or may remove therefrom.

In the latter part of the same article the word "territory" is again used. In Article X this language is found:

The inhabitants of the territories over which Spain relinquishes or cedes her sovereignty shall be secured in the free exercise of their religion.

So the word "territories" also occurs twice in Article XVI, once in Article XIV, and, I think, in several other articles, indicating clearly that the government to be given those people was an ordinary Territorial government, such as we have given to newly acquired territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator suspend one moment? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] proposes to strike out the word "such" in two places in section 3, and the decision of the Senate has not been announced on that amendment. The Chair asked the Senator from Nebraska if he rose to that amendment, and the Chair understood him to say that he did.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not understand the Chair. We do not hear back here very clearly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], without objection, will be stricken out. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, for fear I may forget to do it later, I wish to ask to have a reprint of the bill made, with all the amendments as they have been adopted, so that we may have the bill as it now stands on our desks on Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. I was about through, Mr. President. I will merely add a few words more. I had hoped to be able to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the matter so plainly that he could not escape taking some steps to perfect this bill; but if the Senator from Ohio in charge of this bill announces that it is not his purpose nor the policy of his party to give to the Puerto Ricans an ordinary Territorial government, then I suppose those of us who disagree with him will have to content ourselves with voting in the negative when this bill is upon its final passage.

The Senator said yesterday there were certain reasons why that could not be done, and he insisted if I would look in the RECORD this morning I would see those reasons. I have read very carefully the portion of the RECORD containing the remarks of the Senator upon this subject, and I find an entire absence of any reason why the people of Puerto Rico should not be given a Territorial government.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the amendments which have been adopted, I believe, perfect the bill, except only as to the sections which have been passed over. The only sections passed over, as I understand it—I will state them in their proper order—are sections 6 and 7 and section 37. Is there any other?

Mr. BACON. Sections 2 and 3 have not been agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Sections 2 and 3 were adopted as they stand, subject to the right of the Senator from Georgia to move to strike them out.

Mr. BACON. Yes; and to insert.

Mr. FORAKER. The other sections have been adopted. I suppose, however, all of them will be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I was speaking of their status at this time.

Mr. BACON. Section 6 has not been agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Neither section 6 nor section 7 has been agreed to; but sections 2 and 3 were agreed to, subject to amendment, and section 37 has been passed.

Now I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator if he will kindly change his motion to one for an executive session, which will take not over five minutes?

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 2, 1900, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 31, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BROWN, for ten days, on account of important business.

FISHING FOR MUSSELS—THE YACHT ANDRIA.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to report back House bill 8246 and House bill 5026, with the request that they lie upon the table, and I ask unanimous consent that the action of the committee be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the titles to the bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8246) to regulate the fishing for mussels in the fresh waters of the United States.

A bill (H. R. 5026) to extend the privileges of section 4216 of the Revised Statutes to the yacht Andria.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, by direction of that committee, asks that these bills lie upon the table. If there is no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

DAM BETWEEN COON RAPIDS AND THE NORTH LIMITS OF THE CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9713) permitting the building of a dam between Coon Rapids and the north limits of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., across the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9713, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Twin City Rapid Transit Company, its successors or assigns, to construct across the Mississippi River, at any point between Coon Rapids and the north line of the limits of the city of Minneapolis, a dam, canal, and works necessarily incident thereto, for water-power purposes. The said dam shall be so constructed that there can, at any time, be constructed in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes: Provided also, That the Government of the United States may, at any time, take possession of said dam and appurtenant works and control the same for purposes of navigation by paying the said company the value not exceeding the actual cost of the same, but shall not do so to the destruction of the water power created by said dam to any greater extent than may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation: Provided further, That the works shall be constructed so as to provide for the free passage of saw logs. The said Twin City Rapid Transit Company shall make such change and modification in the works as the Secretary of War may, from time to time, deem necessary in the interests of navigation, at its own cost and expense: Provided further, That in case any litigation arises from the obstruction of the channel by the dam, canal, or appurtenant works, the case may be tried in the proper Federal court of the United States in which the works are situated.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved: And provided further, That suitable fishways, to be approved by the United States Fish Commissioner, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam by the Twin City Rapid Transit Company, its successors or assigns.

SEC. 3. That this act shall become null and void unless the dam herein authorized be commenced on or before the 1st day of July, 1901, and be completed within three years thereafter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the bill is supported by the committee and whether the Secretary of War has recommended it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that it was the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and has had the sanction of the Secretary of War. This was a bill passed two years ago, and is simply to extend the time until the work may be completed. There has been some delay in getting the rights of flowage——

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill makes provision for fishways?

Mr. FLETCHER. It does, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills. I would like to see if we can make some arrangement as to the time for general debate, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours and a half, the time to be equally divided between the two sides, to be controlled on that side by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] and on this side by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent, pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, that general debate upon this bill be limited to two and one-half hours, the time to be equally divided between the two sides, and to be controlled by himself and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. I suppose it is understood that we may take a vote at any time before the end of the two hours and a half?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly. If the time is not consumed, I shall move that the committee rise.

The SPEAKER. It will be understood that the reading of the bill by sections will commence, if the time allowed for general debate is not consumed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. HEMENWAY to go into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair, for the consideration of appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of an appropriation bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bill (H. R. 9711) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill carries, in round numbers, $7,000,000. The estimates amounted to $11,500,000. The bill carries less than the estimates $4,635,000.

Mr. BELL. Has the gentleman obtained leave to dispense with the first reading of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill ought to be read.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate the report of the committee as a part of my remarks, which will itself explain the bill. I only desire to say in explanation of this bill that the committee reduced the estimates for the reason that we believe that we can manufacture guns in our own factories cheaper than we can buy them. We are manufacturing at our own gun factory an 8-inch gun at a cost of nearly $5,000 less than we could buy them for by contract. We are manufacturing a 10-inch gun at a cost of $7,500 less than we could buy them for under contract; and we are making a 12-inch gun at $15,000 less than we have bought them for in the past under contract.

So in this bill we undertook to provide sufficient appropriations to keep our gun factory running eight hours each day. This appropriation will provide sufficient material for that purpose. We believe it is economy to appropriate no larger sum than may be absolutely necessary to keep our gun and carriage factory at work.

Now, if there are any questions——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether the subcommittee carefully considered the demand made for repairs of fortifications, and does the bill carry an ample sum to put in good shape those fortifications which are so much out of repair?

Mr. HEMENWAY. For repairs of fortifications we give the amount of the estimates; and in addition there is an appropriation made for repairs at Fort Caswell, N. C.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Some specific appropriations?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir. For instance, we appropriate specifically for repairs at Fort Caswell, N. C.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. At line 5, on the same page, I find this clause:

For protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications for which there may be no special appropriation available, $100,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the ordinary appropriation

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is it ample?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is ample for the purpose.

I am requested to make a statement showing the progress of coast-defense work. We shall have—well, I may say we now have, because on March 13 the work was complete—85 12-inch guns in place; we have 118 10-inch guns; 94 8-inch guns; 308 rapid-firing guns, and 344 12-inch mortars. The manner of mounting our modern coast-defense guns is altogether different from the old method of mounting such guns. A 12-inch gun is now mounted simply in a hole in the ground prepared for it upon a disappearing carriage, as we call it. The carriage revolves upon a circle upon which the degrees are marked out—north, east, south, and west.

When we desire to fire this gun it is sighted while down in the hole. The range finder reports at sea, 4 miles away, at 10° east of north, a vessel. Then the gun is swung around on the carriage to the point desired, so many degrees east of north as given by the range finder. Then they go to the breech of the gun and give it the proper elevation to shoot 4 miles. They then operate the rachet and the gun tips up out of the hole and fires. If the range finder does his duty, the shot hits every time. That is the difference between the present manner of mounting guns and the old way, when they had to fire out of portholes.

I am asked as to the cost of a 12-inch gun with disappearing carriage. I will say that two 12-inch guns may be mounted now on disappearing carriages at a cost of about $250,000. It costs to mount these same guns on what we call the gun lift $500,000. By means of the disappearing carriage the firing can be more accurate and rapid, and the range of the gun is much greater, as by means of the disappearing carriage you can have an all-round fire—you can fire in any direction. Of course there are only a few places where guns so mounted for all-round firing are of any great advantage; but there are a few such places. Gentlemen can readily see the great saving to the Government accomplished through the invention of the disappearing carriage, because by means of it one gun may be fired in any direction, while with the old gun lift this could not be done.

While we have been criticised for not making appropriations more rapidly for coast defense, the fact has been developed that had large appropriations been made in the past 50 per cent of the money would have been thrown away.

The report of the committee to which I have referred is as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the accompanying bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submit the following in explanation thereof:

The estimates on which the bill is based will be found in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1901, pages 229, 233, and aggregate $11,728,938, of which sum there is recommended in the accompanying bill appropriations amounting to $7,093,488.

During the Forty-ninth Congress (fiscal years 1887 and 1888) no appropriations were made on account of fortifications, their maintenance or armament, and for the twelve fiscal years 1875 to 1886, inclusive, the appropriation by Congress on this account averaged only $540,750 per annum, and only $463,500 per annum for the fourteen years, including 1887 and 1888, for which latter two fiscal years no specific appropriations were made, as stated.

The bill reported herewith contains appropriations in continuance of the policy adopted by the Fiftieth Congress in the passage of the acts approved September 22, 1888, and March 2, 1889, and by the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses in acts approved August 18, 1890; February 24, 1891; July 23, 1892; February 18, 1893; August 1, 1894; March 2, 1895; June 6, 1896; March 3, 1897; May 7, 1898, and March 3, 1899.

The appropriations by said acts for the twelve fiscal years 1889-1900 aggregate $53,671,649.50, or an average of $4,472,637.46 per annum.

Of the whole sum, $53,671,649.50, appropriated by the fortification acts covering the twelve fiscal years 1889-1900 the sum of $31,182,425 was appropriated in the four fortification acts enacted by the last and preceding Congress.

The fortification appropriation acts enacted at the last Congress appropriated $14,287,396, in addition to which amount sums aggregating $8,674,898 were provided in deficiency appropriation acts for fortifications and the armament thereof, and the further sum of $12,865,840.60 was allotted for the same objects from the general appropriation of $50,000,000 made for the national defense in the act of March 9, 1898, making in all $35,826,134.00 available for fortifications and the armament thereof under appropriations made at the last Congress.

The total appropriations made for fortifications and other works of defense since 1888, and since the recommendations of the Endicott board of 1885, including the appropriations made in deficiency acts and allotments made from the national defense fund, amount to $75,212,388.10.

The scheme of seacoast fortifications contemplated by the Endicott board, and which has been followed by Congress in the appropriations made since 1888, it is now estimated will cost in the aggregate $112,197,267, of which sum there has been already provided $46,971,013.83, the Engineer Department having received $20,154,061.83 and the Ordnance Department $26,816,382.

The difference between the sum, $46,971,013.83, already provided toward the scheme of the Endicott board and the sum total of appropriations, $75,212,388.10, for fortifications since 1888, is represented in expenditures for erecting and equipping the gun factory at Watervliet, the gun-carriage factory at Watertown, the Ordnance and Fortification Board, purchase of land for fortification sites, torpedoes for harbor defense, providing ammunition for service and for tests, manufacture of field guns, and for sundry other objects incident to providing and maintaining a system of seacoast defenses.

The following shows the aggregate amount appropriated under each natural subdivision of the accompanying bill, namely:

Gun and mortar batteries	$2,000,000
Pneumatic dynamite batteries	189,000
Installation of range and position finders	150,000
Sites for fortifications	800,000
Preservation and repair of fortifications	100,000
Plans for fortifications	5,000
Tools, etc., for maintaining and operating electric plants	25,000
Sea walls and embankments	200,000
Torpedoes for harbor defense	50,000
Armament of fortifications	4,002,588
Proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J	62,100
Watervliet Arsenal, N. Y	18,800
Ordnance and Fortification Board	100,000
Total	7,093,488

If there is nothing further, I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] forty-five minutes.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, this is the period of the quadrennial term in which party plans are laid and party promises and pledges given to the people.

Once in every four years the people of the United States are regaled with a series of plans for producing perfect happiness to men, and especially to men in the United States, and these plans are usually labeled the "Democratic platform."

These utterances, however, have two merits: First, they are always pointing to the future, and take care not to direct the mind to the record of the party in the past; second, they present on each occasion some new scheme, irrespective of former propositions and schemes, with which they hope to cater to public favor.

It is interesting at this time, when that party is preparing to announce a new set of principles, to review the plans which it has offered in the past for the perfection of human happiness in the United States, and to see how these propositions consist one with another, and especially to see whether events have justified the wisdom and accuracy of assertions which they have made, and so whether the public is justified in listening to the new propositions which that party will soon offer. I propose—

First. To review briefly the principles laid down in their various platforms, and to see how far they have been consistent one with another;

Second. To see whether their panaceas have been successful where tested; and Third. To see whether the assertions which they have made regarding the principles of the Republican party and their effects upon the country have been justified by subsequent events.

Take first the question of tariff.

In 1856 the Democratic party announced in its platform that—

The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of progressive free trade throughout the world.

In 1860 they reaffirmed this proposition, and the result in the election which followed was that the people rejected their free-trade proposition by the selection of an electoral college of which 59.4 was against them.

In 1864 they were so busy in declaring the war a failure that they omitted altogether to discuss the tariff question, with which the people in 1860 had failed to agree with them.

In 1868 they so far forgot their free-trade principles of 1860 that they declared in their platform for—

A tariff for revenue and such equal taxation under the internal-revenue laws as will offer incidental protection to domestic manufacturers and best promote and encourage the great industrial interests of the country.

This reversal of their earlier proposition for free trade without regard to domestic industries, coupled with their record with reference to the war, led the people in that year to return an electoral college of which 72.7 per cent was adverse to the Democratic party.

In 1872 they wandered still farther from their original position on free trade, and announced in their platform that—

Recognizing that there are honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion in regard to the various systems of protection and free trade, we remit the subject to the people in their Congressional districts and the decisions of Congress thereon.

The subject having thus been "remitted to the people," they determined to continue its control with the Republican party, the electoral college in that year giving 81.9 per cent of its vote to the Republican candidate.

The abandonment of their original free-trade proposition having proved an utter failure and brought them a practical evidence of the distrust of the people, they in 1876 concluded to return to their former position, and in their platform announced that—

We denounce the present [protective] tariff. It has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad and depleted the returns of American agriculture.

This assertion that the protective system was cutting down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad and depleting the returns of American agriculture reads queerly to-day in the light of subsequent history.

Prior to the transfer to the Republican party of the control of Governmental affairs Democratic free trade had been the rule during the entire history of the country, the number of periods in which a protective system was in operation having been insufficient to demonstrate its effect upon our foreign commerce; and it was not until the effect of the war of 1861–1865 had passed away that the real effect of a protective tariff upon our domestic and foreign commerce could be shown.

A study of the statistics of our foreign commerce during the free-trade period and a comparison with those of the period subsequent to 1876 is interesting in the light of this assertion in the platform of 1876—

That the protective system has cut down the sales of the American manufacturer at home and abroad and depleted the returns of American agriculture.

An official statement of the imports and exports of the United States from 1790 to 1899, prepared by the Treasury Department, shows that prior to 1876, the date of this assertion, there had been scarcely a year in which the exports of merchandise from the United States were as large as the imports into the United States, while since that time, under the operations of the protective tariff, which at that date was just beginning its beneficent work free from the embarrassments due to the war period, there has been a constant excess of exportations.

In the eighty-five years between 1790 and 1876 there were but 16 occasions in which the exports were equal to or greater than the imports, while since 1876 they have exceeded the imports in practically every year.

Prior to 1876 the balance of trade against the United States, under the long series of low tariffs which had existed, had amounted in the eighty-five years to $2,139,553,972, while in the twenty-five years since 1876, under the almost continuous protective tariff which has existed, the balance of trade in our favor has been $3,641,670,284.

Here in a nut shell is a practical, visible, and overwhelming refutation of the assertion that a protective tariff injures and cuts down our markets abroad.

In eighty-five years of practically continuous free trade the exports fell $2,139,553,972 below the imports, while in twenty-five years of almost continuous protection the exports have exceeded the imports by the enormous sum of $3,641,670,284.

It is not surprising, in view of the remarkable fact that American sales abroad have been less than American purchases from abroad in all the years of free trade, that the American public in 1876, after the Democratic denunciation of the protective tariff and the assertion that it was cutting down the sales of American manufactures abroad and depleting the returns of American agriculture, again rejected the party and its propositions and placed a Republican President in the White House.

In 1880 the party declared again for a "tariff for revenue only," taking care to make no detailed reference to protection or free trade. This platform and the candidate who stood upon it were rejected by an electoral college which gave to the Republican Presidential candidate 58 per cent of its total vote.

In 1884 the Democracy made another great wobble. It found its free-trade principles so distasteful to the American public that its leaders concluded that it must act as nearly in line with the Republican party on this great question as practicable, seeing, as they did, that the principles of protection were not only satisfactory to the public, but that propositions adverse to those principles were continuously rejected.

It therefore declared that—

The Democratic party is pledged to the revision of the tariff in the spirit of fairness to all interests; but in making reductions in taxation it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth.

And this Democratic platform further declared that—

Many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved.

The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may be necessary in consequence of the higher rates of wages prevailing in this country.

I call especial attention to the wording of the sentence which says that—

> Many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of labor and capital.

Can it be possible that this direct reference to the protection of capital was an appeal to trusts and combinations, and that, too, by the Democratic party? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Whether it was or not, it is a matter of record that for the first time since that party attempted to destroy the Union it was successful upon this platform, which proposed to be "regardful of labor and capital."

The Administration of the President whom they elected upon that platform, which proposed protection for labor and capital, was signalized by two great events:

First, the veto of ten times as many pension bills as had ever been vetoed by all the Presidents preceding him; and second, by the sending to Congress of the most extreme and violent free-trade recommendations that had ever been submitted to that body since the people, in 1860, rejected its platform, which declared that—

> The time has come when the people of the United States must declare themselves in favor of free trade throughout the world.

Strangely, in 1888, the Democratic party, notwithstanding the fact that they had in 1884 been successful upon a platform which promised protection to labor and capital, so far departed from the principles of that success as to say in its platform that—

> We indorse the last annual message of President Cleveland as the correct interpretation of the platform of 1884 "upon the question of tariff reduction."

And as this message, thus indorsed as "the correct interpretation of the platform of 1884," was the celebrated free-trade message to which I have already referred, the people in the election of 1888 rejected the Democratic party and its candidate by an electoral vote of which 58.3 per cent was in favor of the Republican protectionist candidate.

In 1892, by a series of misrepresentations and denunciations of the McKinley protective tariff, they succeeded in again inducing the voters to make one more experiment in free trade, the first one—that of 1884—having been unsuccessful because of the fact that a Republican majority in one branch of Congress prevented the adoption of a free-trade or low-tariff law. The result of that election of 1892, which brought into power a free-trade President and Congress, was a lesson to the people of the United States which they are not likely to soon forget.

From 1892 to 1896, while the Democratic party was last in control, the depression of business, the suspension of manufacturing interests, and the sufferings of workingmen whose earnings depended upon business prosperity and activity, which had resulted from Republican protection in earlier years, formed a record such as this country had never seen and such as its voters are not likely to again desire to see.

Failing banks, closing business houses, railroad receiverships, silent factories, and men and women without employment, dependent for the first time in their entire lives upon charity—not by thousands, but by hundreds of thousands and millions.

This is the record of four years of experiment with Democratic free trade.

It is not surprising, in view of these facts, that the Democratic party in 1896 "shied" at the tariff and announced that "until the money question is settled, we are opposed to any changes in our tariff laws."

They chose to rather "bear those ills we have, than fly to others that we know not of;" and although the Democratic President had denounced the tariff adopted by his own party in Congress as one of "party perfidy and party dishonor," and had pertinently asked Mr. Wilson, in that famous letter of July 2, 1894, "How can we face the people after indulging in such outrageous discriminations and violations of principle?" and had further said of it in his famous letter to Mr. CATCHINGS, of August 27 in that year, that "The livery of tariff reform has been stolen and worn in the service of Republican protection, and the deadly blight of treason has blasted the counsels of the brave in their hour of might"—in spite of all these denunciations of their own tariff, they in 1896 preferred silence upon this subject rather than to ask the people to authorize further experiments with it, and announced that "until the money question is settled, we are opposed to any change in our tariff laws."

What will they do in 1900? Their record during the century which I have briefly reviewed is sufficient to justify the public in expecting anything. Will it be free trade? Will it be protection? Will it be free silver? Will it be sound money? Will it be a straddle? Probably the latter, as this seems to be the political art in which they are most expert, and which, indeed, is the only one which has in many years brought them success before the American people.

Now, let us see how their assertions with reference to the effect of a protective tariff have been justified. While they have wobbled from side to side in the quantity of free trade which they have offered as a bait to voters in their platforms, they have, with some degree of consistency, persisted in their assertion that a protective tariff must be disadvantageous to the American producer and manufacturer, and therefore the American laborer, in regard to the foreign markets.

They have admitted that under a protective tariff higher wages could be paid, for President Cleveland in a message to Congress said that under the tariff laws which he recommended the wage-earner would be compensated in the reduced price of goods for any reduction in wages which might be brought about by his (Democratic) tariff policy; but they insist that free trade, while it might give lower wages, would so foster our exportations that we should have a vastly improved market abroad, and that, on the other hand, our foreign market could not grow under a protective system.

"If you do not buy of people, you can not sell to them," has been their constant cry.

Now, I propose to take up this single assertion of the Democratic party (and this is about the only assertion which they have consistently continued to make from year to year and campaign to campaign) and see whether our practical experience with free trade and protection justify this assertion.

To do this I propose to compare briefly conditions in 1896 with those of 1899.

It was in 1896 that the Democratic party announced its complete satisfaction with the then existing tariff, under which industries were languishing, prices of farm products low, and foreign trade failing to show that stimulus which had been predicted for it under a low tariff.

Yet that party announced in 1896, despite all the unfavorable conditions which existed and which had followed the adoption of its tariff system, "until the money question is settled we are opposed to any changes in our tariff laws."

That may be accepted as meaning that the Democratic party had done the best it knew how in regard to a tariff, and that we may, by the conditions which accompanied its operations, measure the capacity of that party for legislating in behalf of the workingman, the farmer, the manufacturer, and the merchant, and at the same time test the accuracy of its constant assertions that a protective tariff would destroy our foreign markets.

I want to take a few of the principal articles which enter into our foreign commerce and compare conditions in 1899 with those of 1896, when the Democratic party announced in substance that it considered the tariff conditions satisfactory.

The Treasury Department in its official publications shows the imports and the exports of the principal articles entering into our international commerce.

If by an examination of these figures we find that our exports have grown more rapidly under the protective tariff enacted under President McKinley's Administration than under the low tariff of President Cleveland's Administration, we may assume that the assertion that protection hampers foreign trade is inaccurate.

If we find that under the protective tariff imports of manufactured articles have not increased with the rapidity with which they increased under the low tariff, we may assume that the home market is being reserved for our own workmen, and with the prosperity which thus comes to them their capacity for buying the products of the farm is increased, and thus the general home market fostered.

If we find still further that there has been an increase in the importation of material required in the factory, we may assume that there is an increasing activity among manufacturers.

Society divides itself into four great classes: Those engaged in agriculture, in manufactures, in transportation, and in merchandizing.

In attempting to determine the relative prosperity of the low tariff and the protective tariff periods of the past few years, I propose to consider the question as it affects each of these great classes separately, though the prosperity of any one of them is so interdependent upon and interwoven with each of the others that it can scarcely be possible that one class fails to enjoy prosperity while the others are successful.

Let us take the farmer, to begin with, whose industry forms the foundation of national prosperity and of the world's prosperity and activity. I want to compare his condition in 1899 or 1900, if you please, where practicable, with that of 1896, when Democratic orators were attempting to persuade him that free silver, free wool, and free trade offered the only panacea for improvement of his condition.

Four articles or classes of articles include the chief features of our export and import trade which directly affect the farmer. They are breadstuffs, provisions, cotton, and wool.

I want to consider these principal articles, both as to exportation and prices, and see whether the facts sustain the Democratic assertion that "you can not sell abroad unless you buy abroad."

I find from an examination of the Treasury figures that the exports of breadstuffs in the fiscal year 1896, a year which was just ending when the Democratic party met in Chicago, nominated its candidate, and announced its entire satisfaction with the then existing tariff, were $141,000,000 in value, while in 1899, under the protective tariff, they were $274,000,000, or practically double those of 1896.

Does this look as though a protective tariff was destroying our markets abroad?

Take the single item of corn. The exports in 1896 were 99,000,000 bushels, and in 1899, 174,000,000 bushels. Does this look as though a protective tariff was destroying our foreign markets?

The exports of wheat in 1896, under the Democratic low tariff, were 60,000,000 bushels; in 1899, under the Dingley protective tariff, 139,000,000 bushels. Is there any evidence of destruction of our foreign markets in this figure?

The value of wheat flour exported in 1896 was $52,000,000; in 1899, $73,000,000; of oats, in 1896, 13,000,000 bushels were exported; in 1899, 30,000,000 bushels; of oatmeal, in 1896, 38,000,000 pounds; in 1899, 58,000,000 pounds; of rye, in 1896, less than 1,000,000 bushels; in 1899, more than 10,000,000 bushels. Is there evidence of destruction of our foreign markets in any of these?

In provisions a comparison of the conditions of 1899 with those of 1896 is equally discouraging in the attempt to find support for the Democratic doctrine that a protective tariff destroys foreign markets. The total exports of provisions, which in 1896, under a low tariff, were $133,000,000, were in 1899, under a protective tariff, $175,000,000.

Bacon exports increased from four hundred and twenty-five to five hundred and sixty-two million pounds; hams, from one hundred and twenty-nine to two hundred and twenty-five million pounds; lard, from five hundred and nine to seven hundred and eleven million pounds, while the value increased from thirty-three to forty-two million dollars during the period under comparison, 1896 to 1899.

Dairy products show an equally healthy growth under the protective system, which, according to the Democratic theory, destroyed markets abroad, the exports of butter increasing from $2,937,203 in 1896 to $3,263,951 in 1899; cheese, from 36,000,000 pounds in 1896 to 78,000,000 pounds in 1899, and milk, from $270,453 in 1896 to over $1,000,000 in 1899.

In cotton, another great article of agricultural production, and entering largely into our foreign commerce, the exports of 1896 were four and one-half million bales, and in 1899 nearly seven and one-half million bales.

Exports of cotton-seed oil, in which our Southern friends are so much interested, amounted, in 1896 under a low tariff, to 19,000,000 gallons, valued at a little over $5,000,000, and in 1899, under protection, to 50,000,000 gallons, valued at over $12,000,000, while the total exportation of cotton-seed meal, which in 1896 amounted to 404,000,000 pounds, was in 1899 more than 1,000,000,000 pounds, having considerably more than doubled in quantity, and actually trebled in value during that time.

Of fruits and nuts the exportation in 1896 amounted to five and one-half million dollars and in 1899, seven and one-half million dollars.

Of hops, the exportation in 1896 was one and one-half million dollars, and in 1899, three and one-half million dollars; vegetables, in 1896, one and one-half million dollars, and in 1899, two and one-half million dollars; and of seeds of various kinds, in 1896, one and one-half million dollars in value, and in 1899, five millions.

In two articles of farm production there has been a marked falling off in our exportations.

In 1896, under the Democratic low tariff, we exported 7,000,000 pounds of wool, and in 1899 only one and one-half million pounds; and of sheep the exports in 1896 were over 3,000,000 in number, as against less than 1,000,000 in 1899.

Here, perhaps, is a single evidence around which the Democratic party may rally in support of the theory that a protective tariff destroys foreign markets.

Under the low-tariff law, which afforded absolutely free trade in wool, we were exporting four times as many sheep and four times as much wool as under the protective tariff.

Not only so, but in 1896 we imported 230,000,000 pounds of wool, and in 1899 but 76,000,000.

If there was any feature of the Democratic tariff which was held up as an absolutely perfect exemplification of the real, genuine, simon-pure Democratic tariff theory in perfect practice, it was that of free wool.

Under it the importation of wool amounted in 1896 to 230,000,000 pounds, and in 1897 to 357,000,000 pounds, while, as I have already said, in 1899, under a protective tariff, it was but 76,000,000 pounds.

As a result of this enormous flood of imports of foreign wools under Democratic free trade, "Ohio XX washed clothing wool" was selling on July 10, 1896, the date of Mr. Bryan's nomination, at 17 cents per pound in the New York markets, while on February 9, 1900, under the protective tariff, it was selling in the same market at 36 cents per pound, or more than double the price under the Democratic tariff, which professed to be framed in special interests of the farmer.

No wonder our farmers were driven to a disposal of their sheep at any price under the low tariff and that the exportation of sheep in 1896 reached more than 3,000,000 in number, and that in this particular branch of our foreign commerce the protective tariff caused a reduction in our sales abroad.

On this general question of prices of farm products let me add a few further facts.

Grains of all kinds, as is well known, have advanced in price since that time, and in every single instance stand at a higher price to-day than at the date of Mr. Bryan's nomination. Lard has advanced from 4.2 cents per pound in the New York markets to 6.42 cents in February, 1900, an increase of 50 per cent; mess pork, from $8 per barrel in July, 1896, to $10.75 per barrel in February, 1900; beef, from $7.50 per barrel in July, 1896, to $11 per barrel in February, 1900; and cotton, from 7.5 cents per pound in New York on July 3, 1896, to 9 1/16 cents on February 23, 1900.

Does this indicate to the farmer that a protective tariff injures his markets or the prices which he receives for his products?

But the Democratic reply to this will be that the increase in prices of the imported articles which the farmer must have has been quite as great as the increase in prices of the articles which he sells, and that this increase in prices of imported articles is due to the Democratic tariff.

Let us see about that. The most important articles of foreign production which the farmer buys are rice, sugar, and coffee.

Rice, which was quoted in the New York markets in July, 1896, at 4¼ cents per pound, is quoted in January, 1900, at 4¼ cents per pound in the same market; granulated sugar, which in July, 1896, was quoted at 4.6 cents per pound, was in January, 1900, quoted at 4.7 cents per pound, an increase of one-tenth of 1 cent, which scarcely offsets a doubling in price of wool; while as to coffee, the Statistical Abstract of the United States shows the average import price of 1896 to be 14.6 cents per pound, and in 1899 6¼ cents per pound, a fall of more than one-half.

Of tea, the average import price in 1896 was 13½ cents per pound, and in 1899, 13.1 cents per pound.

In cotton goods, the average price for standard sheeting in 1896, as shown by the Statistical Abstract of the United States, was, in the New York market, 5.45 cents per yard, and in 1899, 5.28 cents; standard drills, 1896, 5.48 cents, and in 1899, 5.13 cents; New York mills bleached shirtings, in 1896, 9½ cents, and in 1899, 9¼ cents per yard; standard prints per yard, 4.66 cents in 1896, and 4.25 cents in 1899.

A table published in Dun's Review shows the relative prices on December 31, 1896, and June 21, 1899.

It gives the wholesale prices of men's grain shoes December 31, 1896, as $1.07½, June 21, 1899, $1; men's buff shoes, December 31, 1896, $1.17½, June 21, 1899, $1.15; men's calf shoes, December 31, 1896, $1.30, June 21, 1899, $1.27; men's kip boots, December 31, 1896, $1.35, June 21, 1899, $1.35; women's grain shoes, December 31, 1896, 87½ cents, June 21, 1899, 85 cents; women's buff shoes, December 31, 1896, 80 cents, June 21, 1899, 77½ cents.

Thus, in the principal articles which farmers must buy prices have in most cases fallen since 1896, while the prices of all the articles which they sell have advanced.

In a few exceptional cases, such as binding twine, due to the abnormal and temporary conditions in the Philippines; manufactures of iron and steel, due to the general advance in prices and a demand which exceeds the power of production, and certain lines of woolen clothing, there has been an increase in prices of the articles which the farmer must buy.

But in scarcely an instance does it equal the percentage of increase in prices received by the farmer for his wool, while in most of these cases of increased prices of articles consumed the advance is temporary and due to exceptional causes.

It is not necessary to multiply examples of increased prosperity among the farmers under the protective tariff as compared with that which existed under the low tariff, which was in force during 1896, and with which the Democratic party in that year expressed its complete satisfaction.

Debts reduced, mortgages canceled, prosperous farmers and happy homes are of themselves a sufficient evidence of this.

But it may be well to add a single one further statistical statement which should put an end to the Democratic assertion that a low tariff is advantageous to agricultural interests, and that is this: In the fiscal years 1895 and 1896, under the Democratic low tariff, the total exportation of agricultural products amounted to $1,120,000,000, and in the fiscal years 1898 and 1899, under the Dingley protective tariff, they amounted to $1,648,000,000, an increase of about 50 per cent.

Does this look as though a protective tariff destroyed our foreign markets or was disadvantageous to the farmer?

The second great class of our population who are especially affected by the tariff, and therefore constantly appealed to with reference to it, is that great body of men employed in the manufacturing interests and the industries tributary thereto, and in this I include those engaged in the production of coal, iron, copper, wood, fibers, and other articles which enter into our great manufacturing interests.

It is more difficult to show in exact terms the prosperity which has attended manufacturing interests than that of agriculture.

In the exportation of articles of agricultural products it is practicable to name quantities and values, and thus arrive at the average price per bushel or per pound of the article which the farmer produces.

In the case of the manufacturers, however, while we are able to state the total value of the exports of manufacturers, the specific price of each article or class of articles is more difficult to obtain.

Two or three great facts, however, measure accurately the growth in general terms of our manufacturing interests, and therefore of the prosperity of our manufacturers and the men and women whom they employ.

The first of these is the importation of articles from abroad which are required for use in manufacturing, the second is the importation of manufactured articles, and the third is the exportation of the surplus products of our factories, while a fourth is the wages which are paid to the people employed, and the increase in employment wherever it is practicable to determine the question of increase.

In the case of wages and the number of persons employed, necessarily the figures are fragmentary, but in the case of importations of raw materials and the import and export of manufactured articles we have specific statements.

These show that the importation of raw materials for use of manufacturers increased enormously in 1899 as compared with 1895 and 1896.

The importation of articles in a crude condition which enter into the various processes of domestic industry in the calendar year 1899 amounted to $267,000,000, and formed more than one-third of the total importations into the United States, while in the calendar year 1896, under the Democratic free raw material tariff, they amounted to but $162,000,000, and formed less than one-fourth of the total importations.

This enormous increase in the importation of articles required for use in manufacturing—articles which can not be produced at home—indicates of itself a greatly increased activity on the part of our manufacturing industries, while a further evidence of their increased activity under the protective tariff is found in the fact that the exportation of manufactures, which in 1896, under the Democratic low tariff, amounted to but $253,000,000, were in the calendar year 1899 $380,000,000, and in the fiscal year which ends with June next will, it is confidently believed, reach $400,000,000, which vast sum represents the surplus which our manufacturers are sending abroad after supplying the enormous market which a nation of 76,000,000 prosperous people affords under a protective tariff.

As to increased wages, increased activity, and increased number of people employed, the newspaper statements from day to day, the busy factories in every city and town and hamlet, the increased production of iron and steel and coal and copper and all articles required for use in manufacturing, and the fact that last year we spent over $66,000,000 more for labor and material in 20 cities of the United States than we spent during previous year in the erection of buildings, the busy savings banks, and the fact that in all this broad land no man or woman who wants employment is unable to obtain it, are sufficient evidence of the prosperity which has come with a protective tariff to the manufacturing interests and those dependent upon them.

Another great class of citizens whose interests should be considered in determining whether conditions are more prosperous under a low tariff or a protective system is that of the railways and the millions of people dependent upon them, directly or indirectly, for employment and livelihood.

And here we may obtain striking evidence of prosperity by an examination of the figures relating to the business of our great railway system, which surpasses that of any other part of the world, and whose mileage is more than one-half of the total mileage of the world.

Tons of freight carried 1 mile, earnings per mile of railroads in operation, dividends paid on stock, miles of railway in operation, increase in net traffic earnings, reduction of debts—these are some of the evidences of railway prosperity, and consequently of the prosperity of those dependent upon railways for occupation and earnings; for it is a well-known fact that the great railway systems have since 1896 increased the wages paid their employees as the increase in their earnings has enabled them to do so.

From the Statistical Abstract of the United States it appears that the miles of railway in operation in 1896 aggregated 184,894, against 179,821 in the low-tariff year 1895; the gross traffic earnings $1,250,000,000, against $1,092,000,000 in 1895; the dividends paid on stock $95,000,000, against $81,500,000 in 1895; the net earnings per mile $2,111 in 1898, against $1,804 in 1895, and the tons of freight carried 1 mile 114,000,000,000 in 1898, against 68,000,000,000 in 1895.

As a consequence of this increase in business, dividends, as already indicated, have increased, and at the same time the floating debt has been reduced from $418,000,000 in 1895 to $368,000,000 in 1898, and all of this accomplished without any increased charge upon the public, the average freight receipts per ton mile in 1898 being seventy-six one-hundredths of a cent against eighty-four one-hundredths of a cent in 1895, and the average receipts per passenger mile, $1.99 in 1898 against $2.07 in 1895.

It seems scarcely possible, therefore, that any of the railway employees who, as a body, rallied to the support of the Republican party in 1896 will, in view of the increased prosperity of the great system with which they are so intimately connected, and the increased earnings which they are themselves receiving, desire to return to the experiment of free trade and railroad receiverships, which were so prominent a feature of the depression under Democratic rule.

The fourth great class whose prosperity under protection or low tariff I desire to consider includes those engaged in merchandising and those dependent upon them for occupation.

The most accurate gauge of their prosperity which we can supply is that furnished by the statistics of business failures in the various years or terms of years which we are considering.

That well-known and generally accepted publication, Dun's Review, which every Democratic orator carried in his hand or pocket in the campaign of 1896, publishes from time to time a statement of failures in the various branches of business in the United States during a long term of years. They are carefully compiled and generally accepted as accurate. They show the number of failures and liabilities throughout the United States in each year.

An examination of these figures shows that the total number of business failures in the United States in the protective year of 1899 was 9,337, against 15,088 in the low-tariff year of 1896, the year of Mr. Bryan's nomination; and the liabilities in 1899 were $90,000,000, against $226,000,000 in 1896.

Thus the number of failures in 1896 was 66 per cent in excess of that of 1899, and the liabilities in 1896 were 150 per cent greater than those of 1899.

These figures, it is proper to say, relate to all classes of business, manufactures, traders, and those engaged in banking. An examination of the detailed statements regarding the failures of those engaged in the various branches of merchandising shows a correspondingly large improvement in 1899 compared with 1896.

During the fiscal year 1899 the failures of mercantile establishments, classed under the term of general stores, showed liabilities of $8,474,000 against $11,770,000 in 1896; groceries in 1899, $6,917,000 against $9,290,000 in 1896; clothing and furnishing establishments in 1899, $4,419,000 against $11,400,000 in 1896; dry goods establishments, $6,639,000 in 1899 against $12,360,000 in 1896, and hardware, stoves, and tool establishments, $2,173,000 in 1899 against $4,720,000 in 1896—the total of all establishments classed under the general head or traders being in 1899, $53,972,000 against $98,890,000 in 1896.

Among the manufacturers the evidences of prosperity, as shown by the reduction in failures and liabilities, were even more strongly marked, the liabilities of the failing iron foundries in the fiscal year 1899 being but $1,842,000 against $5,030,000 in 1896; of clothing and millinery establishments, $2,491,000 in 1899 against $5,610,000 in 1896; of lumber, carpenters, and coopers, $4,601,000 in 1899 against $11,300,000 in 1896; printing and engraving, $1,480,000 in 1899 against $3,210,000 in 1896; and for the grand total, $43,499,000 in 1899 against $77,600,000 in 1896.

DEMOCRATIC CURRENCY POLICY.

Having shown the instability and insincerity of the Democratic party in its tariff propositions and the inaccuracy of its general claim that protection is disadvantageous to our great producing, manufacturing, and business classes, I propose to examine briefly the record of that party in regard to currency, and test the accuracy of its statements upon that subject, and for this purpose also the declarations of the party in its Presidential platforms may with propriety be utilized.

In 1840 the party adopted a resolution asserting that Congress had no power to charter a United States bank, and that it believed such an institution "to be one of deadly hostility to the best interests of the country."

In 1844 this resolution was reaffirmed, but in 1848 the principal features of the platform of 1840 were readopted; but this resolution relating to the currency was carefully omitted, as was also any further reference to the money question.

In 1852 and in 1856, however, the resolution was reaffirmed as a part of the platform, but no suggestion made looking to any improvement in the depreciated currency of the State banks with which the country was then flooded and from which business was then suffering.

In 1868 the platform demanded that—

Where the obligations of the Government do not expressly state upon their face, or the law under which they were issued does not provide that they shall not be paid in coin, they ought in right and in justice be paid in the lawful money of the United States—

Which lawful money was then quoted at about 70 cents on the dollar in gold, and immediately followed this assertion by demanding—

One currency for the Government and the people, the laborer and the office-holder, the pensioner and the soldier, the producer and the bondholder.

Four years later (1872) they took a new stand on the currency question and announced "a speedy return to specie payment, as demanded alike by the highest consideration of commercial morality and honest government."

In 1876 they announced that "reform is necessary to establish a sound currency and maintain the national honor," and immediately followed this by the announcement that "we denounce the redemption clause of the act of 1875 and here demand its repeal."

Quite naturally their proposition was rejected by the people and the Republican candidate elected to the Presidency.

In 1880 they announced in favor of "honest money, consisting of gold and silver, and paper convertible into coin on demand."

In 1884 they announced their "belief in honest money, the gold and silver coin of the Constitution, and the circulating medium convertible into such money without loss."

Two consecutive declarations in favor of honest money seem to have been considered as much as the party could stand, and the currency question was omitted from the platform of 1888. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

In 1892 the party set its sails to a new breeze, and devoted most of its party plank to silver, announcing that—

We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage.

But added that—

The dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, or be adjusted through international agreement or by set safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in payment of debts; and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of the farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

This is certainly interesting reading in the light of the platforms of only four years later (1896), when the party in national convention declared:

We demand the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. We demand that the standard silver dollar shall be a full legal tender equally with gold for all debts, public and private.

Here was a proposition by the party which had previously declared that the silver dollar, if utilized, must be of "equal intrinsic and exchangeable value with gold or be adjusted through international agreement," now demanding that a dollar whose intrinsic value was at that moment 48 cents should be admitted to free and unlimited coinage at its "present legal ratio with gold without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation;" and although it had asserted in 1892 that "the farmers and laboring classes are the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency," calmly proceeded in 1896 to demand that this same 48-cent dollar "shall be of full legal tender equally with gold for all debts, public and private."

Here, then, is the record of the Democratic party on the currency question.

It is as erratic, as inconsistent, and as full of self-contradictions as its record on the tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The inaccuracy of the general Democratic assertions regarding the tariff and its effect upon foreign commerce and domestic prosperity has already been shown.

MONEY QUESTION.

I propose now to show in a few words only—for any detailed statement upon this subject is entirely unnecessary—the absolute inaccuracy and consequent unreliability of the Democratic assertions of 1896 on the money question.

The chief argument offered by the Democratic orators in favor of an unlimited use of silver as a money metal at the old and long-since discarded ratio of 16 to 1 was an assertion that there was not sufficient money metal in the world for use in its growing business, and that gold did not supply a sufficient standard money metal for the use of the world in its growing business, and especially that the United States could not materially increase its currency except through the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

This assertion was so frequently made and so often reiterated that it is as much a record of the Democratic party's assertions in 1896 as any line in its written platform.

Now, how are these assertions sustained by subsequent developments?

In 1896, when this Democratic platform proposing the unlimited coinage of a 48-cent dollar, which should be legal tender equally with gold for all debts, public and private, was adopted, and adopted upon the claim that this was the only process which could increase our currency, the amount of money in circulation in the United States was, according to the official figures of the Treasury Department, $1,506,000,000, of which $464,000,000 was gold.

On February 1, 1900, three years and seven months after that assertion, the money in circulation in the United States was two thousand million dollars, an increase of 33 per cent meantime, while the gold and gold certificates on February 1, 1900, amounted to $619,000,000, likewise an increase of 33 per cent.

What other country has ever made such a record in so short a time?

An increase of 33 per cent in its money in circulation in less than four years' time, and an increase of $500,000,000, or 33 per cent, in three years and seven months, and an increase of $155,000,000 in gold money in circulation during the same time.

No wonder that the leaders of that wing of the Democratic party which so furiously declared in 1896 for the free and unlimited coinage of silver without awaiting the advice or consent of any other nation are now hesitating about a further declaration on the money question, and groping in the darkness for some new declaration of principle, some monetary "fad," with which to catch the votes of the unthinking.

EXPANSION.

Just one more reference to Democratic platforms, and I am done. We hear to-day frequent Democratic denunciations of the expansion policy and predictions that it will be officially denounced by that party in its platform.

This would not be surprising, for it would be in line with the inconsistencies to be found in all its other lines of policy.

Upon this subject that party has, on various occasions and for various reasons, favored expansion.

Its greatest statesman, whom it delights to honor and to whom it frequently refers as the founder of the party, was the greatest expansionist of all, for through his Louisiana purchase was added to the United States a territory which is bringing to us to-day untold wealth and prosperity and proving the happy home of many millions of people.

And with the importance of this purchase he was so profoundly impressed that he entered promptly upon it in the face of serious doubts which then existed in his mind as to whether the act was within constitutional limits.

This, however, was only the beginning of the Democratic expansion policy.

In 1844 the Democratic platform included a resolution to the effect that—

The reoccupation of Oregon and the reannexation of Texas at the earliest practicable period are great American measures, which this convention recommends to the moral support of the Democracy of the Union.

The platform of 1848 solemnly asserted that—

The war with Mexico, provoked on her part by years of insult and injury, was commenced by her army crossing the Rio Grande, attacking the American troops, and invading our sister State of Texas, and upon all the principles of patriotism and the laws of nations it is a just and necessary war on our part, in which every American citizen should have shown himself on the side of his country.

In 1852 the assertion that "the war with Mexico was just and necessary" was reiterated, and the party announced that "we congratulate the American people on the results of that war, which have so manifestly justified the policy and conduct of the Democratic party and insured to the people of the United States indemnity for the past and security for the future."

The "results of that war," to which that Democratic platform alluded as the "indemnity" for the past, "was an addition of the enormous territory which includes a part of New Mexico, Colorado, and Wyoming, and all of Arizona, Utah, Nevada, and California, to say nothing of Texas, which was also the fruit of Democratic expansion policy.

What wonder that the Democratic party congratulated itself and the American people on the results of that war and the "indemnity for the past," which it had obtained by way of additions to United States territory.

Having thus assumed responsibility for every foot of territory lying between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean, one would suppose that the Democracy would have been satisfied on the expansion question.

But no. In 1856 we find them resolving that "the Democratic party will expect of the next Administration that every proper effort be made to insure our ascendancy in the Gulf of Mexico;" and in 1860 the specific meaning of this suggestion came to the front when the two Democratic conventions announced that "the Democratic party are in favor of the acquisition of the island of Cuba, on such terms as shall be honorable to ourselves and just to Spain," and here the declaration stopped.

There was no suggestion of the "consent of the governed," about which we are hearing so much to-day.

The Democratic party, which was then governing millions of people in the South "without the consent of the governed" and threatening to dissolve the Union if it could not have the privilege of doing so, had no words to waste about proposing the consent of the governed in the island of Cuba. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It wanted to make Cuba a State, in which it could extend slavery and bring into the Congress of the United States additional Senators and Representatives and so maintain its control of this Government.

It is a pretty late date for the Democratic party to talk about the consent of the governed, when from the beginning of its process of expansion, by which it obtained control of the entire territory west of the Mississippi River and proposed to extend it to the islands of the Gulf of Mexico, no word or hint of the "consent of the governed" ever entered their platform or was ever spoken by the lips of one of their representatives.

WE HAVE ALREADY EXPANDED.

Just one word more upon this general question of expansion to which the Democratic party now becomes an opponent simply because expansion as an incident of the war occurs during the control of Republican administration, and therefore is looked upon as the Republican policy instead of, as it should be, being considered as a national policy and above the plane of party or partisan politics.

The war against Spain was declared without party division, in the interests of humanity.

It was not a war of conquest or for territorial expansion.

In the prosecution of the war Admiral Dewey and his brave men destroyed the Spanish fleet May 1, 1898, and Manila surrendered to our Government on August 13 following.

The treaty of peace was ratified by the United States Senate with the aid of the votes of the Democratic Senators, and with the indorsement of and active personal support (for the treaty) of Hon. William Jennings Bryan, on February 6, 1899, and the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands was thereby transferred to and accepted by this Government.

At the moment of the surrender of the Spanish forces at Manila the law of nations made this Government responsible for the security of life and property and good order in those islands. And until the authority of the United States and its flag is fully respected, just so long will it remain undetermined what kind of government will be given the people of those islands. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

What the future will be for those people I am unable to foretell. The last Republican Ohio State platform expresses my views exactly wherein it says, viz:

> To the same master guidance, controlled by the great principles that have shaped the high destiny of the Republican party from Lincoln to McKinley, the people can safely commit the solution of the momentous problems of the future of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands.

But one thing I do believe, that in addition to supplying them with a better government than they have ever had we can prove of immeasurable benefit to them in a business and in every other way, and at the same time benefit the people of this country. To what extent they shall have an independent government will depend on their own capacity to govern themselves. The future only can determine that problem. The United States has now reached a point at which it is able to produce more than its people can consume.

Under the beneficent protective policy of the Republican party, manufacturing interests have been developed until we are able to supply the wants of our own people, and in the present year will send abroad $400,000,000 worth of manufactures, besides double that amount of the products of the field, the forest, and the mine.

We want a place to sell these goods.

In the Orient, within easy reach of Manila as a great distributing center, lies half the population of the world, buying every year more than a billion dollars' worth of goods.

Practically all of this billion dollars' worth of goods annually purchased are the very class of material which the people of the United States produce and desire to sell—breadstuffs, provisions, cotton and cotton goods, manufactures of iron and steel and wood, and the thousands of articles of ingenious products of the factory.

Every section of this great Union is interested in this important question—the broad prairies of the Northwest, which produce breadstuffs and provisions; the cotton fields of the South; the iron and copper mines of the Middle West, which contribute material for manufacturing; the manufacturers of the East, and again, of the South, and the multifarious interests of the Pacific coast—all stand ready anxiously waiting to contribute their share to the great and constantly growing commerce of the Orient.

With a Nicaraguan Canal the manufacturers on the North Atlantic seaboard, the cotton factories and fields of the South Atlantic, the grain and provision fields at the head of the Mississippi River and the cotton fields lower down, and the great producing territory of the Pacific coast can all move the products of their fields, mines, and factories almost directly from the point of production by water to this great market.

In return the ships will bring to us what we must have for our constantly increasing manufacturing interests—raw silks and fibers and other natural products of a tropical or a subtropical nature, which are not produced in the United States and of which we must import $100,000,000 worth for the use of our factories—a growing demand which must be met from some part of the world.

Our annual importation of tropical products for manufacturing or for food now averages $250,000,000 and is steadily increasing under the Republican protective system, by which our workmen and factories are supplying our own people with the class of manufactures formerly imported; and with American ships to carry our products to the Orient and return through a Nicaraguan Canal with the tropical products which we require for manufacturing or for food, the new expansion, in regard to which the Democratic party now for the first time assumes the rôle of anti-expansionist, will prove as important to our commerce and industries as have the earlier events of this character, which they officially commended and for which they officially assumed responsibility.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL PLATFORM.

The Republicans of the United States, through their accredited representatives, their delegates at the Republican national convention held at St. Louis, Mo., June 7, 1896, promised the country through its platform that if the party was intrusted with the control of the governmental affairs at the ensuing national election, it would, at the earliest practicable moment, through its Congress, pass a protective tariff law in the interests of the American workman, adopting the true American policy of taxing foreign products and protecting home industry, putting the burden on the foreign producer, and upholding the American market for the benefit of the American producer, putting the factory at the side of the farm, and making the American farmer less dependent upon foreign demand and prices, and protecting American labor from the degradation of the wage level of other lands.

Maj. William McKinley, of Ohio, was elected President of the United States on that platform in November of 1896; was inaugurated March 4, 1897, and on the 15th day of March, 1897, a special session of Congress convened, by direction of President McKinley, for the specific purpose of passing the tariff bill above referred to, and within fourteen days that bill was passed by the House of Representatives—a much shorter time than that in which any other tariff bill was ever passed during the history of the Government. [Applause.]

The operations of the Dingley tariff in protecting labor, commerce, and all other interests in this country have amply justified all that was claimed for the bill by its authors, as already shown by figures that I have presented, and I may further say that the revenue derived from this tariff has been more than the Government expense, under normal conditions, and as a revenue producer has even exceeded the expectations of the promoters of the bill; so the party has kept its promise to the country in respect to the tariff question.

My time is so limited I will not detain you in reciting the glorious record of our Army and Navy, made while making effective that part of the St. Louis platform which committed the Republican party to effectually use its influence and good offices in restoring peace and giving independence to Cuba.

DEMOCRATS ANXIOUS FOR WAR.

To be sure, the Democratic members of this House were the most anxious to commence at once the execution of this serious but patriotic duty, which fact will be verified by a perusal of the record of this House made at that time. They insisted in season and out of season for a policy toward Cuba that meant war, and that, too, in the face of the fact that the President of the United States, Mr. McKinley, was asking for time, in the hope that the results desired might be secured through diplomatic methods and agencies.

They twitted the Republican members of this House of being unpatriotic, and offered resolution after resolution, as the record will show, which at least meant war, and did everything they possibly could to bring about a war in advance of the President's wishes. The record will also show that after the President had yielded to a universal demand and had sent in his message, and war was thereafter declared, and after the first cannon shot had announced to the world that under a Republican Administration Cuba was to be free, very little patriotism and pride of country has since that time been exhibited by the Democratic side of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In days of peace they were vociferously for war. In the days of war they were persistently and energetically for anything that might embarrass the Administration and bring discredit to the same. And since the war has been practically closed these gentlemen are proclaiming that it is the duty of this country to shirk all the responsibilities that came to us as incidents and results of the war, and they are doing this for the purpose of embarrassing the present Administration. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

It is providential for our side of the House, and for the country

as well, that (the majority of) this House does not need their support, or their advice either, for it can be shown by their record that not since the beginning of the Democratic party's history were they ever once on the right side of a single question. [Continued applause on the Republican side.]

Their tender sympathies go out to the tribes of the Philippine Islands. They are for giving these people "independence," even before they lay down their arms and stop shooting our brave soldiers in the field. They contend that the Constitution of its own strength has expanded there and covered all the citizens of the archipelago, giving those people all the rights our people possess, and it is pitiful in the extreme to see the anxious solicitude these Democratic statesmen have that no "violence" be committed against the rights of the Filipinos.

THE CONSTITUTION NULL AND VOID.

These gentlemen are now the especial, self-constituted custodians of the Constitution. They have been so since 1865. They are the special advocates of the theory that we can not govern except by consent of the governed, and most of this talk comes from the Southern Representatives; yet the majority of them quite forget to explain why millions of people in the United States today are being governed without the consent of the governed, and are deprived of all their political rights, and are hounded and hunted, too, at times, right here at home (more cruelly than are those even in the Philippine Islands), and in open defiance of every constitutional right, and as proof of this statement I will quote from Senator TILLMAN'S speech made in the United States Senate March 20, 1900—made only a few days ago—wherein he said, in speaking of the colored people of the South, and I read from the RECORD, viz:

We made up our minds that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution were themselves null and void; that the acts of Congress * * * were null and void; that oaths required by such laws were null and void; we resolved that the intelligence, the wealth, and the patriotism of the State belonged only to the white people. We swore by the memories of Revolutionary sires that we would redeem our State, * * * and we did it; and I have no apologies to make for it.

And this same United States Senator, in the same speech, said, and I read from the RECORD, viz:

And as white men we are not sorry for it, and we do not propose to apologize for anything we have done in connection with it. If no other Senator has come here previously to this time who would acknowledge it, more is the pity. I would to God the last one of them was in Africa, and that none of them had ever been brought to our shores. We did not disfranchise the negroes until 1895

This United States Senator stated many other facts in his speech which my time will not permit reading.

I wish this distinguished Southern Senator could see my Democratic opponent in every Congressional campaign in my district (once in every two years) cultivating an intimate acquaintance with the 3,500 good, healthy colored voters in that district, and see how his Democratic sympathy just oozes out of every pore for the colored gentleman, and see how solicitous he is for the colored brother's welfare.

Mr. Speaker, this is before the election, however. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

The colored man, and every other man, had I the power, would be permitted to enjoy every right guaranteed to him by our Constitution in every State in this Union.

While giving good government to our island possessions, I would, if possible, institute proceedings with a view of accomplishing the same results at home for our own people, black or white, in every State, Kentucky not excepted.

This distinguished Southern Senator, no doubt, honestly expressed the majority sentiment of the gentlemen from the Southern States in reference to these matters. While pleading for the people in the Philippine Islands, who are by comparison 80 per cent less capable of self-government than are any of our people; while claiming for them alleged constitutional rights; while claiming that they have no right to be governed without their consent, they are at the same time admitting, and boasting of it, too, in this very Capitol, and in the face of the Government itself, that they sanction the oppression of our own people, who under our Constitution have the same rights exactly as they have themselves. The Democratic party of the United States is dominated by these Southern gentlemen, and the Washington Post, an independent paper, truly says, in an editorial March 29, 1900:

No one can deny that the South holds the balance of power and authority in the Democratic party. Without the South, the Democracy can not achieve even a remote approach to national domination. In any controversy or division within the organization, the South can turn the scale, and against its verdict no party measure has the smallest prospect of success. These facts can not be controverted or even seriously denied. As the South goes, the Democracy must go, or else invite inevitable ruin.

QUESTIONS ASKED AND ANSWERED.

"Would you shoot a poor Filipino into submission?" they ask. "Would you force them to become citizens of the United States?" they query.

No! Not if every person in the Philippine Islands should petition to become citizens, if they were to receive the same inhuman treatment, after submitting and after becoming citizens of the United States, that millions of our people, who are citizens, now receive in the South at the hands of the Democratic party, in shooting submission into them, and forcing them to give up their (political) citizenship. [Continued applause on the Republican side.]

These kind-hearted, constitutional, inalienable-right-loving statesmen are so tenderly looking after the rights of those mixed bloods of the archipelago that they would impress a stranger with the idea that we must, indeed, have here an ideally governed country for ourselves—a paradise for those who needed the kindly guidance of a loving hand!

If you want to learn how the consent of the governed is obtained in a larger field, right here at home, just read the reports of the contested-election cases which come up here annually from the Southern States. Why, sir, they vote men down there who have been dead for five years. They stuff the ballot boxes. They bulldoze, and they adopt any measure, and go to every extreme to accomplish their purpose.

So, Mr. Speaker, knowing all these facts as I know them (and the facts I have I secure from our RECORD, all in print and accessible to anyone), I do not attach any importance whatever to the inconsistent arguments of these constitutional expounders or to the "sympathy racket" of the opposition.

FOR SOUND MONEY.

The Republican party also declared unreservedly for sound money and also declared that the party was irretrievably opposed to any policy tending to debase our currency and injure the credit of our country, and declared that our silver and paper currency must be maintained at a parity with gold.

The Republican party could not redeem its pledge in this matter by the Fifty-fifth Congress, as the Senate of the United States was not of our political faith, and it was not until the present session of Congress that both Houses contained an absolute Republican majority, and were thus for the gold standard.

The very first bill that was introduced at this session of Congress marked the same number, Mr. Speaker, that was given to the report on the tariff bill passed immediately following the inauguration of President McKinley—H. R. No. 1—was entitled "A bill to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, and for other purposes," and that bill enacts into law that which the course of events has demonstrated as an existing fact, namely, that gold is the foundation upon which our commercial structure is built.

That bill reaffirms that the unit of value is the dollar, consisting of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, and makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain all forms of money issued or coined by the United States at a parity with this standard. It puts in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury ample power to do that.

The silver dollar retains its present legal-tender quality, and the bullion in the Treasury is to be coined as rapidly as possible, about twenty-five millions of it into subsidiary coin, and the remainder into silver dollars.

The "endless chain" is broken by proper provision, so that there is no possible chance of the recurrence of the troubles which were caused by the "endless chain" during a Cleveland Administration, during which time the Democratic Administration had to sell millions of dollars' worth of bonds to meet the current expenses of the Government.

The bill provides for a larger issue of silver certificates, and one clause of the bill, which the public will greatly appreciate, is that which gives the Secretary of the Treasury the right to coin any of the 1890 bullion into subsidiary silver coin up to a limit of $100,000,000, and another clause of the bill which the public will greatly appreciate authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to recoin worn and uncurrent subsidiary silver now in the Treasury or received hereafter.

This new law permits national banks of $25,000 capital to be organized in communities of 3,000 inhabitants or less. It also permits banks to issue certificates on all classes of bonds deposited up to the par value of the bonds. This ought to make an immediate increase of national-bank circulation up to a very large sum. National banks are permitted, under the new law, to issue circulation up to an amount equal to their capital.

So the Republican party, under the wise and patriotic Administration of President McKinley, has kept faith with the country by redeeming every promise made in 1896—enacting into law and placing the same on our statute books, making effective those promises.

All commercial and business interests are now fully adjusted to new conditions, and an era of prosperity such as this country has never before witnessed is the promising hour at hand and before us; and the wage-earner, who is the first always to feel the approach of hard times and the last to secure an increase in wages when good times are with us, is gradually securing for himself a larger proportion of labor's interests (by an increase in wages) in the prosperous times now shared in by every industry and enterprise.

What the country now needs and requires in order to secure a continuance of the present prosperous business conditions is that a protective tariff shall remain in force, with a modification of our internal-revenue tariff in the immediate future to meet anticipated reduction in governmental expenses, and that the financial legislation now on our statute books be left undisturbed.

Webster truly said that—

> He who tampers with the currency robs labor of its bread. The prosperity of the working classes lives, moves, and has its being in established credit and a steady medium of payment, and sudden changes destroy it. Honest industry never comes in for any part of the spoils in that scramble which takes place when the currency of a country is disordered.
> Did violent fluctuations ever do good for him who depends upon his daily labor for his bread? Did irredeemable money ever enrich the laborers? Certainly never.
> All these things may gratify the greediness for sudden gain, but they bring nothing but injury and distress to the house of industry and honest labor

And what is said as to the disastrous effects of tampering with the currency is equally applicable to frequent changes in the tariff. Business would become unsettled. Millions of honest employees would be thrown out of employment. Banks would curtail loans; manufactures would become embarrassed; railroad receivers would be in demand; dividends would be passed; wages of railway employees would be cut. Business would become paralyzed and salaries would be reduced, and we would have a recurrence of the disastrous business conditions prevailing under the last Democratic Administration, which was in control of Governmental affairs from March 4, 1893, to March 4, 1897. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall use only a few minutes, and shall not undertake to enter into any discussion of the fortification bill, nor shall I attempt to answer in detail the arguments of my friend from Ohio who has just taken his seat [Mr. SHATTUC]. Of course I listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent remarks of that distinguished gentleman. I observed that he remained perfectly quiet during all the preceding days of this Congress, when we had up the great money bill in December, to which he briefly paid his respects a few moments ago.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. All right; I yield to my amiable friend.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you not think that my record in keeping quiet has been more creditable than that of many members on your side in not keeping quiet? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Perhaps so. In view of what we have seen this morning—the gentleman's appearance—I am inclined to congratulate the House that he has been keeping quiet. [Laughter.] The gentleman, at any rate, kept quiet during all that great debate.

Then we had another great question here, the tariff against Puerto Rico, which it seems did not agitate my friend from Ohio, however much disturbance it gave to that side of the House and to the Republican party at large. He remained perfectly quiet under it. This morning he comes forward, and for about forty-five minutes he delivers a lecture to this side of the House and to the Democratic party at large. Of course we can endure it.

I only want to answer one contention made by the gentleman in respect to the great advantage that has been brought to the country by reason of the passage of the Dingley bill; not that I intend to enter upon a discussion of the tariff question to any very great extent; but the gentleman reviewed the declarations of the Democratic party in its platforms, going back to 1872, upon the tariff.

It seems to me that his logic is as unsound as the conclusion reached by that gentleman as to the result of the election of 1876. He went on to say what the declaration of the Democratic platform was on the subject of the tariff in that year, and decided that that declaration was unsound because, he said, the Republicans elected their President, Mr. Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, in 1876. Now, any such conclusion as that, I say, must demonstrate beyond peradventure the unsoundness of the gentleman's logic. We all know very well that Mr. Hayes was not elected President in 1876.

I will not take issue further with the gentleman upon that question, but I want to refer to one particular point, in answer to the gentleman's contention as to the advantage to the country derived from the passage of the Dingley tariff bill in 1897. I want to show by a few figures which I have here that that bill has had a very injurious effect upon one great industry in this country, one in which the gentleman's own State is profoundly interested, the industry of woolgrowing. I think I can show by the figures that the Dingley bill has been disastrous in its effect upon the price of wool in this country.

If the gentleman expects me to contend that the price of wool has not advanced since 1897 or 1898, I will disappoint him, because there has been an increase in the price of wool; but if we are to judge of the results by what has taken place, we will observe that the Dingley bill, or something else that has operated locally, has been disastrous to the price of wool in our country as against woolgrowers abroad. There must be some reason for it. If we are going to attribute a controlling effect to the tariff, I can establish by the figures that the Dingley bill has injured the wool industry in this country; and in order to do that, I want to compare the prices of wool in this country with the prices of wool abroad.

Mr. Chairman, if it can be shown that the price of wool abroad, in all classes, fine as well as common, has increased far more than in the United States, why, then, it must be that we have some local reason for its failure to increase to so great an extent in the United States. The gentleman, I say, insists that the Republican tariff controls the price of wool.

Now, I have here a circular from a leading firm of wool commission merchants, one of the leading firms in the United States, if not the leading firm, Justice, Bateman & Co., of Philadelphia. I wish to submit some of the figures which I get from this circular. I shall ask to insert the whole circular in the RECORD, or so much of it as relates to the price of wool, as a part of my remarks, and I want to comment briefly upon these figures. I shall call the attention of the committee more particularly to the contention I am making.

We have here a comparison of the prices of the different grades of wool, in this circular issued by this firm, first, of seventy-two grades of wool quoted in the circular. It shows that the average price on January 1, 1899, was 18 cents a pound, as against an average of 24½ cents at this date, an advance of 36 per cent in one year. This shows that upon seventy-two different grades there has been an increase of 36 per cent in the price in one year in the United States. This statement shows that on merino wool the advance abroad has been greater than on other grades; and while this advance of 36 per cent in the United States in this one year has been considerable, it has been considerably exceeded by the increase in the outside markets of the world. The per cent of increase outside of the markets in the United States has been 54 per cent. Now, if the Dingley bill and the Republican tariff control the price, I am justified in the contention in the beginning, that the Dingley bill has actually depressed the price of wool in the United States, and there is no escape from this conclusion.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I should like to ask my friend a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that the value of sheep has very largely increased under the Dingley law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not on that point now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will you answer the question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am giving you the figures on wool, and the gentleman from Michigan may put in his statement in his own time as to the price of sheep. I have not those figures at hand.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I ask if the value of sheep has not largely increased under the Dingley law?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. How much tariff was placed on sheep?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the price of sheep has not increased from less than $1 a head to $5 a head?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do you attribute that to the Dingley bill?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I attribute it to this, that there has been an extraordinary demand for wool in the American markets, for American wool, and a lessened demand for foreign wool——

Mr. RICHARDSON. How do you account for the figures?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH (continuing). And the value of sheep has greatly increased.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How do you account for the figures that I have given you here, that on 72 grades quoted by this firm—and they could have no purpose in misleading or deceiving—how can you account for the fact that the increase abroad within the year has been 54 per cent in the price, while it has been only 36 per cent in this country on those 72 grades?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I do not undertake——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, taking finer wools, on merino wool the advance abroad has been greater than on the other grades to which I have referred. Messrs. Buxton, Ronald & Co., in their London wool report, show the advance to have been 60 per cent on merinos and 48 per cent on crossbreds. In the United States the advance on merino and medium wools has only been 34 per cent. On nearly all grades the domestic prices are still below the importing point, the margin increasing as the grades progress from coarse to fine.

I ask consent to put the entire article into my remarks, in order that it may not be contended that I have garbled their statement in any respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks the article referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE WOOL SITUATION.

At no previous time has the home market been more completely in the possession of the domestic woolen manufacturer than it is at present, nor has the wool situation ever before appeared to rest upon a more solid foundation.

Almost without exception manufacturers have sold their output for months ahead, and having bought sufficient wool with which to make the goods required by these contracts, their interest in domestic wool at the advanced prices, even though below the cost of foreign, has perceptibly slackened.

This does not seem to have affected prices, however, for they continue remarkably firm, nor has the recent financial stringency developed any weak spots in the wool market.

A comparison of the 72 grades quoted in our circular shows that the average price was 18 cents on January 1, 1899, as against an average of 24½ cents at this date, an advance of 36 per cent in one year.

While this advance has been remarkable, it has been exceeded by that in the outside markets of the world, where the average advance since this time last year has been 54 per cent.

On Merino wool the advance abroad has been greater than on other grades. Messrs. Buxton, Ronald & Co.'s London wool report just issued shows the advance to have been 60 per cent on Merinos and 45 per cent on crossbreds.

In the United States the advance on Merino (taking XX Ohio as a basis) and medium wools has been only 34 per cent.

On nearly all grades of domestic wools prices are still below the importing point, the margin increasing as the grades progress from coarse to fine.

The present consumption of wool in the United States is estimated at 600,000,000 pounds per annum, and it seems as near certain as anything can be that the home supply will be inadequate for the requirements of manufacturers for this year, thus necessitating extensive importations.

According to The Wool and Cotton Reporter the amount of wool on hand at the present time, exclusive of that in manufacturers' hands, and of foreign wools still in bond with the duties unpaid, is more than 50 per cent less than it was a year ago.

It is evidently in view of these facts that already in many wool-growing sections buyers are contracting for the next clip in the belief that wool on the sheep's back at prices current to-day will show a handsome profit before the end of the year.

WILL PRESENT FOREIGN PRICES BE MAINTAINED?

Measured by No. 60's Botany Tops, Merino wools in Europe have advanced 59 per cent since January 1, 1899, which is the greatest advance in foreign markets for over thirty years.

The nearest approach to it was in 1870. Then, as now, the advance was caused by an abnormal mortality among sheep in the Southern Hemisphere, but as the percentage of losses then was less than half as great as it is now, it seems almost inevitable that the effect upon prices at this period will be proportionately greater.

Prices advanced without interruption from December, 1870, until February, 1872, and although there was a slight temporary reaction in the early part of 1872, prices closed higher in December of that year than in any previous part of the period.

The advance was practically continuous for two years from December, 1870, to December, 1872, and wool values remained on a high plane for several years afterwards.

The diagram [not supplied] in the next column shows the course of prices at that time, and as history frequently repeats itself, and especially as the present advance (instead of lacking any element of stability possessed by the former one) seems to be based on an even more solid foundation, from every point of view the indications are for a continuance of a higher plane of wool prices all over the world during the next few years.

It has been argued that consumers can not afford to pay the advance in the cost of clothing necessitated by higher wool prices; but if foreigners can buy clothing made of fine wool 60 per cent dearer than a year ago, surely the wealthier American masses can afford to wear clothing made of similar wool which has advanced only 34 per cent.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. With the gentleman's permission, I will ask if in your opinion the fact that there was a disastrous drought in Australia, where most of the fine wool used in England and in this country comes from, did not affect the price of wool?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think not. This article makes no estimate of that, and I am not undertaking to account for it.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. But it is a fact that sheep in Australia died by hundreds of thousands on account of that drought.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman must mean by that that the Dingley bill kept the sheep from dying here in this country?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. We know that hundreds of thousands of sheep in Australia were destroyed.

Mr. RICHARDSON (reading)—

Measured by Nobo's Botany tops, merino wools in Europe have advanced 59 per cent since January 1, 1899, which is the greatest advance in foreign markets for over thirty years.

The nearest approach to it was in 1870.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will publish that. I want to add to my remarks an extract from a letter from another firm of wool merchants, Louis S. Fiske & Co., of Philadelphia, addressed to a large woolgrower in the West:

DEAR SIR: We see by the newspaper reports that the growers of your State are contracting their wool now and tying themselves up for next season. This would seem to be unwise, with such a market as you are assured of having next season and a constantly advancing market abroad. From the statements of the best authorities, there is a shortage of fine wools the world over. Domestic wools are still below the price of foreign wools, and it is expected at the January sale that there will be a still further advance abroad.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say except to emphasize the fact that if the Republican tariff has controlled the price of wool, it has controlled it injuriously in the United States, and has put down the price of wool as compared with the price of that article abroad. It has grown in price more rapidly and higher, and the per cent of increase has been far greater, abroad than in the United States, as shown by this authority.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He means to be fair about this, I have no doubt. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not a fact that during the last year of the Wilson law, when we had free wool, our wool market was overcrowded with foreign wool from Australia, New Zealand, and other countries; and if it was not a fact that for over a year after the passage of the Dingley bill few of the fruits of that act could be realized by the American farmer because of excessive importations of foreign wool? But the gentleman from Tennessee knows and must admit that the value of sheep has very largely increased under the Dingley law; with the tariff, the valuation of wool to the woolgrower will be increased.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I propose to conclude my remarks, and I will yield then to the gentleman.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I want to ask you if that is not true, that we had a large excess and oversupply of foreign wool here when the Dingley law went into effect?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There may have been. I have not the figures before me, and I would not undertake to reply without them. The gentleman can produce his figures if he chooses. But that was not the line of argument that I was pursuing. If it be conceded that the answer would be along the line of the gentleman's inquiry, that will not controvert the fact that I have produced here, and that is that under the Republican tariff the price of wool has increased everywhere more than in the United States, and the gentleman will be at liberty to produce the facts to show that the Wilson tariff affected the price of sheep if he can do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one further matter that I wished to call attention to when I took the floor. I prefer to talk about another matter for a few moments. I want to call attention to the expenses brought upon us by the Republican party since the present Administration came into power. I have a statement here which shows the entire expenses of the Government for all purposes appropriated for the two years immediately preceding the late war with Spain. Take the appropriations for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1897, and for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1898, the two years, and compare the appropriations for the three years which immediately followed—that is, for the fiscal year which ended the 30th of June 1899, for the fiscal year which will end June 30, 1900, and for the fiscal year which will end 1901.

The appropriations for 1897 were	$469,499,010.41
For fiscal year ended June 30, 1898, they were	485,002,044.72
A total for the two years of	954,496,055.13
This was an average each year of	477,248,027.56
Now take appropriations for fiscal year 1899	893,231,615.55
Now take appropriations for fiscal year 1900	674,981,022.29
Take the estimates and appropriations for 1901	767,850,540.94
The total for the three years is	2,338,063,178.78
Or an average each year of	778,687,726.26
The average per year before the Spanish war was	477,248,027.56
Which shows an annual increase of	301,439,698.70

Or, as I have already stated, an increase in three years over what the appropriations would have been but for the change from a republic to an empire of over $900,000,000.

I do not charge that all this alarming increase is due to the policy of imperialism, for some of it belongs legitimately to the war with Spain. But when that war ceased, the war expenditures should also cease. They can not grow less under the grandeur and glory of the policy of imperialism.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield to me for an interruption?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Did the gentleman oppose the expenditures for carrying on the war?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I am not opposing the expenditures, and I did not oppose them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In your figures are the expenses for carrying on the war included?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman think that is a fair comparison?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes. You are not appropriating for 1901 for expenses of carrying on the war, but for expenses made necessary by your policy of imperialism.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman deny that the appropriation for the fiscal year 1901 will not be largely increased as a result of the war?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is an insurrection growing out of the empire.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me ask my friend in charge of the appropriations, and who knows more about them than I do, what is there in the appropriations for 1901—the fiscal year which will end about fifteen months from now—what is there in that budget of expenses that is chargeable to the war with Spain?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is it not true that we have a large expenditure in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly; that is what I am talking about.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is the gentleman in favor of discontinuing those expenses and withdrawing our army from the Philippines?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not undertaking to say that all these expenditures are improper. They are proper, many of them, and we are compelled to vote for them by reason of the policy you are pursuing.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If it is a proper expenditure, and you are compelled to vote for it, why do you criticise it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because of the policy of your party. The administration of the country by the Republican party is now entailing upon this country, by reason of its policy, which we must carry out under all the conditions, necessitates an annual expenditure of more than $300,000,000 more than it was necessary to spend before your party came into power and entered upon the present policy.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the gentleman——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not yield to the gentleman further. He has got all the time, and I only took the floor to emphasize the fact that it is going to cost us three hundred millions more year by year and every year as long as this policy is continued. I want to get away from this policy and turn back.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest the other day to the discussion of an issue which was presented by my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS], when he undertook to show that there had been great extravagance in furnishing an Army transport. I had not looked at the details cited by him, copied from a responsible and respectable paper published in his own city in Brooklyn. I am not here to insist that the details as set forth in that article are all correct. It seems that they are denied; but I want to comment on the fact that no gentleman on the majority side of the House, while that debate was being conducted here, raised his voice against the extravagance, the wild expenditure of money, by the present Administration. It was conceded, or admitted, that the contention made by the gentleman from New York was correct; we all supposed it was true, and instead of condemning it if it were true, even the great watchdog of the Treasury, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], whom we all honor and respect, defended that extravagance, and that is the point I wish to comment upon.

It was assumed in the argument that this expenditure had been had; that they were extravagant all conceded, and no voice on that side of the Chamber was raised in condemnation of that kind of extravagance. On the other hand, an argument was made in justification of it. "Nothing," said the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], "is too good for the American soldier." That is true as a theory. As the announcement of a fact, that is true; but the point at issue was the unusual extravagance in the furnishing of this Army transport. They went upon the idea that $750,000 had been expended, and not a voice was raised in condemnation of such recklessness, if recklessness had been employed in furnishing this vessel. The point I want to emphasize is that you have increased the expenditure under your Administration over $300,000,000 a year, and no man on that side of the House raises his voice to say it is time to get back to an economical administration of our Government.

The people will demand it of this Congress, and of the next Congress, and will continue to demand it until their demand is heard by the representatives of the people. We can not go on, Mr. Chairman, spending $750,000,000 a year. We do not need to expend so much. While the country is expanding and must expand, we have not grown that rapidly. All legitimate expenditures will be taken care of by this side of the House, as well as by that side. I regret and I lament to see the position taken by the majority side of the House, when no gentleman over there can be heard to raise his voice in favor of economy and a return to the simple republican institutions, a cheap, simple government, a government of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is all I desire to say, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the leader on the other side should come forward and criticise the necessary expenses for conducting the war. For many days before war with Spain was declared we heard gentlemen on the Democratic side insisting that we should immediately go to war. They were not willing to wait until we could make the necessary preparations; they were continually urging that the President was a coward; that this side of the House had not the courage to go to war. And now we find the same gentlemen coming forward and saying, "Why, you expended so much money; why do you not stop these expenditures?" Why, sir, it is ridiculous and ought to be ridiculous in the eyes of the American people for the leader of Democratic side of the House to get up here and criticise the necessary expenses for carrying on the war with Spain; and that is what he is doing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman please specify any necessary expense for carrying on the war that I have criticised? I deny that I have made any such criticism.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentlemen has criticised the expenditures of the last three years——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In total——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. By saying that they have been largely in excess of the expenditures for three years previous.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly; but I have not said that under your policy they were unnecessary or extravagant. I simply said that your policy makes it necessary to expend $300,000,000 more.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then the gentleman means to say that the war policy was our policy?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do; and that you are responsible for the condition that we are in now; that your administration or policy has made it necessary to expend $750,000,000 a year and to keep up this rate of expenditure.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then you mean to charge that the Republican party was responsible for the war and its results, do you, and that the Democratic party was not in sympathy with that policy?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, no; I did not say that at all.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does not that necessarily follow?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say that you are responsible for the expenditures of the current year and of the next year, and that you are responsible for all the expenditures we are now making. Your policy has caused war and insurrection, and the expenses follow.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We are responsible for the expenditures during the war; and I challenge the gentleman to call attention to one single item of expenditure that was not necessary. These appropriation bills have passed here carrying these amounts for different expenditures which were necessary; and what gentleman on the other side of the House has voted against any of them? Have you been guilty of sitting in your seats while extravagant appropriations were going through without entering a protest? I challenge the gentleman to show where his vote is recorded against a single appropriation bill that has passed——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not make myself understood. Your appropriation bills are necessary because of your policy. I can not vote against necessary appropriations.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, then, criticise them now?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not vote against necessary appropriations, because that would block the wheels of Government. I am not an obstructionist. I vote for these bills because your policy makes it necessary.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman, then, concedes that every item granted in the appropriation bills passed here has been necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not say that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now I want to call attention to the policy of the Democratic party.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention——

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman will pardon me a moment, and then I will yield.

You insisted upon the country going to war; you criticised the action taken as to means of defense. Why, sir, I heard every day from the Democratic side criticism as to the amount of ammunition we had on hand—criticism as to the condition of our coast defenses; criticism as to everything. What was the trouble? Why, sir, under Democratic Congresses you passed appropriation bills here for coast defenses carrying less than a million dollars. The largest appropriation bill that ever passed this House for coast defenses, when the House was controlled by the Democratic party, was a little over $3,000,000, and your average appropriation was not half a million dollars.

But during the time that the House has been under the control of the Republican side, during the time even that I have had charge of the coast-defense bill, we have appropriated over $50,000,000—more money than was ever appropriated in all time past for coast defenses. That is why the appropriations under a Republican Congress are a little larger than under Democratic Congresses—because we meet the necessities of the country; we provide for coast defense; we provide for a navy; we provide for the necessary expenses of the country, and do not, as the Democratic party did when it was in control, leave our coasts in a defenseless condition.

The gentleman complains about Army transports when he knows that the great shipowners of this country combined against the Government and insisted upon outrageous prices for the use of their vessels. The Government refused to contract with them, and finally had to take inferior vessels, when it could get them at halfway reasonable prices. Then we heard from the Democratic side complaints that our soldiers were shipped to Cuba crowded into vessels like so many hogs. When our Government was compelled to use any kind of transports they could put their hands on in order to get transportation at a reasonable price, you came forward and said: "Why, it is an outrage to send soldiers to Cuba on such transports."

On the other hand, if the Government had paid the outrageous prices demanded by many of the shipowners for better transportation, we would have heard from the gentleman from Tennessee that we paid outrageous prices to these great ship companies. That is the position always of the Democratic party. They criticise and criticise, but never act; never have the ability to formulate and carry into effect a policy; never have the ability to act, but always stand and criticise.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We did not have the power to act, and could not act at that time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman talks about the price of wool and the price of sheep. I am reminded of a story I used to tell while Cleveland was President of the United States and the Wilson bill was in force. It is a story about a farmer who wanted to have some sheep sheared and a young man who had been going through the country for weeks trying to find work, but could not find it under your magnificent times. Finally this young man struck a farmer, and the farmer said, "Look here, young man, I have some work for you if you can shear sheep." The young man said, "I am an excellent hand at shearing sheep."

So the farmer took him out where the sheep were, and he began by catching hold of the sheep by the hind leg to shear it in that way. The old farmer said, "Look here, that is not the way to shear a sheep. You want to get him by the head and begin in that way." "Yes," replied the young man, "I know that; but under this Administration I am ashamed to look a sheep in the face." [Laughter.]

No one is ashamed to look a sheep in the face now. Sheep were then worth about 75 cents a head. Now they are worth from three to five dollars a head. The price of wool is up, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is trying to explain why it went up. During the time that your Wilson bill was in force you never had to explain why the price of anything went up, did you?

You never had to bring statistics here and letters from London to explain why anything went up during the time the Wilson bill was in force. Upon the other hand, business men went up and farmers went up. There was distress all over the country, and no one was heard to explain why the price of anything had advanced, because the price of everything had gone down. Now the gentleman comes in trying to explain why the price of wool has gone up, why the farmer is raising sheep now and getting his sheep back because they are now profitable, when under the Wilson tariff bill sheep were not profitable. Why, I know in my own county men almost gave sheep away, because they could not sell them for a reasonable price and did not want to keep them. Now, I would like to see a man go out and get a sheep without paying what it is worth—paying from three to five dollars a head.

I appreciate the condition the gentleman is in. Prices have gone up, and some explanation must be made, and the gentleman goes clear over to London to get a letter to bring in here and put into the RECORD to show the farmers of this country why the price of wool has advanced.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What letter is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand the gentleman read from a letter from London as to prices of wool.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is very far off from the facts.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Where was your foreign letter from? You got some foreign letters into the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. From Philadelphia. I put no foreign letters in. I was quoting the prices in foreign markets as given in a circular from a Philadelphia firm.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You were quoting foreign prices.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was obliged to quote them, because I wanted to show that they are higher than prices in the United States under the Dingley tariff.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Did the gentleman, during the time the Wilson bill was in force, have any occasion to quote from anything to show that prices were higher, or to give any reason explaining why prices were higher?

Mr. RICHARDSON. What was the difference? Can you tell the difference between the prices abroad under the Wilson bill, on the 72 grades of wool I have quoted, and the prices now?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not the information before me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I supposed you could not do it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman a while ago declined to furnish information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because I did not have it before me.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman now, upon that line, tell me what you appropriated in Democratic Congresses for ten years to build fortifications?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have not had the Congress for ten years.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, in the last ten years that the Democratic party did have control of this Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON. You would have to go back before the war between the States, in the fifties.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It would be better for the country if you had to go a good deal further back than that.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. Was not the system of fortifications of our coast inaugurated under a Democratic Administration, as well as the new Navy?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It was inaugurated, and called the Endicott system.

Mr. BERRY. And the Navy under Mr. Whitney.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But a Democratic Congress declined to appropriate the money to carry into effect the system of coast defenses then inaugurated and called the Endicott system, and the country had to wait for a Republican Congress to carry into effect the system adopted during a Democratic Administration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss politics, but I could not refrain from saying something when the gentleman from Tennessee got up and undertook to criticise the expenditures which were brought about by the war.

Mr. BERRY. Let me ask the gentleman one other question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I wish to say this in addition, that if anyone will take this particular bill that is pending before the House and compare the amounts appropriated when the Republicans were in control with the amounts appropriated when the Democratic party was in control he can readily see why appropriations when the Republican party is in power are somewhat larger than they are with the Democratic party in power. It is because the Republican party provides for the defense of our coasts, and the Democratic party never did provide for it. We would have been in a defenseless condition when the war with Spain came on but for the appropriations made by Republican Congresses.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the report of his committee, which shows that appropriations for coast defenses were made by the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, both of which Congresses were under the control of the Democratic party.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Appropriations were made in a very limited amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. You stated that Democratic Congresses had never appropriated any money, and I call your attention to the fact that the appropriations were very liberal.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No, I did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I so understood you.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman misunderstood me if he understood me to say that. I never made any such statement. I say that Democratic Congresses did appropriate some small amounts.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Did they not appropriate just as much money as any Republican Congress did previous to the inauguration of the war?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no; appropriations under Democratic Congresses since the adoption of the Endicott system averaged about $2,000,000 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. How much did the appropriations of Republican Congresses average?

Mr. HEMENWAY. They will average in the neighborhood of $7,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. What was the appropriation in the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The appropriation in the Fifty-first Congress was a limited appropriation, but much larger than the appropriations that had been made prior to that time by Democratic Congresses.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman has not the figures before him, or he would not make that statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Was it $7,000,000, or anything nearly approaching that, in the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; it was $8,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am asking the gentleman how much it was, and I want to know what his authority is for making that statement.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman, by referring to the Book of Estimates or to the list of appropriations tabulated by the committee, which he can get in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, can readily see the amount appropriated every year, and I make this statement——

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will look on page 8 of the bill, he will have difficulty in showing from the figures where the greater liberality of the Republican Congresses was displayed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I call the gentleman's attention to the act for 1897, which appropriated $7,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Why, the country was alive at that time with fear of the war, and Congress had to act.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I call the gentleman's attention to the act of 1898, which carried $9,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. We had war then.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that appropriation of $9,000,000 did not come out of war expenses, but was appropriated in the regular fortification bill, and I call the gentleman's attention further to the fact that the fortification bill of 1899 carried over $9,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that, as shown by the figures tabulated on page 8 of this bill, the amount appropriated for fortifications in 1889 was $3,972,000. That was appropriated by a Democratic Congress, and it was the first large amount that had ever been appropriated for fortifications. This shows that a Democratic Congress was the first to recognize the wisdom of building fortifications.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The year following the amount was $1,233,594; in 1892 the amount was $3,777,803, and in 1893, $2,734,276. The amount appropriated in the bill for 1889 by a Democratic Congress was greater than in any previous bill up to and including 1890. In 1897 the gentleman knows, as we all know, that there was fear of war; that communications came to every member of Congress insisting upon the different ports of the country being properly protected, and large appropriations were urged. There was not one iota of opposition on the part of Democratic members. When the gentleman claims a surplus of patriotism on that side in the matter of fortification appropriations, the figures show that he is mistaken.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I simply claim this——

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The figures show that the gentleman is stating something that is not correct.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, the gentleman loses sight of the fact that the amount carried in the annual appropriation bills and the extraordinary amounts brought about by the war came out of the appropriation of $50,000,000 which was given the President and the amounts carried in deficiencies.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Was there a single vote on this side of the House against the $50,000,000?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, we have the leader on your side of the House here complaining of the amount of the appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. He is complaining of the extravagant appropriations, and the people will not indorse Republican extravagance, whether it is shielded by war expense or in any other manner.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman name one extravagant item?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I have one before me just now, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the manner in which Army officers have been promoted and immediately retired with increased salary. The speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT] the other day shows men who were promoted in office in the Army, served a few days, the sole and only purpose of which was to get the increased salary when those men retired; and I say it has been a disgrace to the Government that that should be allowed in the flagrant manner in which it was carried out.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do I understand that the gentleman is opposed to the retirement of the heroes of the Spanish-American war?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am not opposed to the retirement of the heroes of the Spanish-American war in their proper places, but I am opposed to retiring men to give place to favorites of the Republican Administration. I am willing to give every soldier his proper desert, and will go as far as any member of this House in that direction.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman name one particular case in which that power was abused?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Certainly, I will name a case. I think I can do it at once, quoting from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois the other day.

The list is as follows:

List of appointees.

* Suspended by court-martial. † Died.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is not the gentleman from Massachusetts aware that General Buffington is now Chief of the Ordnance Department?

Mr. JETT. Let me make a suggestion right there.

Mr. HEMENWAY. One at a time, please.

Mr. JETT. Let me make a suggestion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to tell the gentleman from Massachusetts that he is taking all my time.

Mr. JETT. Wait a moment. I want to refer to the major-generals.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Massachusetts is the gentleman I am addressing my remarks to.

Mr. JETT. He has got the floor.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, and I will yield to you after I get through with him.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will give attention to the Chair. The gentleman from Massachusetts has no time to yield. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked the gentleman from Indiana to yield to him for a question, which he did; but the gentleman has not yielded to the other gentleman, and he must ask permission of the Chair in the usual way.

Mr. JETT. I will say I had asked the gentleman to yield to me for a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not yielded to the gentleman at all. I yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and he asked me a question; and in reply I want to ask him if the gentlemen he has mentioned were not entitled to the promotion they have received?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I certainly do not think they were entitled to the promotion they received, to be retired, as I stated, three days after their appointment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does my friend think that General Buffington, who is now Chief of the Ordnance Department, was not entitled to his promotion?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. General Buffington may be an exception, but there are from twenty-five to thirty others, which I have quoted from the statement that the gentleman from Illinois made to the House the other day, which I challenge you to deny.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And these are the great extravagances which you are charging on that side.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. This is one of the great extravagances.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I regret that the President of the United States and the Secretary of War did not consult the gentleman from Massachusetts before these appointments were made.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. They must certainly have consulted the gentleman from Indiana in the matter, because the record shows such excellent results.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not criticising the gentleman who has charge of these promotions. I do not think I have sufficient knowledge of the question to do that, and I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts has developed that he has knowledge on the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Indiana certainly shows that he knows nothing on this subject.

Mr. JETT. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will permit the gentleman to ask a question, but not to make a speech.

Mr. JETT. This is not a question. You had asked the gentleman from Massachusetts to designate one particular item where in his judgment there had been extravagant appropriation of money by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask the same question of the gentleman, if he wants to answer it.

Mr. JETT. I will say, in the line of the suggestion by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], that by reason of the fact of the vacancy on the retirement of General Shafter as brigadier there were five appointments made, and they were made one day after another, consecutively, and if you want the list, I am prepared to give it, day and date. I will say that these appointments were made, in my judgment, for the sole purpose only of retiring these gentlemen, and to enable them to receive an additional salary when they were placed on the retired list.

If you want the list I will read it. On the 16th day of October, 1899, as we all know, General Shafter was retired as brigadier-general. On the very same day he was retired as brigadier-general A. C. M. Pennington was made a brigadier, and the very day following, October 17, 1899, he, too, was retired. On the same day General Pennington was retired Royal B. Frank was appointed as a brigadier-general, and on October 18 he was retired. On the very day he was retired General L. H. Carpenter was made a brigadier-general, and the next day he was retired. On the day he was retired General Ovenshine was made a brigadier-general, and on the 20th he was retired. On the day that General Ovenshine was retired General Burke was made a brigadier-general, and retired the next day. I say this is conclusive evidence of the assertion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the record of these gentlemen of whom he complains.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent——

Mr. JETT. I want to ask the gentleman from what source he gets that?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The official records of the War Department.

Mr. JETT. When did you receive it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Right now.

Mr. JETT. Did you not receive it from General DICK this very moment?

The CHAIRMAN (rapping with the gavel). The gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. He was kind enough to hand it to me; I did receive it from General DICK.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to place in the RECORD, as a part of his remarks, the table which he sends to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us know what it is.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is an official statement of the War Department, from the official records, of the record of the officers mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JETT. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the Chair has had an opportunity to put the question. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You are too late.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Indiana is not in the chair.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have placed in the RECORD the record of these distinguished soldiers, because, in reply to my challenge to point out a single item of extravagance, two distinguished leaders on the Democratic side have been unable to find any one item except a small amount of money to be paid to these distinguished soldiers who by their records have secured promotion.

Mr. BELL. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has forty-seven minutes.

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] five minutes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], in undertaking to justify the free trade in wool under the Wilson law, and in undertaking to criticise the effects of the Dingley tariff upon the wool industry, read into the RECORD this morning some statements of advanced prices of wool in Europe, saying that the advanced prices in our country were not proportionate.

Now, I desire to invite the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to some figures in the United States Statistical Abstract, just published, and which I hold in my hand. I find that in the last year of the Administration of President Harrison the value of the sheep in the United States was $125,909,264; that immediately upon the enactment of the Wilson law, giving us free trade in wool, the value of the sheep in the United States dropped from $125,000,000 down to $66,685,767 in 1895, and just as soon as the Dingley law was enacted and there was placed around the wool industry of this country the protection that has always been accorded to it by the Republican party, the value of the sheep of the United States mounted from $66,000,000 to $107,697,530 in 1899, and a less number of sheep than in 1895. Thus, Mr. Chairman, I am able to show from the records of the Government—facts which are indisputable—that the value of the sheep of the United States was nearly doubled when protected under the rates of the Dingley tariff.

As to the effects of the Dingley law upon commercial development and the prosperity of our country, I do not believe there can be any question but that it has been healthful and that there are evidences upon all sides of great prosperity; and in order that I may place upon the record some evidence of the prosperity that we have enjoyed under the Dingley tariff in the State of Michigan and are now enjoying, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a bulletin from the bureau of labor and industry in the State of Michigan, prepared by Hon. Joseph L. Cox, labor commissioner, this year. I ask unanimous consent that this document may be read and published in the RECORD. It completely negatives the proposition on the other side of the Chamber that we have not had prosperity under the Dingley law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You said I denied that there had been prosperity.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is what you said.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I deny it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You undertook a few moments ago to say here that the prices in Europe had advanced in greater proportion than they had in this country under the Dingley tariff——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not say that, and the gentleman ought not to make any such statement.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do you admit that we have prosperity here?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not said anything on that subject.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do you deny that we have prosperity here?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, you can not bulldoze anybody.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If you do not admit the fact, then I propose to read and put in the RECORD the proof of the fact.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Time was yielded to the gentleman by this side of the House——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Certainly you do not wish to avoid the fact?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There have been no facts stated.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I wish to read some facts to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You have made a statement which I challenge. You said that I had made some statement about the prosperity of the country. I made no such statement. My point is that I made no such statement as that which the gentleman in his elegant language has denounced as a lie. I wanted simply to say that I had not said what he attributed to me.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have the highest respect for the gentleman from Tennessee, and would not intentionally misrepresent him. I do not wish to put into the gentleman's mouth anything which he did not utter; but I understood him to say that the Dingley law had brought no prosperity to the wool industry of the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I said that the Dingley law had not increased the price of wool in this country correspondingly with the increase abroad. That was my statement.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Then I say that the value of the sheep in the United States has nearly doubled under the Dingley law.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman state the number of sheep?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Yes; I have the figures here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Have you the price of sheep abroad as well as here?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If you wish to publish that, I have no objection.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I ask unanimous consent that what I have sent to the desk be read or, if my time will not permit the reading, that it be published in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] has expired. He asks unanimous consent that the paper which he has sent to the Clerk's desk may be incorporated with his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BELL obtained the floor.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will not the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] allow me time to have this paper read?

Mr. BELL. No, sir; I have not the time.

The document presented by Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH is as follows:

BULLETIN FROM THE BUREAU OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL STATISTICS—MICHIGAN'S INDUSTRIAL CONDITION.

The following is taken from the introductory pages of Labor Commissioner Cox's annual report to the governor, which is now being placed in the hands of the State printer for immediate publication:

At no time within its history has the State of Michigan enjoyed the same general condition of prosperity in all branches of industry and pursuits of employment that it did during the year 1899.

MANUFACTORIES.

Her manufactories of all kinds, and in most instances and in nearly all localities, have been run to their full capacity, while not a small per cent have been in operation on "overtime," to meet urgent orders and increasing demands for their products.

LABOR AND WAGES.

Our laborers, both skilled and manual, have been very generally employed at fair and improving wages, and, as a matter of fact, there has been a great shortage of common labor in many parts of the State; so much so that it has materially interfered with work upon railroad construction and in the woods and mines, notwithstanding the fact that increased wages were offered. Especially has there been a scarcity of carpenters, masons, and builders' employees, while not a few other trades have at times reported a shortage of men.

REAL ESTATE.

Real estate has shown improved activity, and many sales have been reported at advancing prices on both city and farm property, while general building is progressing in every part of the State.

LAKE TRAFFIC.

Our lake traffic for the year made a good showing, as have all means of railroad and rapid transit, and many miles of new electric and steam railroads have been built during the year, or construction commenced, and the companies generally make favorable reports. While we have no means of knowing, only from general observation and reports, we believe that our telephone property has nearly doubled within the past two years.

MINERAL RESOURCES.

Michigan's rich mineral resources—copper, iron, etc.—have been very extensively opened up, and millions of dollars have been cleared from our mining interests through the sales of ores and stock during the past year. But our lumber interests are naturally decreasing, from the disappearance of heavy timber, yet Michigan enjoyed a large lumbering business during 1899. Her salt interests increased materially, and further prospecting promises to develop new salt blocks in localities where it had hardly been expected.

MICHIGAN COAL.

There has been a most wonderful development of her soft-coal beds, which has been somewhat retarded by the lack of miners and mine labor, though to-day there are something like twenty shafts in operation, producing the very highest grades of steam coal and employing several thousand men, where there were but two or three practical coal mines in Michigan two years ago.

MARL DEPOSITS.

Many large and valuable deposits of marl, from which can be produced the very highest grades of cement, have been discovered, while in several instances they have been successfully developed to the extent of most prosperous manufacturing, several factories now being in the process of erection. It is very probable that in no distant future Michigan will lead in the production of cement, as nearly all of her inland lakes contain valuable marl deposits in paying quantities, while the most of the marl is of the best grade. Fortunately, in numerous instances the required clay for cement manufacture is found in close proximity to the marl.

BEET SUGAR.

To-day Michigan has nine large sugar-beet factories in operation, producing a most excellent grade of beet sugar, that were not in existence three years ago, and all seem to have the brightest prospects ahead, while their annual contracts for sugar beets provides another branch of industry for her farmers.

AGRICULTURE.

Her agriculturists have prospered far better within the past two years than some time formerly, and though the price of grains have fluctuated, and at times been lower than might have been expected, our farmers seem to have bettered their condition through the raising of stock, wool, poultry, dairy products, and means of special farming.

MORE FACTORIES, MORE CAPITAL, MORE EMPLOYEES.

In the canvass of nearly 5,000 factories of this State, just concluded by the State factory inspectors, it was determined that 545 of them had increased their actual capital invested $6,531,884 during the year 1899, an average amount of increase for each institution of $11,985 active capital. In 1,382 factories of those canvassed there were found to be employed a total of 24,202 more employees than during the year 1898, an average increase in each of these factories of 17.6 per cent. It was also estimated that 74 per cent of these factories were able to pay their employees weekly, 12 per cent monthly, and 14 per cent semimonthly. Seventy-four per cent of these factories reported an increase of business over 1898.

WAGES ADVANCING.

The average daily wages, considering all the employees found at work in the factories of 1899, of which all grades are included, was $1.39 per day, while the same average in 1898, taken in the same manner and including the same employees was $1.37 per day. While the general labor canvass of the State has not been fully computed, it is very evident that the State wage will be even higher than it was in 1898, though exact figures will be given within a few days.

ORGANIZED LABOR.

From trade-union sources, through their several State and local secretaries and officers, we learn that these champions of wages and organized friends of labor are in a prosperous and growing condition and that increases in pay are being reported in various places with brightening prospects for still greater increases. Nothing is more sensitive to changing times than the wage scale, and an improvement in this is generally the last thing secured or expected.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes that this appropriation would go through without precipitating any political debate; but as we are now engaged in such debate I wish to put myself on record as saying that the extravagance of this Administration has no parallel. And I do not say it because this is a Republican Administration, but because events establish the charge. The Administration before it may have gone along the same lines, but this one has surpassed all others. I care not from what Administration extravagance comes, I condemn it, and every man on this floor ought to condemn it. Now, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is really anxious for an item of extravagance, I will give him one. With the very beginning of the Administration, immediately after the election, the newspapers stated, and I suppose correctly, that Mr. HANNA, the chairman of the national Republican committee, came here and insisted that we should have a great inaugural ball in the new Library building. The Senate absolutely refused to permit an inaugural ball to take place in that great Library building. Then Mr. HANNA, so the press of this city said, went to the Secretary of the Interior and said to him, "We want an inaugural ball in the Pension Office of the United States." The Secretary of the Interior said, "Yes, you may have it." Then he said, "I want possession of the Pension Office that we may properly decorate it, that we may have a becoming inaugural ball for President McKinley." It was conceded.

The employees of that office, numbering hundreds, were given leave, with pay, for ten days, and after the inaugural ball it took days for the force to get the furniture and everything in place again. Not only the papers of this city but the papers of the country stated these facts. The Star, of this city, as I recollect it, interviewed Mr. Murphy, the Commissioner of Pensions, and said, "The people of the United States would like to know what the expense of that ball to the people of this country has been." Mr. Murphy, over his signature, published in the Star, as I remember it, a statement saying, "I can not give you the whole expense. I can not give you the wear and tear and the cost of cleaning up, but I can say to you that the salaries of the employees who were laid off during that time cost this Government $70,000."

Now, you may call that extravagance or economy. From that day until this, I want to say that the extravagance here has been in keeping with the beginning, and it is something that must be stopped. I do not care what the name of the Administration is, it is so unnatural and so reckless that this whole machinery is honeycombed from the sills to the garret with wanton extravagance. Coming before our committee, the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Evans, said he could lay off a hundred clerks in the Pension Office and not injure the service one particle. Pension Commissioner Evans says that he has on his roll a surplus of worthless men to the number of 100 whom he could put out of office and not injure the public service.

He not only said that, but he said that there were men there so worthless that they were really in the way; that they could hardly get to the office. It came to our committee that in the Treasury Department they had any number of men who were practically worthless. It not only came to us about these two Departments, but the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, in one of his reports on the Loud bill, says that from his investigation a private individual could undoubtedly run the Post-Office Department of this Government on the appropriation and realize a surplus of thirty to forty million dollars a year instead of a deficit of from $8,000,000 to $12,000,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LOVERING having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 40:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 7941, "An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901," the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to omit the word "Ottawa," in line 22, page 11, of the engrossed bill.

AMENDMENT TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consent of the House that the resolution just reported be taken up and acted upon at once. In listening to the reading of the resolution members must have observed the necessity for immediate action.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the resolution about?

Mr. HITT. It is to correct a word in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution as set forth in the above message from the Senate was read.

Mr. HITT. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, you may go into any department of this Government where you have a friend, and he will point out to you where there are untold leaks and money expended for which the people of the United States do not get value received. You can come to the contingent expenses of Congress, and you will find that you can lop off many thousands of dollars in a year. Money is constantly being filched from the people of the United States without their knowledge and applied to personal as well as public purposes. When it comes to a public servant having his face shaved and his boots blackened at the public expense, when it comes to his being furnished with medicines, lemons, apollinaris and mineral waters at the public expense, and having himself hauled to and from this Capitol at public expense, I say it is filching the money from the people of the United States, and that you and I are not justified in sitting here and seeing it go on.

Mr. DALZELL. My friend will not insist that any such thing occurs at this end of the Capitol.

Mr. BELL. I will say to the gentleman that we often get credit for it. The other day I saw the statement in a newspaper from my district saying that the members of Congress got their faces shaved, their boots blackened, and their heads rubbed at the expense of the people working for a living throughout the country. [Laughter.] I wrote the editor that in this House we did not receive these perquisites; that we had a great many things to answer for, but not that; but I sent him the report of the application of the contingent fund of another Chamber and allowed him to draw his own conclusions.

And while we are talking for the good of the order to-day, I want to say to you that you are not justified and I am not justified in sitting here and saying that one body or the other of this Congress has the right to expend the people's money without limit, or constitute itself into a House of Lords, without you and I know where it goes or enter our protest against the abuse. Do not tell me that an executive officer of this body or the one at the other end of this building has the right to have a line of carriages drive up here and take us from here to our residences and from our residences back at the public expense. You might as well stick your hand into the Treasury of the United States and pull out the actual cash.

Now, if my friends say that is economy, then I say that I do not know the meaning of wanton extravagance. It is not only extravagance, but it is criminal. Read some of the reports under the head of "Contingent expenditures." I have no doubt we could find a good many unjust and unauthorized items that could be traced to our doors. Not only that, but I do not want my friends to say that I am responsible for these great expenditures that we are now making in the War Department. I do not refer to this bill, because this is a coast-defense bill and the expenditure should have been made regardless of the war.

I was not one of the very belligerent fellows in the days of excitement here. I was not rearing and pitching to go to war. I never wanted any Philippine war, so far as I was concerned. When I get ready to rear and scramble for war, I will be man enough to offer to take up a gun and go along with the boys on the field. I have always objected to the idea of so conducting what you call the accidents of war, which are not accidents, as to increase our expenditures to this enormous sum.

Now, I do not claim to be responsible for the war in the Philippines. I believe it is owing to a lack of diplomacy that that war is now going on. I believe that if at the time we went to the Philippine Islands we had come up like men, and had acted toward the Filipinos as we did toward the Utes, or the Cheyennes, or the Comanche Indians, and conferred with their chieftains or leaders, everything would have been all right and there would never have been a gun fired.

But as soon as Aguinaldo learned of the conflict he pronounced it a mistake, not intentional on his part, and insisted upon a conference. Our officers said, "We will accept nothing but an unconditional laying down of your arms." Aguinaldo said, "What are you going to do? That is what we want to know." General Otis refused to tell him what he was going to do, but demanded that he lay down his arms at our feet and say, "Now, do with us what you will; we are at your mercy." We never demanded that of an American Indian. We never demanded that of any people except the Filipinos. We fired the first gun, and we have been firing ever since. I believe it was a mistake. I believe that with diplomacy that could have been avoided.

Now, sir, we are in this expensive turmoil, and I have never withheld my support from anything or from any item that was necessary to carry on the Government according to the ideas of those in control. I do not think that I have the right to do it. I think if we have a government of majorities, and the majority of the people declare for one party and policy, it is the duty of every member of the minority to see that they have a fair opportunity to try their policy; that they have a fair opportunity to put it in force, and let the people judge of the wisdom of it in the future.

We have done that, and, having done that, we are not responsible for what is going on. The ideas of the majority and minority of this House are as different as night and day. One says, "These are our lands and property, and we must keep them; we will keep them." The other says, "We do not want them; we can not own a people against their consent under the ægis of our Constitution; we want the convenience of trade; we want shipping conveniences; we want trade favors; but we want to make you responsible and hold you responsible for your own government and for your own destiny."

With our policy we do not need your great army; with your policy the Army will never be less than it is to-day. In the United States a soldier, in times of peace, costs about $1,000 a year. You can figure the difference between 25,000 soldiers and 100,000 soldiers without any trouble in times of peace, and may double and quadruple it in times of war.

Now, our friend, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, is speaking about the increased price of sheep and wool and such matters and the causes of the rise; they always become confusing. Such arguments are illogical; there is nothing in them. These things vibrate on account of the evolution of time and changing conditions, and they are unaccountable from any single cause; but when you talk about the value of sheep, the same reasoning would apply to cows, chickens, etc.; and if the McKinley Administration doubled the price of sheep, I might tell my farmer friends that it also doubled the price of fence-wire nails. If it doubled the price of wool, I want to say it also doubled the price of iron and steel products; it has doubled the price of a thousand and one things.

The culmination of trusts under this Administration has doubled the price of a thousand and one things. One thing is going up and another thing going down; and every one who has come into contact with the stock business knows that J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture, reported a decline in the stock business, and the stock began to rise as the report showed that we were short in the United States over 8,000,000 head.

Last year Mr. Mulhall, in one of his exhaustive articles, takes up everything in America and shows our progress. He shows where we have progressed all along the line until he comes to stock, and he says that we have declined in a very few years 25 per cent. While we have increased in other things, he puts great stress upon the fact that the people of the United States have declined in the stock business 25 per cent below normal. That is because the ranges have been fenced in, because we have taken the herds out of the neutral strip, and the great ranges of the West have been taken up and cultivated.

I do not care to go into this further. What I desired to talk about was the general proposition of the extravagance of the Government. It can not run much longer as it has run without a great national scandal overtaking us. The thing is now recklessly—absolutely recklessly—run from the highest to the lowest Department. Men in office are acting as though they own the Government, instead of being its servants and in the employ of the Government. They are entitled to nothing except what the law gives them for their services, and I care not whether that reaches into Mr. Cleveland's Administration, into Mr. Harrison's Administration, Mr. McKinley's Administration, or anybody's to follow. I am ready to join any party in this House in insisting that not a dollar here or elsewhere shall be expended except as the law requires, whether it is for my convenience or for yours.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in charge of this fortification bill, stated a few moments ago that as a matter of general policy the Democratic party had failed to provide any appropriations for fortifications. I have just glanced over a report that has been submitted to me by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations himself.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not stated that the Democratic party failed to make any appropriations whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman's proposition, as I understood it, was that they had been opposed to appropriations and failed to make them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I stated that the average of appropriations made by Democratic Congresses was very much below the averages made by Republican Congresses since the adoption of the Endicott scheme.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman has qualified his statement from what he first said, as I understand. But for the sake of historical accuracy, I want to quote the appropriations for fortifications that have been made for several years.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, which I believe was a Republican Congress, and I desire to be corrected if I am in error, in 1883, the amount appropriated was $375,000. The Forty-eighth Congress, a Democratic Congress, in 1885, appropriated $700,000. There was no fear of war at that time. The Fiftieth Congress, a Democratic Congress, appropriated $3,972,000, and was the first large appropriation ever made by Congress for fortifications in the history of this Government. I think, Mr. Chairman, if these figures are correct——

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BROMWELL. Was not that large appropriation the first made after the adoption of the Endicott system of coast defenses?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If that is so, it further contradicts the gentleman from Indiana, who stated that the Democratic party refused or neglected to carry out the recommendations of the Endicott board.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman give the appropriations made by the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The Fifty-third Congress appropriated $2,427,004, and the Fifty-second Congress appropriated $2,734,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Compare that with the appropriations in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. As the gentleman knows, the controversy in regard to Cuba had been going on for a great many years, and the agitation had set forth in every city the necessity of increasing the appropriations for fortifications; and I know that when I came to Congress in the Fifty-fourth Congress, I was bombarded with letters from the Merchants' Association in Boston, and from the Chamber of Commerce there, and for the different interests, which insisted that Congress should make suitable appropriations for fortifications in the event of a war with Spain.

Everybody knew and realized for three or four years previous to the actual declaration of hostilities that war with Spain must be had. And when the gentleman cites the fact that in the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses, when war was imminent, the appropriations increased, he knows that it was with no opposition of the Democratic party, but with the aid of every Democratic vote. The gentleman also knows that the other side of the House has not a patent in this Congress or a monopoly on patriotism; and although these vast expenditures of money have been made under Republican administration and the Administration has been able to reward its favorites by appointments to the Army service and the naval service and in the different branches of the service, no opposition to the proper maintenance of the Government or a proper support of the war has been offered on this side of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that on the deficiency bills and out of the $50,000,000 put in the hands of the President for war purposes, twenty-one millions was expended for coast defenses, that being the sum made necessary by the war? The other amounts were carried on the regular appropriation bill—that is, seven millions for 1897, nine and a half millions for 1898, nine and a half millions for 1899—and the twenty-one millions was in addition to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I do not deny that statement.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the gentleman says that the amount carried by the regular appropriation bills was brought about by the danger of the war with Spain. I am calling his attention to the fact that twenty-one millions was outside of the appropriation bills and made necessary by the preparation for war.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Everyone knows that the $21,000,000 was not spent until war was actually declared; and to stand up here and say that there was not an agitation spreading over the country in regard to war for two years, that there was no agitation for two years before war was actually declared, is simply absurd.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is by reason of that fact that the twenty-one millions was expended, and had nothing to do with the regular amounts carried on the appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not seem to grasp my point. I may be deficient in language. The $50,000,000 was for an emergency, and $21,000,000 of that money was spent after the war had been declared.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not criticising the gentleman's patriotism at all. I say the amounts carried on the regular appropriation bills was not brought about by any danger of war and that the only amount that was expended by reason of danger of war was the $21,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss that line of inquiry any further. The gentleman knows that war was threatened for four years and that it became necessary, whether the Congress was Democratic or Republican, to increase the appropriations, and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the Fiftieth Congress, a Democratic Congress, they appropriated almost $4,000,000. The gentleman made a statement—I do not think he intended it—that the Democratic party had refused to carry out the recommendation of the Endicott board and refused to make appropriations for it. I call his attention to the fact that a Democratic Congress was the first one to make a large appropriation of over three million and a half dollars, when the largest amount appropriated by the Republican Congress before that was $735,000. This is the official record of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will yield, I will ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement of the expenditures since the adoption of the present system of fortifications.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I have no objection to the publication of that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] asks unanimous consent to publish with his remarks in the RECORD a statement of expenditures for fortifications during the period he has named. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as I stated before, and the statement has been made by others on the floor of this House, the Democratic party is just as patriotic as the Republican party, and so far as my observation has gone since I have been a member of this House, it is just as willing to sustain the Government in time of war as the Republican party is. As was said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], the honored leader on this side of the House, the Democratic party has never made any opposition to any appropriations that were deemed necessary by the Republican Administration for the carrying on of the war; they have been willing that the Republican Administration should take the responsibility in this matter, and the Republican party must abide by the result.

But when the gentleman from Indiana states that there has not been any extravagance, I can say that there has been extravagance in the War Department, in the conduct of that Department, during this war, and the figures, if they are analyzed—I have not time to analyze them this afternoon—will show this statement to be true.

In connection with this subject, I notice that as part of the Army appropriation bill there is appropriated this year for pay of officers on the retired list and officers who may be placed on the retired list during the current year, $1,273,000. I am as good a friend of the soldier as any man in this House, but I say that this is an extravagant item, and such an expenditure is not justified by the facts.

Mr. HULL. The figures which the gentleman has just given constitute the amount necessary to be appropriated for the pay of those officers who have been or may be placed on the retired list in pursuance of law. An appropriation of that amount had to be made or the law repealed.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. In answer to the gentleman from Iowa, I will say that this large expenditure is caused by the fact that, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated here, men have been promoted for the very purpose of placing them on the retired list at an advanced salary——

Mr. HULL. That matter constitutes but a very small part of the sum appropriated; only the difference in these cases between three-fourths of the pay of a colonel and three-fourths of the pay of a brigadier-general. Now, I want to ask my friend whether he does not believe that a man who served through the civil war, who served his country in all the Indian wars, and then in his old age served through the Spanish war, and never got beyond the grade of colonel because there was no vacancy ahead of him to which he could be appointed—whether such a man has not earned from his country promotion to the rank of brigadier-general that he might be retired as such?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I do not undertake to answer that question in a general way. I can only say that the record as given by the gentleman from Illinois shows—and I do not think the people will sustain such a condition of affairs—that men were promoted, their rank was increased in this way, and then after they had served in their new grade, in some instances three days, in other instances less than a week, and in other instances less than a month, they were retired, and received the additional pay consequent upon that promotion.

Mr. HULL. They were promoted for the express purpose of having a higher grade on the retired list.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. With higher pay than they would otherwise have received.

Mr. HULL. Did not President Cleveland make promotions the same way for the same purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am not defending the Administration of President Cleveland any more than any other Administration. I say the practice is wrong. The gentleman from Colorado said a while ago that the people of the country will not sustain extravagance of that kind, and I agree with him absolutely on this point.

Mr. HULL. At the last session of the Fifty-fifth Congress we passed a law under which every officer who served in the Navy during the civil war should, when retired, be retired at one grade higher than that which he had held in lineal rank. Does not the gentleman believe that such a law would be fair as applied to officers of the Army who served through the civil war and have rendered constant service since? Is it not fair that they should be retired at one grade higher than their regular rank in order that they might be placed upon an equality in this respect with officers of the Navy?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am not familiar enough with the subject to give an answer to that question. I do not know whether the salaries for corresponding grades in the higher offices of the Army and the Navy are the same. But I know this much—that when a man enlists in the Army he is given his clothing and his outfit free; but when he enlists in the Navy it takes about three months' salary to pay for his uniform, etc. If that same system is carried on through other departments of the naval service, then I think that legislation giving this increased rank and pay upon retirement in the Navy is proper. But, as I stated before, I do not think that matter is relevant to this discussion.

Now, in regard to the era of "Republican prosperity" which has been referred to as existing in all sections of the country, and as to the manner in which the Republican party has administered the affairs of this country, I wish only to make this observation and not to enter into any extended discussion: While the gentleman from Michigan was indicating a moment ago the great "prosperity" which existed throughout the country, I came across a little item from Dun's Weekly Review of to-day, stating that the number of business failures last week was 203, an increase of 11 over the corresponding period of last year. Let me say also that in other sections of the country this wonderful "prosperity" which has been depicted on the floor of the House does not exist, and I am informed that business in a great many lines in Boston is at a low ebb.

I also commend to my friends on the other side of the House who glory in the wave of "prosperity" that is claimed to have been caused in this country, and what they have accomplished in the last four or five years, the trust question as something that needs solving. I do not think that any great party which is in power in this House and in the Senate and in the Executive Mansion can go before the people of this country and tell them that it is impossible to frame laws which will prevent corporations of this land from making $80,000,000 a year on a capitalization of $100,000,000, as is the case with Standard Oil, and so increase prices as to make an advance of 3 cents a gallon on the oil used by every poor family in the land, or prevent a condition of affairs such as was instanced in the late Carnegie-Frick deal, where it was shown that $40,000,000 was to be made this year on a capitalization of $25,000,000, and where there has been a reorganization in which one of the members stands for an amount equivalent to $186,000,000, when it is a well-established fact that a great deal less than $100,000,000 is put in as cash in the plant.

How do my Republican friends intend to answer this question when they go before the people this fall? Will they satisfy the people by pointing out that wages have been raised in some lines, that our exports have increased, and that some mills are running night and day? Any prosperity based upon trusts is fictitious prosperity and can not last, and the gentlemen on the other side of the House must realize this as well as I do. Three years ago, by reason of the destruction of the wheat crop in South America and Asia, our farmers received excellent prices for their wheat. The good prices received at that time have been the basis of the good times of the past few years.

How much has the Dingley bill raised the price of wheat the past two years? Is it not a fact that wheat is cheaper to-day than for some time? If this is so, and the farming population represent the greater portion of the people of this country, and they are getting low prices for farm products while the trusts and monopolies have increased tremendously the cost of farming implements as well as everything they eat and wear, how long will this prosperity last? Nearly every commodity in this country to-day is controlled by a trust, and to say that the people can continue to prosper when dividends must be paid on stock watered, in some cases, a thousand per cent, is to convict the American people of insanity.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House know that never in the history of the world have corporations and monopolies been allowed to exist and thrive and extort money from the people as they have been in this country during the last three or four years and as they are doing now right under our noses to-day. For any party in the control of the Government, in any branch of the service, to laud what it has done in the last three or four years, and then to say that Congress is unable and has not the power to restrict these combinations, is to insult the intelligence of the American people and term government of the people, for the people, and by the people a farce. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that we read the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I was about to make that request.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For construction of a sea wall and for necessary filling in at the reservation at Fort Caswell, N. C., $150,000.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I wish a few moments in which to refer to a statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and also to a paper which he asked to print in the RECORD.

Mr. BELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is our duty to object to any outside debate under the five-minute rule. I shortened up my time in order that we might get through early to-day. I am perfectly willing, after finishing the bill, that the gentleman may address the House.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will you not yield five minutes to the gentleman?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope my friend will let the gentleman have five minutes.

Mr. BELL. I will object to the next request of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

Mr. BELL. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LOVERING. I wish to refer to a statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and also to a paper which he asked to have printed in the RECORD. I do not think he meant to deceive himself; nor do I think he intended to mislead the House in anything that he said, or in anything that he found in the papers. He made one statement, however, which calls for an answer, and that is that under the Dingley tariff the price of wool has increased more abroad than in this country. I am willing to concede this, but I wish to say that the reasons for it are apparent to everyone who has studied the question, and they do not in any way reflect upon the great prosperity enjoyed under the Dingley tariff.

It is a fact that between the election in November, 1896, and the passage of the Dingley Act, in 1897, enough wool was imported into this country to meet the requirements of our manufacturers for two and a half years. It is a fact that woolen goods enough to last the country for two and a half years were also imported. Every storehouse in the neighborhood of a woolen mill or a woolen center was crowded and stored with wool. Since then wool has been exported from this country to Europe and sold in the London market, and the fact that the price of wool just at this moment shows an increase of 54 per cent abroad and only 36 per cent at home is not remarkable. This country consumes somewhere in the neighborhood of 600,000,000 pounds of wool each year. The importations of wool between November, 1896, and the passage of the Dingley Act in 1897, added to the home production of wool for the following two and a half years was fully 1,500,000,000 pounds.

In the months immediately preceding the enactment of the Dingley law the markets of the world were stripped of wool and woolen goods, which were hurried into this country and thrown upon the American markets, producing stagnation. We are only just now getting to the end of this supply, and are beginning to feel the benefit of the Dingley tariff. Any man who is in business or who has anything to do with the woolen business understands why it is that the prices of some wools abroad are higher than they are in our own markets. That is all I desire to say.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

And then, on motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9711) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MANAGERS OF NATIONAL HOME FOR VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 216, for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How much will it cost?

Mr. HULL. It will not cost anything. It is to reelect the Board of Managers of the National Home for Volunteer Soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Sidney G. Cooke, of Kansas; Charles M. Anderson, of Ohio, and Alfred L. Pierson, of Pennsylvania, be, and the same hereby are, appointed as members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States; Sidney G. Cooke to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1900; Charles M. Anderson to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1900; Alfred L. Pierson to succeed himself, his present term of service expiring April 21, 1900.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended an amendment striking out, in lines 4 and 9, the word "Pierson," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Pearson."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think there is no objection on this side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I certainly shall object to that resolution as a whole. Two members who are named there I have no objection to; but I have some letters that I want to lay before the committee. There is one member from my own State, and I have a great number of papers and letters that the committee ought to see.

Mr. HULL. I want to say that I had no idea that there would be any objection to this. The terms of these members expire early nexth month, and this provides for reelecting the three members of the board who are already serving.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Personally, I have objection to either of them, but I do desire to lay before the committee certain statements which I have, which I certainly should have laid before the committee long ago had I supposed that this question was to be disposed of now.

Mr. HULL. It is out of the hands of the committee. The committee have reported it to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Take them one by one, and I will not object to two of them.

Mr. HULL. I can not do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISBURSEMENT OF PUBLIC MONEYS IN OUR INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 9388, reported unanimously by the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill (H. R. 9388) to provide better facilities for the safe-keeping and disbursement of public moneys in the Philippine Islands and in the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to designate one or more banks or bankers in the Philippine Islands, and in the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico, as depositaries of public moneys, in the same manner as he now designates national banks as depositaries of public moneys under the provisions of section 5153, Revised Statutes of the United States; such banks or bankers thus designated to give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds, or otherwise, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public moneys deposited with them and for the faithful performance of their duties.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Insular Affairs, were read:

Strike out the word "or," in line 11 of the printed bill, and in lieu thereof insert the word "and;" and at the end of line 13 of the printed bill add the following: "Provided, That this act shall apply to Cuba only while occupied by the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BREWER], gave notice that he would offer an amendment to this bill when it came up in the House. He is not present this evening, and I will have to object until he can be present.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

SUBSIDY SHIPPING BILL.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have until the 20th of April to file a minority report upon the subsidy shipping bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have until April 20 in which to file a minority report. If there be no objection, this permission will be granted by the House.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OTJEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WISE, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITE, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MINOR, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. MAHON, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROMWELL, for one week, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7649. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to the city of Elreno, Okla., for cemetery purposes;

H. R. 8463. An act ratifying an appropriation by the legislature of Oklahoma out of the Morrill fund for the use of the university at Langston for colored students;

H. R. 153. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth Johns; and

H. R. 5049. An act to settle the title to real estate in the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex.

PRESERVATION, DISTRIBUTION, INTRODUCTION, AND RESTORATION OF GAME BIRDS AND OTHER WILD BIRDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6634) to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture are hereby enlarged so as to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and other wild birds. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories. The object and purpose of this act is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds.

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as Congress may appropriate therefor.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to import into the United States any foreign wild animal or bird except under special permit from the United States Department of Agriculture: Provided, That nothing in this section shall restrict the importation of natural-history specimens for museums or scientific collections, or the importation of certain cage birds, such as domesticated canaries, parrots, or such other species as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate.

The importation of the mongoose, the so-called "flying-foxes" or fruit bats, the English sparrow, the starling, or such other birds or animals as the Secretary Agriculture may from time to time declare injurious to the interest of agriculture or horticulture is hereby prohibited, and such species upon arrival at any of the ports of the United States shall be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to deliver to any common carrier, or for any common carrier to transport from one State or Territory to another State or Territory, or from the District of Columbia or Alaska to any State or Territory, or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia or Alaska, any foreign animals or birds the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds, where such animals or birds have been killed in violation of the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which the same were killed: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the transportation of any dead birds or animals killed during the season when the same may be lawfully captured, and the export of which is not prohibited by law in the State, Territory, or District in which the same are killed.

SEC. 4. That all packages containing such dead animals, birds, or parts thereof, when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages. For each evasion or violation of this act the shipper shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200; and the consignee knowingly receiving such articles so shipped and transported in violation of this act shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200; and the carrier knowingly carrying or transporting the same shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have received some very earnest protests against the passage of this bill. The gentleman from Iowa says he has an amendment that will cover those objections; but I can not look into it and decide the matter now, and I will therefore have to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

A bill (H. R. 4681) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Keiff.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 for the grading, repairing, pavement of gutters, and improvement of Thirty-seventh street between New Cut road and Tennallytown road, etc., intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at a point on said river where the section line extending east and west between sections 8 and 17, in township 157 north, of range 50 west, in Marshall County, State of Minnesota, intersects said river, reported it with an amendment.

COURT AT CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

Mr. PETTUS. I am ordered by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back favorably, without amendment, a local bill in reference to United States courts in the State of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 65) to authorize the holding of a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia in the city of Charlottesville, Va.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It consists of only a dozen lines, and it will not take three minutes.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3943) to provide for the sale or leasing of water power created by public works; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BERRY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3944) for the relief of A. C. Kerr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3945) for the relief of L. J. Lawrence; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3946) for the relief of George F. Schild; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 3948) to provide better facilities for the safe-keeping and disbursement of public moneys in the Philippine Islands and in the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 3949) for the relief of Mrs. Sabina O'Callaghan, administratrix of the estate of Denis O'Callaghan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 3950) granting an increase of pension to Henry Blake; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3951) granting an increase of pension to Peter Bittman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3952) granting a pension to Thomas M. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. DAVIS submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to the Commercial Cable Company of Cuba to lay and operate a submarine cable from the United States to Cuba, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment relative to appointments to fill vacancies in the lowest grade in the regular establishment of the Adjutant-General, Inspector-General, Judge-Advocate-General, Quartermaster-General, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1005) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed.

STATISTICS RELATIVE TO NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to the Senate as soon as practicable a statement showing in tabular form the condition on March 31, 1900, of the various navy-yards and stations, embracing items as to each yard and station as follows:

The number of commissioned officers on duty; the number of foremen and leading men other than workmen; the number of workmen; the amount of wages according to the pay roll or other vouchers, for either the week, fortnight, or month preceding; and the number of vessels at the yard undergoing repairs; and in addition, a separate list of the names of all the ships at the yard or station or within the harbor, with a memorandum as to each showing its condition, whether undergoing or awaiting repairs, or in commission or out of commission, or about to go into commission or out of commission, or laid up for any other purpose than repairs.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 31st ultimo approved and signed the act (S. 197) for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 963) to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the port of Greenbay, Wis.; and

A bill (H. R. 9713) permitting the building of a dam between Coon Rapids and the north limits of the city of Minneapolis, Minn., across the Mississippi River.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1992) for the relief of Mathias Pederson; and

A bill (H. R. 2356) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 8356) to amend section 953 of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. 9789) to detach certain counties from the United States judicial district of northern California and to annex such counties to the United States judicial district of southern California, to divide said southern district of California into two divisions, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at the city of Fresno and city of Los Angeles.

The bill (H. R. 9711) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 216) for the appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a copy of a letter from Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, Commissioner-General of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1900, dated November 17, 1899, submitting a detailed statement of the expenditures incurred under authority of law.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 2, 1900.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—PUERTO RICAN TARIFF.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged question. I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

I find in Thursday's RECORD, the 29th, in the vote upon the motion of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to strike out the 15 per cent tariff tax from the Puerto Rican bill, that I am reported as absent and not paired. My regular pair, since he has been a member of the Senate, has been the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and when I left the city some weeks ago, under the advice of my physician, we had, as I supposed, an understanding that my pair should be protected upon all questions where there was anything like a party division.

The Puerto Rican bill was then pending in the House, with a provision for 25 per cent tariff duty upon imports into Puerto Rico. I do not now recall whether I mentioned that bill to him particularly, but I assumed that he would vote with the large majority of his party in favor of the bill imposing a special tariff upon Puerto Rico.

When the Hawaiian bill, to provide a civil government in Hawaii, came before the Senate, I availed myself of the latitude of debate permitted by our rules, in speaking upon that bill, to state that I am unalterably and emphatically opposed to any duty upon imports into Puerto Rico, and that I do not believe the Constitution of the United States authorized any but uniform taxation, including a tax on imports, throughout the territorial limits of this country.

I do not make any complaint of the Senator from Minnesota, because he has been uniformly fair and courteous.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will allow me to state that the junior Senator from Minnesota has been ill quite a little time.

Mr. VEST. I have not seen him since my arrival.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether he was here on that day.

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator; for I only arrived here Saturday night. I noticed in the RECORD that the Senator from Minnesota did not vote on that question, and that my pair was not protected, to use the common expression. I should certainly, if present, have voted for the motion of the Senator from Alabama to strike out the 15 per cent duty.

If the Senate will indulge me for a moment longer, I desire to state, reiterating the views I expressed when I spoke upon the Hawaiian question, that I do not wish it understood that as a lawyer I indorse the proposition that the Constitution follows the flag. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that it does not follow the flag, while at the same time the Supreme Court has emphatically decided in the same case that within the territorial limits of the United States the Constitution applies to every inhabitant.

I call the attention of Senators (and I do not propose to discuss the Puerto Rican bill) to a decision made in 140 United States Reports, to which I have heard no allusion, except by the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. ROSS] when he spoke upon the Philippine question. It was a most remarkable case, and I ask the attention of my brother lawyers in the Senate especially to it.

It seems that a seaman named Ross had shipped upon an American merchant vessel sailing from New York to Nagasaki, in Japan. Of course the vessel belonged to our merchant marine and was under the United States flag. After arriving at Nagasaki, Ross murdered another sailor upon the deck of the vessel. He was carried before the United States consul, tried for murder, and sentenced to be hung. The consular court, under the treaty stipulation between Japan and the United States, had the right, without trial by jury, to inflict capital punishment.

The President of the United States interfered and commuted the sentence of death to life imprisonment, and Ross was sent to the Albany Penitentiary. Immediately after having been incarcerated, he sued out a writ of habeas corpus before the United States circuit judge for that district, upon the ground that he had been denied the right of trial by jury, which was guaranteed to him by the Constitution, and that the crime having been committed on a vessel of this country, under the American flag, the Constitution followed the flag, and his sentence was illegal.

The case was elaborately argued, and the Supreme Court decided that the sentence was a legal one and he must remain in the Albany Penitentiary; that while for certain purposes constructively a merchant vessel of the United States under our flag is subject to our laws, yet that in order to avail himself of the provision of the Constitution in regard to the right of trial by jury the vessel must have been within the territorial limits of this country.

I would be obliged to any Senator who discusses this question to-day or to-morrow (I understand we are to vote to-morrow afternoon) to explain how the Supreme Court of the United States could come to this conclusion and state emphatically that within the territorial limits of the United States the Constitution applies without acts of Congress or treaty stipulation and yet hold that we can impose a different tariff tax upon the people of Puerto Rico from that imposed upon the people of Missouri.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. BATE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted, before the Senator commences, to move to reinsert a word that was stricken out on Saturday from section 3 of the bill. In the print we had before us on Saturday the word "such," in line 17, page 4, after the word "all," at the end of the line, was stricken out under a misapprehension as to the office of the word at that place. It ought to be restored to the bill. I ask consent that it may be reinserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to insert after the word "all," in line 17, page 4, the word "such."

Mr. FORAKER. It will be, in the print now before us, to insert the word "such" before the word "merchandise" at the beginning of line 21, on page 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, in order to make more definite and certain what we were then undertaking to do, I move to add at the end of the section—that is, at the end of line 24—the following:

On merchandise and articles going into Puerto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Puerto Rico.

So the section will then be explicit that there shall not be any duty levied upon articles of merchandise going into Puerto Rico or coming from there into the United States after March 1, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the period at the end of line 24 and insert a comma, and add:

On merchandise and articles going into Puerto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Puerto Rico.

Mr. CULLOM. That is at the end of the section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the end of the section. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I deem it my duty as a Senator, as it is my pleasure, to give expression to my convictions in regard to the bill under consideration. It is a grave question, Mr. President, perhaps more so than any that has been under consideration of recent years. In the outset I desire to say that I am one of those who voted against the recent treaty of Paris, all of which, with its relative antecedents and results, is involved more or less in this discussion. Not only that, but I believe if that treaty had not been ratified when it was, but had been left open for further consideration, much bloodshed, much expenditure of money, and many of the sorrows and misfortunes that have followed in its wake would have been avoided.

I was against that treaty. I was against it here in executive session of the Senate, and voted against it. There is now no impropriety in my speaking of it or stating how it was passed, as the secrecy of the executive session has been removed. It is now common property, belongs to the country, and we are free to express our opinions in regard to it and to state the opinions expressed and the votes cast and the sentiments uttered when it was considered in executive session.

There are many Senators here, I wish to say, who most conscientiously voted contrary to the way I did, but quite the larger portion of the political party with which it is my fortune to affiliate opposed the treaty. It is known as a part of the history of the treaty, that to pass it required two-thirds of a quorum voting, and it came near not passing. A change of one vote from one side to the other would have neutralized it and the affirmative proposition would have been lost. Yes, the change of a single vote on the question of ratification in executive session would have changed the result and have left it open for future consideration, and when the real situation as to the Philippines could and would have become known, different and more satisfactory terms would have been agreed upon and avoided much of the troubles and expenditures that have since come upon us. But, however that may be, it is now in force and we must make the best of it.

It is an indisputable fact in my mind that Porto Rico, as one of the islands which have been brought in under that treaty, belongs to the United States, certainly as thoroughly as does any of its other outlying possessions; and as such it is the duty of the country to see that it be properly cared for and that it have all the privileges that any other portion of our country is entitled to under the Constitution.

The truth in connection with this, as I believe, is that there is something behind Porto Rico which is mightier than the Porto Rican question. Left alone, without being associated with other interests, it could be disposed of very readily, and there would perhaps be but little trouble and less excitement and sensational feeling in our country in regard to it; but, Mr. President, there is evidently behind it a political dagger in shape of the Philippines. That is the objective of this battle. No one who has witnessed the scenes that have taken place in this Chamber; no one who has read the current criticisms of the newspapers of the day; no one who has read the messages of the President and the communications of the Secretary of War and other officials connected herewith, but knows and feels in his heart that there is something behind this more mighty than is this proposition touching the government of Porto Rico. The Philippines are behind it with all their troubles. That is like Pandora's box, full of ills, some of which are upon us, and others are to come. That is the real question. Porto Rico is but its front shadow.

Yes, Porto Rico could be readily settled, easily disposed of, but for that which is to come after it. The embarrassing question is as to the character of government that we are to have in the Philippines and how it will affect certain interests. We are upon that line of battle to-day, under cover. Able and astute politicians of this Senate, especially those who represent and lead the other side of this Chamber, see that it is necessary to fight this battle upon the Porto Rican line, and not on that of the Orient. They have so decided, and hence the battle has been made here, although there is a bill from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] upon the table which involves the other question in regard to the character of the government that we are to have in the Philippines.

Then the Porto Rican question and the Philippine question is the same thing, and this has been brought about very shrewdly and adroitly by the leading spirits—those who think and mold and lead the movements of the Republican party of the country.

But, to return to what I started to say touching the ownership of Porto Rico by the United States, we are told that it has come into our possession not only by the treaty, but by conquest. Then we have, we might say, a double title to it; and, this being so, it is a part and parcel of this great country. It is under the palladium of the United States and is entitled to her protection.

Mr. President, I did not favor at the start, and do not now, any fighting for the purpose of foreign conquest, for I believe in letting other people alone; but inasmuch as it has come upon us, it is the duty of every good citizen, and especially those who have a voice here in the Senate, to stand by the country in all its needs and do the best we can until the matter is honorably terminated. I feel that to be my duty, and I expect to perform it.

If Porto Rico is a part of the United States, it is the duty of the Government to give it protection, and the question is how it should be done. Does the Constitution go with the flag? The flag is there, floating over that island in peace. Her people have given welcome in peaceful terms to the representatives of our Government there, not only to our civil officials, but even to the Army. The flag is there now, quietly and peacefully floating over that island, kissed by the breezes of the Caribbean Sea. The officers of the Government of the United States are there now, and, as we are informed, meet with the respect and confidence of those people over whom it is claimed we are to have control.

Such, Mr. President, is the situation. The point is made that, while that is so, the Constitution is there in full force. Upon the theory that the Constitution is in that island now, can we enforce, and must we not enforce, all necessary laws of the United States under it in order to bring about that condition of affairs which is desired by the Government?

I ask the question, Mr. President, and I think it a pertinent one: If the Constitution of our country has not extended its vigor along with the flag in Porto Rico, why is it that those officers who are there—not only those who are citizens of the United States proper, who have been appointed by our President, but those who wear the regalia of our Army as a part of the sheriffalty and constabulary and carry the mace of peaceful authority as civil officers, men who are by birth and citizenship Porto Ricans—why, I ask, are they required to take the oath of office to the Constitution of the United States? Why are they required to swear to support that instrument, unless it is there ex proprio vigore, for no statute has carried it there? I can see no reason why.

Not only that, Mr. President, but you see the United States Government has sent its civil officers there and has taken absolute control of that island. What character of officers have we there? Both military and civil. And this bill now under consideration has sections that have been passed and agreed to in the Senate by which the Government of the United States will take charge of this island in every way. By this bill the President is to appoint judges with large salaries, clerks with salaries, and all the officers and machinery of the government necessary will be engrafted there. Now, Mr. President, if this is so, is the Constitution not already there in its full force and vigor?

Not only so, but you are undertaking also to take charge of their educational interests. You have your schoolmen appointed and in service there, and money is asked to be appropriated for the purpose of conducting those schools, and you by this bill are seeking to have all the machinery necessary for the organization of a society and a government, and all this manipulation is under the protection and guidance of the United States. Then, can there be any question, I ask, in regard to the Constitution of our country being there in full force?

Not only that, Mr. President, but you find section after section in this bill recognizing the various forms as well as substance to carry this contemplated work into effect, and, among others, we find the very remarkable proposition already passed, as a section in the bill, not nem. con., but passed by almost a party vote of 35 to 15, I believe, to allow that government, Porto Rico, to issue bonds to the extent of $10,000,000. If the Senate pass such laws as that, can there be a lingering doubt in the minds of those who advocate the bill that the Government of the United States with the Constitution is there in all its force and power?

The Constitution of our country extends wherever the flag goes. It is like the heart of man, which propels and pulsates the blood even to the extremities of the body. The heart throws the blood out through the arterial, and returns it through the venous, circulation not with more certainty than does the great heart of our country, the Constitution, with all its force, throw out to its extremities all the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizenship. It has thrown them, in my opinion, to the Philippines, 8,000 miles distant, to a foreign people, with a foreign language, because the flag is there, and so, therefore, I believe it is in full force and vigor in Porto Rico.

Yes, the Constitution stands like a great finger board and points the way along with the flag, which is its invariable accompaniment. If that is so, how can the question be raised here of whether the United States has gone there in such manner as to have the Constitution, its principles, protection, and privileges, enforced in that island? The Constitution is there, Mr. President; it is carried there by virtue of the treaty of peace and by virtue of the conquest that was made in the Spanish war.

I believe that when the courts of our country come to speak upon it they will favor the idea we advance, that the Constitution has gone into our newly acquired territories by its own force and is everywhere the flag is.

But there are some reasons which have been urged in regard to this matter that are pertinent, and perhaps they ought to be noticed. There seems to be a disposition to invidiously tax this people, notwithstanding the Constitution says "taxation shall be uniform;" notwithstanding that we know the Constitution is there in force. The Congress of the United States is but the creature of our Constitution. There is an axiomatic saying that the creature can not rise higher than the creator. Notwithstanding the Constitution, the creator, is in full force, yet we see the creature asserting almost omnipotence under this treaty of peace, and that treaty in a novel way transferred the matter to Congress.

Here allow me to say that I believe this is the first time in the history of this country, in all the acquisitions of territory which have been made, where these matters have been left to Congress. Not even in the case of the acquisition of Alaska nor in the acquisition of any of the other Territories has this power ever been left to Congress. It may be that our friends have profited by the experience down South in the days of carpetbaggery, where certain things took place very much to the injury and the misfortune of our people, but that is over, and I only refer to it as an imperishable historic fact.

Now, Mr. President, with that example before us here, we have a treaty which confers on Congress power over this subject. It is not necessary that Congress shall enact a law in order to carry the Constitution to Porto Rico, for it is there in vitality and force. The Constitution is there by its own force, and it needs no action upon the part of the Congress of the United States to give it vitality.

There is a novel proposition here in this bill to tax the people of Porto Rico 15 per cent of the Dingley tariff law rate, which is not placed upon any State or Territory of the Union. That we regard as unconstitutional, for the reason that the Constitution is in force there, and that Porto Rico is a part of our territory, and there is a clause in the Constitution which requires uniformity of taxation. That clause, of itself, should forbid the passage of any such law. Most singular to state in that connection, the proposition was made by my honorable friend from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] here the day before yesterday that the legislature of Porto Rico should not pass and enforce any law in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and to my surprise I found that a party vote was had even upon that question, that broad proposition, and it was voted down by Republican votes.

Mr. President, it seems that the Constitution does not stand much in the way, so far as this legislation goes, at least; but this tax of 15 per cent, I contend, is not only unconstitutional, but is unnecessary. It is not needed; and in order to give the very best reason that can possibly be given on that subject, I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked in the paper which I send to the desk. It is a paper prepared by a delegation from Porto Rico itself, which was here but a few days since, perhaps some ten days ago. They state the situation and give some facts in regard to Porto Rico and its affairs—what it has done, and what its capacity is in the way of collecting a revenue and supporting a government—that ought to be heard by every Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NO TARIFF NEEDED FOR REVENUE.

One of the reasons given by the Republican leaders in Congress, who stand behind the tariff measure, is that they see no other way in which money can be raised for the support of the island except by direct taxation, which they allege the people of Porto Rico would not agree to, or by special appropriation by Congress. Let us say on this point that the island of Porto Rico raised an annual budget of $4,400,000. Of this amount the following sums, in round numbers, were: For the army, $1,200,000; for the minister of colonies, $400,000; for pensions, $300,000; for the clergy, $400,000; for the navy, $400,000; making a total of $2,700,000. Thus there was raised for these purposes annually an amount larger than the total amount now required for the expenses of the island, as estimated by Governor-General Davis, and larger by far than will be raised by the proposed tariff. We refer with pride, and call the attention of the people of the United States to the fact, that we freed our own slaves, paying therefor, in principal and interest, about $12,000,000, without asking aid from Spain or elsewhere. We repudiate the idea that we can not raise the amount necessary to carry on the affairs of the island.

The idea and theory of a tariff is repugnant to us. Our people, since the American occupancy, have been led to believe by Americans themselves; by the utterances of such eminent officers as General Miles, General Henry, and General Davis; by the Secretary of War in his annual report; by the honored President of the United States in his annual message to Congress; by the terms of the bill originally introduced in the House of Representatives; by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and by the almost universal expression of opinion in the public press, that they were entitled to and would receive, without any material delay, absolutely free commercial relations with this country to which they now must look, but instead of which a tariff unnecessary for revenue is offered.

* * * * * * *

The above appeal is signed by George I. Finlay, Manuel Fernandez Juncos, John D. H. Luce, J. Julio Henna, Arturo Bravo, J. R. Latimer, L. Sanches Morales, Lucas Amadeo, Azel Ames, T. Larrinaga, and R. Valdes, commissioners of Porto Rico, and is indorsed by the Merchants' Association of New York, which has investigated the commercial conditions of the island.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, some of the facts which are stated in that paper may seem rather remarkable to those who are not well informed as to the condition of affairs in Porto Rico. It shows that $4,400,000 a year has been raised as revenue and has been distributed; it shows that those people have the power, if they are allowed to continue in control of their own affairs, to raise sufficient revenue for their government without calling upon the United States. In the face of that, here is a tax of 15 per cent which is sought to be imposed upon them in contravention of the terms of the Constitution, which says "taxation must be uniform;" and no such tax can be imposed upon any of the States or Territories in this country.

It is stated as an excuse, or rather palliation, for this legislation that we propose to return the money collected to the Porto Ricans. But, Mr. President, that is a cheap and tawdry kind of benevolence. It is one which I think a great country like this ought not to indulge in. You see by what has just been read that the people of Porto Rico are able to take care of themselves and supply their own revenue for the purpose of conducting their own government, and I hope they will be allowed to do so as far as possible to secure good government.

This island lies near us, in the Caribbean Sea, not 8,000 miles away. Its people are more congenial to us, they have a better past history, and I hope they will have a better future history, than the people of some of the islands in the far-distant Orient which have been appended to our Government by the same means.

Mr. President, I take it for granted that the Constitution of the United States, framed as it was in all the light of British history, was designed and intended to guard the future liberty and order, society and individuals, from all the evils which party violence in the British Parliament had heaped upon the people of the colonies.

I can not conceive that the men who drafted the Constitution intended to create by that instrument two classes of people—one protected by a written instrument, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities guarded by restrictions and protected by courts, and another class outside of all guaranties and defenseless against all impositions.

I can not believe that the men who lighted the beacon fires of liberty all over the world with their Declaration of Independence intended to frame the Constitution upon principles which denied the fundamental maxim that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that they confined the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and happiness to the people within the States that composed the Union, but excluded from the protection of those rights by the Government all people whom conquest or treaty might bring under our flag.

I can not believe that the fathers who won our liberty from British tyranny of the jus coronal intended to set up the possibility of despotism under a President's commission.

I can not conceive that the men who fought the Revolutionary war against the absolutism of the British Parliament intended to revive it under the omnipotence of Congress.

The inquiry which confronts the people of the States when considering what shall be the future relation of the peoples of the acquired islands with the States of the Union is: Can a people whose own government rests avowedly on the consent of the governed, whose States ordained and established their own form of government, whose principles of government, both in their Federal and their States application, deny the rightfulness of "absolute despotism" and "absolute tyranny"—which irresponsible government by Congress implies—can they acquire from another nation by purchase the moral right to govern 10,000,000 people against their consent, when attested by forcible resistance, that rightful rebellion which our Revolution consecrated for all people?

There is not a page, not a paragraph, in our history which sustains the rightfulness of purchasing peoples—10,000,000 in one batch, like cattle in box cars.

Those Revolutionary patriots would not "believe that Providence had sent a few men into the world, ready booted and spurred to ride, and millions, ready saddled and bridled to be ridden," nor have made the Congress the riders or purchased the Philippines to be ridden. And yet all these results are embodied in the policy as foreshadowed in bills relating to the government of the people of the islands ceded by Spain.

It is true that the language of the treaty of Paris provides that the political and civil rights of the people in the ceded islands shall be determined by Congress; but by Congress, as Congress is controlled by the Constitution, and not by Congress acting with the absolutism of an English Parliament. The Constitution created Congress, gave it its life and power and action, controls its authority, and directs its energies. Congress can do nothing not authorized by the Constitution. The rules and regulations authorized to be made by Congress respecting the Territories must comply with the restrictions and guaranties of the instrument, which in no line, from preamble to ratification, departs from any of the principles of liberty and government upon which our whole fabric reposes.

In no section, either by grant or implication, is there any authority for two classes of people—"citizens" of the States and "subjects" of the Congress.

In defense and justification of the wide departure and unqualified denial of all American principles of individual right and government, which the policy of the Republican party in this Congress foreshadows, isolated extracts, detached from their proper connection, are paraded from decisions of the Supreme Court, and these are further bolstered and buttressed by the opinions of attorneys arguing for their clients. All this has been analyzed and explained in such an incisive manner by my friend, who is not here to-day, the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], that it would be a work of supererogation, it seems to me, to travel over the same path, for he took those decisions up seriatim, and showed their relationship and the distinction between the facts which govern them and the facts upon which this case should be governed.

I yield to no man in my respect and veneration for the judgment and rulings of the Supreme Court, but my oath to support the Constitution would not excuse my consenting to subordinate my convictions to the arguments of any justice, still less to those of any attorney, however eminent in the profession. The history of territories acquired by the United States very widely accentuates the principles of the Democratic and Republican parties, and illustrates in a remarkable manner the consideration and protection of individual rights which distinguishes those parties in the acquisition of territory and people.

Now, we as Democrats march up to the fighting line and hold ourselves responsible for territorial acquisition. We are responsible for it, at least for the contiguous and homogeneous part of it which lies between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The Territories of Louisiana, Florida, New Mexico, California, and Utah were acquired by statesmen of the Democratic party, and each treaty contained the provision that—

The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution—to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States, and meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion they profess.

Every guaranty of the Constitution to the people of the States was freely extended to the inhabitants of the ceded territory. There was no discrimination and no distinction as between citizens of the United States and subjects of the Congress. Permit me to say that the term "subject" is one unknown to our Constitution and form of government. We have no subjects. It is only the imperial powers which have subjects. Subjects do not exist in a free republic. They can not. When citizens become subjects of Congress or of any other power, their personal and political liberty is gone.

In the acquisition of Alaska there was a slight but immaterial departure from the broad precedent of acquisition established by a half century of Democratic principles.

The treaty of Alaska provided that—

If they should prefer to remain in the ceded territory they, with the exception of the uncivilized tribes, shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States, and shall be protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion. The uncivilized tribes shall be subject to such regulations as the United States—may from time to time adopt in regard to the aboriginal tribes of that country.

The Republican party was young—somewhat fresh—when Alaska was acquired. It had not then learned the opportunities which carpetbag government of distant peoples afforded. So it kept close to the precedents of the Democratic party, extending to the civilized people of Alaska all the privileges and immunities of the Constitution, and protected them in the enjoyment of liberty, property, and religion. Nor was it indifferent to the welfare of the uncivilized tribes, which were placed under the same guardianship as our Indians at home. It was the United States, and not the Congress, which protected the people.

Mr. President, it may be proper at this point to say something in regard to the acquisition of these territories. I asserted a moment ago, and I believe it is conceded to be history, that the Democratic party, during Democratic Administrations, has acquired all the territories between the oceans which have been acquired. I am proud to say it, and I am not ashamed for it to go into the record of my country, that all the territories which have been acquired between the oceans were taken in not only by Democrats, but in every instance by Southern men, with one exception, and that exception was President Pierce in the Gadsden treaty, under which we paid $10,000,000 for the slip of territory in the Gila River country, out in the far West, in Arizona, just above and contiguous to the Gulf of California.

That slice of territory was taken in by President Pierce, a Northern Democrat, and if you will search the record you will find that the Democrats voted to pay the $10,000,000 for it, whilst many of the opposition did not. So we, as Democrats, may take the responsibility for it. As a Democrat I am not going to shirk that responsibility, but I say I am proud of the fact that we did take in all this territory wherever it was contiguous and the inhabitants homogeneous; but in no instance did we go beyond that and those natural boundaries—the oceans.

When Alaska was taken in by the Republican party there was a singular fact in connection therewith which I will state. Perhaps all of us do not know of it. After the treaty had been pretty well agreed upon, Mr. Lincoln was assassinated, and he never signed the treaty. It so happened in the upturning of events that even as to the territory of Alaska, which was the last territory we acquired up to the time of the Spanish war, the treaty for the acquisition of Alaska was signed by Andrew Johnson, also a Democrat and Southern man.

I might go over these instances of the acquisition of territory, for each has an interesting history, but I care not to do so now. I might refer to the acquisition of Florida extending into the bosom of the Gulf, and Texas, which we acquired as a result of the Mexican war, Utah, Nevada, and California, and finally Alaska—all these Territories have come in, as I have stated, under Democratic Administrations. That is true as to every inch or foot of territory acquired between the mighty oceans.

Now, with the Republican party in power, we are extending our territory but in a different way. You remember Mr. Seward refused to interfere in behalf of Maximilian upon the ground that it would be a violation of the Monroe doctrine. He was one of the chief Republicans, at the head of the party. The Monroe doctrine was observed by the Republicans then; and we, the Democrats, have observed it all the while; but this expansion, which is outside of the oceans, having neither touch nor kin to us, is a new departure. It smashes the Monroe doctrine, sets it aside with utter indifference, and makes it as "a schoolboy's tale, the wonder of an hour!"

Mr. President, the experience of the Republican party in the art of reconstruction between 1865 and 1870, between the acquisition of Alaska and the Philippines, taught lessons which were not forgotten when the treaty of Paris secured the islands from Spain. The exploitation of the Southern States by carpetbag governments was an experience for which the acquisition of Porto Rico and the Philippines offered opportunities which were provided for in the treaty itself. In the language of Mr. Benton, in another connection, "a new dogma was invented to fit the case," and the omnipotence of Congress suited every condition and gave ample range and room for every kind of exploitation, a Presidential commission drawing its authority and inspiration not from the fountain source of liberty and constitutional government, but from the personal instructions of the President for which no authority of power can be found in Article II of the Constitution, from which his official authority is derived.

A tariff for Porto Rico—that subject of Congress which protects certain interests in the United States and denies to all other people in the States the benefit of competition—creates a virtual trust on cigars, cigarettes, and tobacco, and helps the actual trust in sugar, for the benefit of manufacturers at the cost of consumers in the States and producers in Porto Rico. While 300,000 tons of sugar in Hawaii, the property of the trust king in the United States, enters free of all duty, the 60,000 tons of sugar produced by the impoverished planters of Porto Rico are taxed under the power which the treaty of Paris was so manipulated as to give to Congress—the power which has been thus abused.

The right to do all these wrongs is found under the clause in the treaty of Paris, as follows:

> That the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

No treaty can override the Constitution. In that clause of the treaty there is a deliberate abandonment of all those guaranties of civil liberty heretofore recognized and secured by every treaty of annexation made by the Democratic party. There is no recognition of any right in the future, near or distant, for the incorporation of the inhabitants into the Union of the United States, as was provided in the case of Louisiana, Florida, California, and New Mexico.

But the omnipotence of Congress over the civil rights and political status of 10,000,000 of peoples is grafted on a treaty, and the treaty is now alleged to supersede even the Constitution and to have become the supreme law of the land. Against a claim so monstrous and shocking to every sense of constitutional law the people of the States in the Union will enter their solemn and efficient protest. They will never assent to the new Republican dogma that the Executive, through his diplomatic agents, can negotiate a treaty which shall be paramount to the Constitution, and that the State Department, through and by means of the hocus-pocus of diplomacy, can convert this Republic of republics into an imperialism more despotic than the absolutism of Parliament.

The right of Congress to legislate for the Territories is indisputable, but it is a right coupled with the obligation to legislate under all the restrictions and with all the guaranties that the Constitution secures to the people of the States, as was held by Mr. Justice Matthews, that the > power of Congress over the Territory is limited by the obvious purposes for which it was conferred.

The absolutism of the British Parliament claimed and exercised the right to tax the colonies by laws different from the laws for England. Our forefathers disputed the right and battled against its exercise, from Bunker Hill to Yorktown, because under the principles of English liberty there could be no rightful taxation without representation. In this country we have for that circumlocution the homely phrase of local self-government. It is a purely American term, but embodies all that is near and dear to the hearts of the people. It carries relief from oppression; it prevents unjust and discriminatory taxation; it embodies an intelligent knowledge of the wants and necessities of the people to be governed; it embraces the thousands of incidents and circumstances, known and understood only by the people to be governed, which make up the sum and the total of human happiness.

For such government Congress is so unfitted that it is impossible to believe that the framers of the Constitution, when they guarded the people of the States by the ten amendments, could have contemplated the Congress governing any people outside the Constitution and outside the Union of States. These amendments, in the nature of a Bill of Rights, assert principles of civil liberty which Congress is prohibited expressly from infringing anywhere and by any law,

"Congress shall make no law," is the language of the Constitution, respecting religion or abridging the freedom of the press, or the right of assembly; nor infringe the right of the people anywhere to keep and bear arms; nor to quarter any soldiers in time of peace in any house; nor to violate by search the homes and habitation of the people, and so on. The prohibition of Congress extends to life, liberty, and property everywhere, not in the States only, but in every place within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether contiguous or far distant. The prohibitions of the ten amendments follow the Congress as the shadow does the substance, and lay their interdictions as well in Porto Rico or the Philippines as in Maine, Virginia, Tennessee, or California. And in that view of the efficacy of these amendments to lay their restraining power upon the alleged omnipotence of Congress, I find Mr. Justice Curtis, in the Dred Scott case, fixing the limit of the power of Congress to legislate respecting the Territories—> in the express prohibitions of Congress not to do certain things; that in the exercise of the legislative power Congress can not pass an ex post facto law, or bill of attainder, and so in respect to each of the prohibitions contained in the Constitution.

And Mr. Justice McLean, in the same case, emphatically declares against the omnipotence of Congress when he announced that "no powers can be exercised which are prohibited by the Constitution or which are contrary to its spirit," and may I not add, which conflict with its positive mandate that "all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," and shall not be laid on the States with different rates from what are laid on Porto Rico?

Mr. Justice McLean continues:

> So that whether the object may be the protection of the persons and property of purchasers of the public lands, or of communities who have been annexed to the Union by conquest or purchase, they are initiatory to the establishment of State governments, and no more power can be claimed or exercised than is necessary to the attainment of the end. This is the limitation of all the Federal powers.

What then becomes of the omnipotence of Congress to which the Supreme Court solemnly sets "limitations" and declares that there are limitations to all Federal powers? Where, in all political history, or in the interpretation and construction of the Federal Constitution, can there be found a principle or a precedent to establish the Republican contention that the Constitution ex proprio vigore does not extend over our new acquisitions, but that it is confined and limited to the States, and requires the action of Congress to embrace within its protection the people whom conquest or treaty may acquire; and that the Constitution needs the help of Congress to embrace within its protection the lives, liberties, property, and religion of the people?

Here, again, we find the omnipotence of Congress and the absolutism of the British Parliament in complete accord—both denying to the people the principles of liberty. Neither Magna Charta nor the Bill of Rights, nor the heritage of liberty as the birthright of Englishmen protected the people of the colonies from the tyranny of George III and the Parliament of England. There was no inherent force in those great statutes which Lord North and the Tories respected; hence they denied their efficiency to protect the liberties of Englishmen outside of England. And now the Republican party has revived the Tory dogma of no inherent force in the Constitution to protect the people. And in support of that dogma Congress is bombarded with extracts from the speeches of statesmen and decisions of the Supreme Court which have no application whatever to the present case, because the facts and circumstances are totally different.

It is the accepted doctrine of the American Government that the great principle of liberty and government by the people extended ex proprio vigore, and need neither Constitution nor laws to entitle the people to their blessings. E cœlo descendit—they come from a higher power—"the laws of nature and of nature's God."

I am willing to believe that the great justices of the Supreme Court and the eminent statesmen of the past expected that their arguments on certain existing facts and circumstances, totally different from present conditions, should either control or persuade the judgment of others that the Constitution was a dead parchment into which Congress must breathe vitality before it could be invoked to extend the blessings of its provisions over the people we have won by arms and diplomacy.

I can understand the plain language of Chief Justice Marshall when in Loughborough vs. Blake he asked and answered his own question:

Does this term (United States) designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Mississippi is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania; and it is not the less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts, duties, and excises should be observed in one than in the other.

Whether that be dictum or judgment I will not stop to consider, but whatever it is it condemns a tariff for Porto Rico different from that for the States. It condemns the dogma that the Constitution ex proprio vigore does not carry its guaranties wherever the flag floats over American territory.

I was opposed to acquiring the islands of Spain, and for that reason, in part, voted against the ratification of the treaty of Paris. I am opposed to the retention of those eastern islands a moment longer than is necessary to reestablish order and security. I do not approve the manner in which the islands and their people were obtained and have been treated since they came under our control. But so long as the islands are under our control, and so long as our flag floats there, the representative of our authority, and peace having been secured, I shall, as far as may be within my power, advocate and support the extension to those people of every privilege, right, and immunity which the people of the States enjoy. It is too late for those who wrenched those islands and people from the dominion of Spain to set up the unfitness of the islanders for a government by the people. That ought to have weighed with those who negotiated the treaty and with those who voted to ratify it.

It may be a debatable question with some persons whether the "Constitution follows the flag," but there ought not to be any doubt that the Constitution dominates the Congress and imposes upon its legislation each and every restriction, whether the laws enacted for the States, Territories, provinces, or colonies.

The flag may outsail the Constitution, but Congress can not get away from the instrument nor from under any of its restraints. Its revenue laws must be uniform throughout all territory over which the Congress assumes to legislate. There are in the instrument neither exceptions nor provisos, nor any place for "expediency."

The Constitution forbids Congress to lay a tax or duty on the exports of a State. The proposed law for Porto Rico levies, in the island, a duty of 15 per cent on the exports from all the States. This clearly unconstitutional tax on exports is refined into a tax on the privilege of receiving the exports of the States. But such legerdemain will not deceive the people nor the courts, nor the members of Congress. As an excuse it is too Pickwickian to be seriously considered.

The President has enforced the Dingley tariff in Porto Rico, and under its provisions there have been collected over $2,000,000. If the island was not an integral part of the United States, where was the authority to extend the Dingley tariff there? If it is an integral part of the United States the duties were rightfully collected, and where can the constitutional warrant be found for giving those duties back? At every turn in this matter we find the constitutional provisions moved about like pawns on a chessboard.

There are powerful and ingenious minds who find in the term "United States" almost as many meanings as there are letters. But the plain people—the voters of the country who are too often forgotten in legislation, save when taxes are wanted—are not to be deceived and misled by sophistry and hair-splitting arguments.

It will be difficult to make the people understand that citizenship of the United States depends on the locality in which the man may be, a citizen in New York one day and not a citizen in Porto Rico when he arrives there; that he may enjoy the benefits of free trade with Hawaii, 2,000 miles in the Pacific Ocean, but not with Porto Rico in the Caribbean Sea, near our southern border.

The nice distinctions in constitutional law which the Republican party have drawn between Hawaii and Porto Rico, neither of which I ever wanted to see under our control, are too finely spun to impress the voters, but they can understand Chief Justice Marshall when he held that "the same act which transferred the territory transfers the allegiance of those who remain in it," and that allegiance carries the right to citizenship, with all the privileges of the Constitution. The people will have no difficulty in comprehending Chief Justice Fuller, that—

The nationality of the inhabitants of a territory acquired by conquest or cession becomes that of the Government under whose dominion they pass—

And they will rejoice to know that—neither the President nor Congress nor the judiciary can disturb any one of the safeguards of civil liberty incorporated into the Constitution, except so far as the right is given to suspend, in certain cases, the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus.

If the power to disturb does not exist, the power to withhold ought not to be exercised. It is peculiarly unfortunate that the prejudices and passions of the slavery discussion should have created such antipathy to the Dred Scott case that men close their eyes and stop their ears to the unanswerable argument of the great Chief Justice, Mr. Taney, on the Territorial part of his very able opinion—that the power to acquire territory was limited to acquisitions which in time, whether long or short, could become States of the Union, but that the power to acquire territory to be held as colonies, either near to or distant from the country, was not deducible from either the war-making or the treaty power.

That is directly in keeping with the resolution of my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which he introduced at the last session, that no Territory can be received in the Union unless it is intended that it become a State. That is the substance of it. It is the idea if not the language of Chief Justice Taney in the Dred Scott decision, and we commend it; and on that Vest resolution, when the vote was taken it was almost a party vote—Democrats for and Republicans against the idea that all territory that comes under the ægis of the United States is intended in the end for States and not for colonies or provinces. So it will be seen that the sole constitutional view of acquisition of territory was for States in the Union and not for territory outside of the Union.

Under this new order of expansion, what is to become of the Philippines and Porto Rico? Are they to become States with representation here from those countries, from that heterogeneous mass of mongrels that make up the citizenry? That is objectionable to the people of this country, as it ought to be, and they will call a halt before it is done. Neither in the language of the Constitution nor in that of cotemporaneous authority can any warrant be found for colonies or dependencies or territory for any purpose other than States of the Union. The absence of express prohibition from acquiring territory to be held as colonies can not be construed as authorizing such acquisition. States and Territories have their proper place in the American system, in which there is neither room nor propriety for colonies. How can we govern and administer them? Either they will become military satrapies, repugnant to every American instinct of government, or, still worse, the miserable victims of carpetbag administrators whose only purpose is exploitation and robbery.

We have no place for the jus coronal, or crown colonies, and our President, whoever he may be, will be unfitted to select the ruler and administrator of millions of people thousands of miles away from the sight and supervision of the Executive.

EXPANSION.

The first and greatest expansionist that our country produced was that peerless Democrat, Thomas Jefferson. To the Northwest Territory he added that of Louisiana, and both added to our area and multiplied our resources. He bought Louisiana with many serious apprehensions of his constitutional right to make the purchase, but the country sustained him and now recognizes his wisdom in the magnificent domain, which, with other additions by Democrats, extends our national domain from ocean to ocean. The Democratic party has always been the party of expansion along lines which added strength to national resources, defense, and prosperity in that which was contiguous and homogeneous.

The expansion of Mr. Jefferson was over territory which in foreign hands closed the great artery of the Mississippi, along which flows the lifeblood of the Western States, and over territory the acquisition of which involved the life of the Union. Before such conditions of national safety every restraint of law and Constitution must yield, because salus populi suprema est lex. But neither his example nor his precedent affords any justification for expansion over territory in distant seas, over peoples incapable of self-government, over religions hostile to Christianity, and over savages addicted to head hunting and cannibalism, as some of these islanders are.

As to the Louisiana purchase and Mr. Jefferson's connection therewith, it amounted to a necessity for the salvation of the country. As to these gentlemen here, our friends, the enemy, on the other side of the Chamber, it is singular that many of those who fought on that side during the civil war should take the position they do. Thomas Jefferson did that as a necessity to save the country. There were Kentucky and Tennessee, and in the future, just budding into statehood, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and all those States contiguous thereto. It was absolutely indispensable for them to have the mouth of the Mississippi River under their control. The Spaniards held it at the time. Thomas Jefferson managed, through Robert Livingston, to get it from Spain into the hands of France, and then he made his negotiations. But it was a matter of necessity, and you gentlemen who fought so gallantly on the other side, and by your vastly superior numbers and resources overcame us in the South, fought, if I understand it, on the principle that the Union must be preserved at all hazards—yea, it was its life you fought for.

Therefore you forget the Constitution for the time being, and in strong, emphatic language it has been said that "The Constitution was shot to death in the war." I say those of you who fought upon the other side of the question to what I did, are inconsistent in the arguments you make in regard to Louisiana. It was then a necessity for the salvation of the country. Thomas Jefferson so regarded it. It was life to the then expanding Union and death to its prosperity and great future. Jefferson so saw it, and acted as you did when inspired by similar motives.

What would we have been with the mouth of the Mississippi locked against the transportation and trade of the Mississippi Valley, with all these Territories and all these States, containing, I believe, 22,000,000 people? What would have been the condition of this country? We would have been a pent-up Utica, and hardly a second-class power. Jefferson realized this fact. He took a strong hand in this matter and, notwithstanding he had doubts about the constitutionality of it, saw the great necessity for it, as you did when you wanted to save the Union of these States and may have trespassed upon the Constitution to do it.

Why and by whom was the acquisition of this territory opposed? It is a matter of history in your CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS that the opposition to the admission of Louisiana came from the North. It came principally from Massachusetts, led by Josiah Quincy. Let me say parenthetically here that the first speech ever delivered in the Congress of the United States advocating the right of secession was by Josiah Quincy, from Massachusetts, upon this very question of the purchase of Louisiana Territory. His reason was asserted to be that it would give a balance of power to the South over the North, and justified his right to do so upon the ground that Massachusetts was a sovereign State, and she had a right to do as she pleased—to remain in or go out of the Union.

I say that my friends on the other side of this question who fought for the Union, it seems to me, are inconsistent in their arguments when they condemn Thomas Jefferson for doing that which they say was unconstitutional when the necessity of the country, its expanding life, demanded it, and when the 20,000,000 of population in the Mississippi Valley, with its teeming wealth, would not have been the reality it is to-day. Thus he assumed the responsibility and secured Louisiana.

The trouble was in getting the $15,000,000, opposed as it was, to pay for it. He got it, however, at last. How was that negotiation made? It was made through Robert Livingston and another agent whom Jefferson had sent to Europe. He utterly failed to make any negotiation with Spain for either Florida or Louisiana, for he wanted all the territory owned by Spain below latitude 31. That was the degree of latitude to which the possession of the Spanish extended northward.

Now, what did Mr. Jefferson do? He got the $15,000,000 finally, voted by Congress, and at last got the territory through the instrumentality of Napoleon, Napoleon being then all-powerful in Europe. He owned virtually the throne of Spain, and Spain owned that part of this country. Napoleon wanted ready cash for the purpose of buying vessels to compete with the English, who had the navy of the world then, and we offered him $15,000,000. He took the $15,000,000 and gave us the territory known as the Louisiana purchase. And it is a page in history that when he received the money he purchased the ships. He made his navy and soon thereafter had a fight off Gibraltar with the English fleet which was regarded as a drawn battle, but soon thereafter they again met in battle. This time at Trafalgar, when Lord Nelson was killed and where the British navy was made famous.

A large portion of the $15,000,000 was invested in that French fleet, and at Trafalgar it went down in defeat, and away went the $15,000,000 which the United States had furnished to Napoleon, but we had the title to the Territory of Louisiana, embracing that vast area out of which so many great States have been carved.

The acquisition of territory with the purpose and qualification of admission, in the future, into the Union of States is no precedent for the acquisition of territory whose people are disqualified by every circumstance and fact in their character and nature from ever becoming citizens of a State in this Union. For these facts I vouch the report of the Philippine Commission to the President. That report from a commission selected by the President is not Democratic authority, and can not be impeached as politically hostile to the President, the Republican party, or the expansion policy.

The report says—I invite attention to it specially because of the source whence it comes and for the remarkable facts it details:

The inhabitants of the Philippines belong to three sharply distinct races—the Negrito race, the Indonesian race, and the Malayan race.

Of the first it says:

They are physically weaklings of low stature, with black skin, closely curling hair, flat noses, thick lips, and large, clumsy feet. In the matter of intelligence they stand at or near the bottom of the human series, and they are believed to be incapable of any considerable degree of civilization or advancement. * * * They lead a nomadic life, wandering almost naked through the forest, and living on fruits, tubers, and such game as they can bring down with their bows and poisoned arrows. (Page 11.)

Fortunately, those future subjects of Congress are not more than 25,000, and "the race seems doomed to early extinction."

Of the Indonesian race the report says:

They are tall and well developed, with high foreheads, aquiline noses, wavy hair, and often with abundant beards. The color of their skin is quite light. Many of them are clever and intelligent. None of the tribes have been Christianized. Some of them have grown extremely fierce and warlike as a result of their long struggle with the hostile Malayan people. (Page 13.)

Their number is supposed to be about 241,000.

Of the Malayan race the report says:

The great majority of the inhabitants of the Philippines are of Malayan extraction, although the race is not found pure in any of the islands, but is everywhere more or less modified through intermarriage with Chinese, Indonesians, Negritos, Arabs, and to a limited extent with Spaniards and other Europeans.

The individuals belonging to these Malayan tribes are of medium size, with straight black hair. As a rule, the men are beardless, and when they have a beard it is usually straggling and appears late in life. The skin is brown and distinctly darker than that of the Indonesians, although very much lighter than that of the Negritos. The nose is short and frequently considerably flattened.

And again:

The greater part of the tribes are wild and pagan, but the civilized and Christianized people, few in number, include the majority of the inhabitants.

And again:

The Philippines do not constitute "a nation" or "a people."

The population is stated to be 6,709,810 by one mode of calculation, 8,000,000 by another, and 9,000,000 by a third.

Head hunting is practiced by several of the peoples of North Luzon, some of whom have been accused of eating portions of the bodies of their victims. A considerable number of the wild tribes not only practice polygamy, but take and keep slaves. Human sacrifices are indulged in by at least two of the tribes in the interior of Mindanao. (Page 16.)

Can it be reasonably said that Mr. Jefferson's precedent in expanding our authority once to the Europeans living in Louisiana can be deemed as sustaining the incorporation of millions of savages, cannibals, Malays, Mohammedans, head hunters, and polygamists into even the subjects of an American Congress?

The report discusses at length and with very great ability every phase of government possible for the Philippine people, and with very great emphasis "protests against the suggestion of calling the archipelago a colony; colony means governed by central power, with military force; and this means imperialism. Where, then, will be our rights? It may be asked, What's in a name? In this case certainly much; for in the experience of the Filipinos a 'colony' is a dependent political community which the sovereign power exploits, oppresses, and misgoverns. So they want no colony. No other word in their whole political vocabulary is so ill omened, so terrible, so surcharged with wrong, disaster, and suffering."

That report therefore relieves us of much trouble; there will be no colony of subjects of Congress. It is not my purpose to discuss the character of government intended for the Philippines; I will be content to cross that bridge when we get to it.

I have referred to this report to show that its findings eliminate this Republican expansion from all connection with Mr. Jefferson's precedents and that it must stand alone, unsupported and unsustained by any chapter in American politics. An innovation strange to our system and false to its principles, one which the people can regret and condemn without doing violence to the memory and wisdom of those who inaugurated expansion as a means of widening the area of territory with a homogeneous people who were fitted by education and habit for free institutions.

The acquisition of territory as an incident to the war-making and treaty powers of the Constitution is indisputable. But there is in expansion a principle which ought to confine it to the conservation of the best interests of the people. That principle may be unwisely, injudiciously, and wrongfully applied, as well as rightfully and wisely, and we have an example of the former in the acquisition of the Philippines and also an example of the latter in Louisiana.

The country can and, I think, ought to command the abandonment at the earliest practicable moment of all political connection with the Philippines, either by way of protectorate, which this report demonstrates to be unwise and impracticable, as well as by Territorial organization, which this report endeavors to set up and sustain.

There is an aspect of this policy of the Republican party toward the people of the acquired islands which has been overlooked while the greater and more important question of constitutional right and power has been discussed. The Porto Rico tariff, as set forth in House bill No. 8245, under the title "To regulate the trade of Porto Rico," and which in an amended form passed the Senate, reveals a departure from the recommendations of the President in his message so great that the anomalous condition exists that the fiscal recommendation of the President in regard to the island of Porto Rico is sustained by his political opponents and opposed by his party supporters, with some notable exceptions. Under the great responsibilities of his high office he solemnly advised the Congress that it was "our plain duty to abolish all customs and tariff between the United States and Porto Rico and give her products free access to our markets."

In a protectionist so pronounced and positive as the President it may be safely assumed that only high moral considerations of official duty would have induced him to recommend such a radical departure from the fiscal scheme that has characterized his whole political life. It may also be assumed that if the President believed that Porto Rico was foreign territory and its inhabitants were not citizens of the United States he would not have ventured to inaugurate free trade with the island. And I hope that it may be also safely assumed that the President is no party to the "little dicker" by which Porto Rico is lightly taxed to make a precedent for heavier wrongs toward the Philippines.

Be that as it may, the future will reveal the mental reservations, if any exist, which now are suspected, and the people will come to know whether there is a "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" in our politics as well as in our fiction.

The excuse for a scheme of tariff duties with Porto Rico is that which was made under other circumstances—"it is such a little one." But let us be reminded of the fact that the grandest decisions, the most lucid legal opinions, that have been rendered from the bench in centuries were those which have been rendered upon the smallest items of money; for instance, the shilling in England. Let us remember an instance in our own history, where the citizens of Boston went to the decks of a vessel and tossed the tea overboard. Why? Because the Parliament of England had placed a 3-cent tax per pound upon tea without the American colonies having the right of representation. Then, I say, we do this without representation from Porto Rico, and we should be consistent in our history.

Spain, they say, taxed Porto Rico sugars $2.94 per 100 pounds, and this tariff levies only 40 cents per hundred pounds; that 8½ cents per pound on tobacco in leaf is a mere bagatelle compared with what they were used to under Spain, and yet that tobacco when manufactured on the island and brought to the United States would have "to pay in customs duties and internal-revenue taxes $3.13 per pound. (Those are the figures of a Representative, Mr. SWANSON, of Virginia, familiar, from representing a large tobacco interest, with the laws of taxation as applied to tobacco.)

The original bill was in entire accord with the recommendation of the President for free trade between the island and the States, as there is between all the States. But the protected interests—an euphonism for trusts—took alarm, and the long and slimy tentacles of the octopus soon reached into the committee room and all was lost to justice, equity, free trade, and fair treatment of the acquired people in Porto Rico.

An extract from the debate in the House will show the part played in the committee room by the representative of the sugar trust!

Mr. PAYNE. * * * I made this inquiry: "Mr. Oxnard, do you fear the disastrous influence of the importation of sugar from Porto Rico, bearing in mind the fact that the United States consumes 2,000,000 tons of sugar annually; that it is increasing by 100,000 tons every year; that we import 1,400,000 tons and pay duty on it? Do you think the free importation of 58,000 tons—and supposing it should be doubled to 120,000 tons—from Porto Rico would affect your industry?" He said: "No; that is not what I am afraid of. What I am afraid of is"——

Mr. HENRY of Texas rose.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, let me make that statement.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to make a statement of what he said before the Insular Affairs Committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, you can not do it in my time. He said what he was afraid of was free sugar from the Philippine Islands, and he was afraid that when prosperity came to Porto Rico under free sugar Cuba would be knocking at the door for admission, and that all sides of the Chamber—imperialists, expansionists, anti-expansionists, and every other kind—would vote to admit Cuba into the Union; and if we extended free trade to Cuba with her one thousand million tons annually, which she is capable of producing, it would break down all the sugar interests.

The demand of the octopus—the sugar interest—was complied with, and the President's recommendation was sidetracked. Free trade in 60,000 tons of Porto Rico sugar, the property of planters without "influence" with the committee, was subjected to the tax, while 300,000 tons of Hawaiian sugar, the property of a sugar king, is admitted free of all duty. The pitiful excuse of protecting the beet-sugar interest against 60,000 tons of Porto Rico sugar becomes contemptible in the face of the admission of 300,000 tons free to compete with beet sugar when owned by one of the tentacles of the octopus.

These are specimen examples of legislation dictated by the trusts, in which neither the consumers in the United States nor the producers in the islands have any rights which the trusts respect.

This demand of the trusts and the prompt compliance of the committee bears a singular likeness to that policy of England toward the colonists, which forbid their manufacturing iron because it would deprive English iron of a market in the colonies. The same policy returns with the same principles, and the omnipotence of Congress produces the same fruit as the absolutism of the English Parliament.

In that extract from the debate in the House one may read both the promise and the threat—for the approaching Presidential campaign—millions from the protected industries, but not a cent for the guaranties of the Constitution.

The sugar trust takes a reciprocity view of politics and contributes money where it will "do most good"—that is, return the largest profits—but shuts its purse with a snap when the party would obey the Constitution or allow constitutional privileges to bar the way to corporate gain. The House committee took the hint from Mr. Oxnard; turned the cold shoulder to the President; discarded, as he expressed it in his message, the "plain duty;" overthrew the Constitution, and fell back on the absolutism of Congress to do as it pleases with the millions of people acquired under the treaty of Paris.

Nor is it only trade, tariffs, and civil rights that illustrate the breaking up of Toryism in these last years of the century. Away off to far-distant Africa, where the gallant struggles of a brave people fighting for independence and dying for the same ends for which our forefathers made their memorable fight with England, there goes no word of sympathy, no offer of mediation from this Congress. The struggles of Greece and the efforts of South American states attracted the sympathy and illumined the eloquence of our great orators, but the Boers are left to be slaughtered on their kopjes and reduced to English dependency, while the Administration of republican America and a Republican Congress of the United States exhaust the omnipotence of Congress in subduing the spirit of independence in the islands ceded by Spain.

The indignation with which the people met this Porto Rico tariff bill, as it came to the Senate, has been voiced in the protest of a former Republican President, in the marked emphasis with which it has been condemned by a very large section of the Republican press, and by the outspoken disapproval one hears in all places where the people congregate. And yet the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says:

It is the most liberal and generous bill in its provisions that has ever been proposed in Congress for any Territory of the United States since the beginning of our Government.

But the liberality and generosity of the bill carries 15 per cent duties between the island and the States, never before imposed upon the people of any Territory. It is against that price set upon the generosity and liberality of the United States that the people protest. It is that affection, estimated in dollars and cents, levied on a people who have been made a part and parcel of our people that the country resents.

But that indignation has its foundation also in the sole excuse for this bill; that it is necessary to tax Porto Rico in order that a precedent may be established for a tariff against the Philippines. That is the rub. This is the milk in the cocoanut. It is to have a precedent set so that you may guard against the Philippines.

And already we hear the muttering that if the Supreme Court shall hold that the Constitution requires that tariff laws shall impose only uniform duties throughout the possessions of the United States, over islands as well as over States, then the Republican party will again say: "Wayward sisters, depart in peace," for "when I looked for good, then evil came." When the Republican party thought to protect the trusts with duties on the products of the island, then the evil of free trade came; and if the party can not protect the trusts against the Philippine products, it has no use for the islands.

The treaty, Mr. President, brings with it cheap labor, 10 cents per day, from the Philippines. You may say what you please, but it is pregnant with such results that cheap labor of the Philippines will play a part in the future of this country should it be admitted into this land as a part of it. There is no question of that, and there is where the shoe pinches. That is, as I repeat, the milk in the cocoanut. Look to it, and you will hear that in this country from lake to gulf, from ocean to ocean, in less than a year's time, it will be proven that these facts belong to the history of the Paris treaty and the taking in of the Philippines as a part of this country.

The debate on this bill has unveiled the fact that the treaty of Paris has given Spain the same trade privileges that the United States may use—free trade, if there is free trade between the islands and the States—while the "favored-nation clause" in our treaties with many foreign nations stands ready to open wide the Philippine door into the United States.

In that dilemma this bungling treaty—I mean no disrespect to its framers—has placed the Republican party.

It was that discovery which hastened the sugar and tobacco interests, as advanced couriers, to the committee room with the ultimatum of no more money for the political campaign unless a barbed-wire fence of duties was placed around the industries which heretofore have put so much money where it would do the most good.

The check to expansion, the impediment to imperialism, has taken the money form, before which life, liberty, and happiness, civilization, progress, and good government are mere academic phrases without meaning or import in practical politics, where the profits of the protected trusts stand ready with millions for tribute, but not a cent for defense of the Constitution.

IMPERIALISM.

In the quotation I have made from the great Chief Justice we find him alluding to our country as "the American empire," but qualifying it immediately after as "the great Republic."

It is not against the exaggerations of patriotism which transfers the term of "empire" to the might, power, and resources of the country that the people take alarm, but to the consequences which follow the adoption of a principle which relieves Congress of all responsibility and converts the great Republic, with all its check and balance against irresponsibility in any department, into that omnipotence of Congress which is virtual imperialism, that has aroused the apprehension of the people. A gradual but progressive centralization of power in the Federal Government has steadily gone on for the last fifty years. It is evidenced in the fiscal arrangement which suppressed the banks in the States, in the wide scope given to regulate commerce, in the action of Federal authority to suppress riot and disorder without waiting the call of the State authorities, and in government by injunction of Federal courts.

But these and other evidences that the States were being subordinated far below their proper place in a federated system of equal and indestructible States have been surpassed beyond the comprehension of those who regard our Constitution as the highest chart of a limited and restricted government.

The claim now advanced and insisted upon, that the Congress can legislate for vast territories with 10,000,000 people, outside and beyond all the restraint and restriction of the Constitution, is imperialism systematized and enforced, and imperialism sustained and enforced by an army of 65,000 soldiers, at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars.

It is not that imperialism of resources and wealth to which Chief Justice Marshall alluded, but the imperialism of power, authority, and might, which, if recognized and approved by the people, must convert the great Republic into the empire, and beyond the limits of the States for the present, change our Executive into an Emperor fixing the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary over 10,000,000 subjects.

The noble and generous sentiment of our people, which flew to arms to liberate Cuba and establish the independence of her people, has been exploited to conquer other people and appropriate their territories.

With one hand we gave to Cuba liberty and independence, and with the other we throttled Porto Rico and the Philippines. This latter-day imperialism violated the Monroe doctrine, and, carrying American interference into the far-distant Orient, invites European intervention in American affairs.

In apprehension of the consequences of our own violence to every principle of American history, we now require the necessary appliances of imperialism—an immense navy and a standing army. And already the Secretary of War has taken steps to inaugurate a war college, in which, should it be established, will of course be taught the principles of militarism in the management and conduct of the armies which an empire might require. Militarism is tyranny, as is its twin brother, imperialism. And that very able naval officer who taught the nations of the world the value and importance of sea power has recently advised us that our Navy must be enlarged still further because the transportation of armies to different and distant provinces has become one of its most important functions, and that the lesson taught by the war of imperial England in suppressing independence in South Africa must be studied by imperial America if it would hold the Philippines.

I love the literature of England; I admire many of the noblest incidents in her history; I venerate her principles of liberty, her Magna Charta, and trial by juries; but her drumbeat around the world has been too destructive and fatal to the independence of other people to become an inviting example for the great Republic founded on the consent of the governed.

No man knoweth what to-morrow will bring forth, and no intelligence can conjecture what imperialism has in store for the Philippines nor can forecast its reactionary force upon the continuance of our Federal system. It is apprehensions of the future for our system of federated States that has alarmed the people, and to that wise alarm I look for that voice of command which shall arrest this march of imperialism.

I recall an incident in parliamentary history of England that illustrates their national character. Lord Palmerston regained a lease of power by that bold and defiant declaration, that as long as he was prime minister the rights of an Englishman in any quarter of the globe would be protected by all the power of England's army and navy. "I am an American," is the defiant boast of every citizen, naturalized or acquired, and wherever he may be, whether in the States, the Territories, or the islands, the Constitution throws around him the power and majesty of the American people and defends his rights as well from Congressional usurpation as from foreign assault.

The errors, the embarrassments, and the false position in which the Republican party has placed the United States before the people of this Union and the nations of the earth arise from its departure from the letter and the spirit of the declaration of war with Spain.

Animated by the sentiments expressed by the President in his message of April 11, 1898, that—

In the name of humanity, the name of civilization, the behalf of endangered American interests, which give us the right and the duty to speak and act, the war in Cuba must stop.

The Congress replied, on the 19th of April, that—

The abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near to our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States; have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 officers and crew, while on a friendly visit to the harbor of Habana, and can not longer be endured.

The purpose, the reason, and the object of the war against Spain were formulated and announced by the executive and legislative branches of the Government, and were solemnly consecrated by the further declaration that—

The United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island of Cuba except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and the control of the island to the people.

If I mistake not, that was the resolution introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and which all of us subscribed to.

It is true that literally the above declaration is applicable only to the island of Cuba, but the people of the United States, as well as those of all nations, regard the pledge as intended to assure the world that the war then declared was a war of humanity and civilization and would not be prosecuted with any purpose or intention of acquiring territory anywhere from Spain.

A war for humanity and civilization, for the liberty and independence of Cuba, appealed to every noble sentiment in the hearts of the most generous people on earth, so that when the President on April 23, in response to a resolution of Congress, issued his proclamation demanding that Spain should immediately relinquish her authority and government over the island of Cuba, this great country responded with an alacrity that surprised the world, when 125,000 citizens enrolled themselves as soldiers in the army of humanity and civilization.

Of conquest and the acquisition of territory not one man in the 125,000 soldiers had any thought when he volunteered. They left the peaceful avocation of their lives for humanity and civilization and for the liberty and independence of Cuba. No notion of conquest and annexation entered into their noble purpose. To the vast majority of our people the very existence of the Philippine Islands was a matter of ignorance and to all a matter of supreme indifference, and the victory of Dewey at Manila called many of us back to the geographies of our youth to find where our gallant fleet had surprised the world with the most unique and remarkable victory in the annals of naval warfare.

When on the 24th of April the American fleet was ordered from Hongkong to Manila to capture or destroy the Spanish fleet the United States had not declared war, but on the next day, April 25, the declaration was made and antedated as of April 21 to cover what would otherwise have had the ugly look of an order to commit piracy on the high seas.

That the world accepted the sincerity of our declaration of war for humanity and civilization, I need only quote the words of Lord Wolseley on April 28, that "the United States has both moral and material justification for intervention in Cuba."

Following the record of the war we find no intimation of any purpose to depart from the declaration of humanity and civilization, the liberty and independence of Cuba.

On July 26 the French ambassador to the United States formally asked President McKinley to name terms upon which the United States would be willing to make peace with Spain. On August 2 he was advised that the terms of peace must include the immediate evacuation of every Spanish dependency in the Western Hemisphere—still holding on at that time, you see, to the Monroe doctrine, everything in the Western Hemisphere—the relinquishment of all Spanish claims to sovereignty in Cuba; the cession of Porto Rico and other islands, except Cuba, to the United States; the holding by the United States of Manila, city and bay, pending settlement by commissioners of the future disposition and government of the Philippines, and the cession of an island (Guam) in the Ladrones.

There was the first outcropping of the purpose of conquest; but, coming in the mild form of "indemnity for the past and security for the future," the people of the country acquiesced, as no money indemnity for the expenses of the war had been demanded. The treaty of Paris followed, with its total departure from the high and noble purpose of humanity and civilization—liberty and independence of Cuba—and revealed the fact that the United States had entered upon a career of conquest, subjugation, government of people resisting our authority and unwilling to consent to our governing them.

In that treaty there was announced and ratified the un-American doctrine that a whole people, 10,000,000 in number, could be bought for a money consideration, in total disregard of all those rights heretofore held by all American statesmen to be inalienable.

That treaty has proven itself to be the Pandora box out of which has flown many evils which are now embarrassing this Government, dividing its people along lines of policy which threaten the very existence of the Constitution, and opening the way of imperialism in policy to unnatural expansion of territory, to the overthrow of the Monroe doctrine, to the incorporation with our people of millions of savages totally unfit for self-government and unable to comprehend its forms and purposes.

Our fathers and their descendants until now have held the Constitution and the limitations as the sanctuary of liberty, the sacred temple consecrated to the common-faith government by the people, with that supreme confidence which inspired the Israelites of old that "if thy people go out to battle, or whithersoever thou shall send them, and shall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou has chosen, and toward the house that I have built for thy name, then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication and maintain their cause."

But I fear the Administration has turned the face of the Government away from the ark of the covenant, away from the temple, and away from that God who has hitherto heard their prayers and maintained their cause.

Let us remember, Mr. President, that "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." Let us not, in a false philanthropy, in an insatiable greed, or from an overweening ambition, overleap the bounds of reason and bring untold troubles upon us. We have between the two great oceans territory and to spare. Let us be content with it and with home and home rule. Let us live in simplicity and quietude, resting under our own vine and fig tree and worshiping at our own altars. Let us obey the admonition of Washington in his Farewell Address and of Jefferson in his inaugural address and beware of foreign alliances and keep from entanglements with foreign nations. Let us now, in the days of our strength and glory, heed their admonition.

We see that we have in our ambition and greed already broken down the Monroe doctrine, and have reached out with our mighty arm to the Orient as we move on the road to imperialism. To keep the Philippines permanently means colonization. Colonization necessarily leads to centralization, and centralization leads to a large standing army, and a large standing army has never failed to find "the man on horseback," mounted on an imperial steed with trappings of royalty. Let us not take the Philippines in our embrace to keep them simply because we are able to do so. I fear it would prove a serpent in our bosom. Let us beware of those mongrels of the East, with breath of pestilence and touch of leprosy. Do not let them become a part of us with their idolatry, polygamous creeds, and harem habits. Charity begins at home, Mr. President, and let us beware! I fear we are eating sour grapes and our children's teeth will be on edge.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to ask unanimous consent that it may be ordered that when we adjourn to-day it may be until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that commencing with 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, speeches of Senators may be limited on this bill to fifteen minutes each. There are so many Senators desiring to speak that I think that is necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that from 2 o'clock forward to the time for voting upon the bill speeches be limited to fifteen minutes each. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who precedes the Senator from New York by an arrangement between those Senators.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I had not expected until Saturday to take any of the time of the Senate whatever upon this question. But the importance of the subject and the interest the country has in the subject determined me to occupy a few minutes in making some remarks upon the bill. I desire to say in the outset that I was not down for a speech to-day, but both the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] near me were announced as those who would take the floor to speak to-day after the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] had concluded. I hope the occupants of the galleries will be patient until I make a few remarks before they can have an opportunity of hearing the gentlemen whom they doubtless came to hear.

Mr. President, the last three years have been full of great events demanding the careful attention of those in charge of the conduct of national affairs, and as one event has followed in quick succession after another, each in its turn has absorbed the attention of the whole people, and presented problems to the Executive and to Congress challenging the most careful consideration.

They will be met, Mr. President, with courage, wisdom, and patriotism, and as a nation we will pass through our difficulties and as a result take our proper place as the foremost nation of the earth.

The map of the world has been changed in the last two years. The Hawaiian Islands are about to take their place as a part of the United States, Cuba is no longer a possession of Spain, Puerto Rico and the Philippines belong to the United States, while changes have been and are now taking place in other parts of the world which I trust and believe are in every instance for the betterment of mankind.

Mr. President, the Philippines are not demanding any special legislation at our hands at this time. Our wise and just President is dealing with those people in the best possible manner, preparing the Filipinos for self-government; and in that connection I wish to say that I have great confidence in the distinguished commission about to depart for those islands, whose great mission is to aid those people in their preparation for, and in the establishment of, governments carried on under law, so that at no distant day they may become capable of enjoying liberty under law and be fully prepared and ready for a civil government under an act of Congress making the people of those islands one great body politic.

If any special legislation by Congress at this time would seem to be necessary before this session of Congress closes, Congress might pass such legislation as the bill S. 2355, introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], which provides in substance that when all insurrection against the sovereignty of the United States shall be suppressed, then all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the islands shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such persons and exercised in such manner as the President shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. President, it will be time enough after peace is fully restored in the Philippines, the complete supremacy of the Government of the United States is recognized, and after the people shall have been guided in their conduct of affairs for a time, for Congress, under the Constitution, to step in and provide a civil government for the people of all the islands of the archipelago.

But, Mr. President, Puerto Rico is at this time demanding our attention. What shall we do with this island possession? Puerto Rico has had the attention of the President from the time of the surrender of the Spanish army in 1898 up to this hour. Its people are poor, ignorant, and unfortunate, their property having been largely destroyed or swept away by a great storm. They have been cared for by the President and the Secretary of War.

Only recently, upon the recommendation of the President, Congress appropriated over $2,000,000, which sum had been collected as tariff duties from Puerto Rico for a certain period up to January last. The amount is to be used in pursuance of the act, under the direction of the President and Secretary of War, for the benefit of the needy, the distressed, and to rehabilitate the country in the improvement of roads, in the building of schoolhouses, in aid to the poor people, in planting and cultivating crops, etc.

Mr. President, some of our friends on the other side of the Chamber, because the Government first collected this sum from the Puerto Ricans, put it in the Treasury, and then under act of Congress authorize the President to take it out and give it back to them, complain and criticise the performance. Well, Mr. President, if it went back to the same parties who paid it, who were in fact a part of the sugar and tobacco trusts, it would seem to be a useless performance; but the fact is, it was paid by a very few persons—importers connected with the sugar and tobacco monopolies.

One of the firms (A. S. Lacells & Co.) who paid a part of this tax of $2,000,000 is now suing the United States to recover back the amount paid, which suit, in my judgment, is evidence, if we need further evidence, that those great corporations, trusts, and monopolies instead of being in favor of the proposed tax are really opposed to it, and advocate "free trade" between Puerto Rico and the United States; and the Senator from Wisconsin suggests to me that the American Sugar Refining Company of New York and others are doing the same thing.

The fact is, this amount collected on the imports from Puerto Rico, which was largely paid by the bankers and agents of the American Sugar Refining Company and the tobacco trust, as I am informed, goes back to relieve distress and help build up that country. There was a suggestion made by a Senator on the other side that the sum be paid back directly to those who paid it, but of course that suggestion was soon abandoned by that Senator and by others who were at first inclined to support it.

Now that immediate and substantial relief has been given to the people of the island, we must meet the question as to what shall be the policy of the United States in dealing with them temporarily and in the future, and I desire that that word "temporarily" shall be emphasized, because that is what this bill proposes. Congress may be said to be dealing with a condition as well as a theory.

By Article II of the treaty of Paris, proclaimed April 11, 1899, Spain ceded to the United States the island of Puerto Rico and other islands under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies and the island of Guam in the Marianas, or Ladrones.

By a clause in Article IX of this treaty it is provided that—

> The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress.

Here, therefore, we find the basis of the title of the United States to the control and Government of Puerto Rico; but the United States has as yet fixed no form of "Territorial" or other permanent government for that island. The President has placed the temporary control and management of Puerto Rico under the military arm of the Government until such time as Congress shall fix its status and establish a permanent form of government.

The bill under consideration provides for a civil government, and provides that all the inhabitants who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and continued to reside in Puerto Rico, and their children born since, shall be deemed citizens of Puerto Rico, and as such shall be entitled to the protection of the United States (except those who have chosen to preserve their allegiance to Spain), who, together with such citizens of the United States as may reside there, shall constitute a body politic, under the name of the people of Puerto Rico, with certain governmental powers as authorized in the bill. It was the purpose, as I understand it, of the distinguished chairman of the committee reporting this bill to avoid the insertion of any provision in the bill which could be construed as extending the Constitution over the island at this time.

I wish to digress at this point far enough to say that I congratulate the Senate and the country upon having so able a chairman of the committee as we have had in the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to conduct the investigations into the affairs of Puerto Rico and to take charge of this legislation. I know of no man in the Senate or out of it better qualified for such a duty, and I say we are to be congratulated that he has had charge of this subject.

The Constitution can not go to a Territory and enforce itself. The statute laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, as in the bill provided, shall be extended over the island.

There has been much said about the Constitution of and by its own force "following the flag;" that "whenever the sovereignty of the United States is established over any territory," then and there ex proprio vigore the Constitution is in force, without any action by Congress. Mr. President, I do not agree with that. In my judgment, such doctrine is not sound; and if I may refer to parties in this Senate, it has never been believed by the Republican party that that was the true doctrine.

In the first national convention of the Republican party, held in Philadelphia in 1856, the following declaration was made:

> Resolved, That the Constitution confers on Congress sovereign powers over the Territories of the United States for their government.

Four years later, when Abraham Lincoln was nominated, the platform of the party declared—

> That the new dogma that the Constitution of its own force carries slavery into any or all of the Territories of the United States is a dangerous political heresy, at variance with the explicit provision of that instrument itself.

Mr. President, there is probably no more explicit enunciation of principle to be found anywhere than in these two platforms from which I have taken the above. It is well to recall them now, for the reason that again the doctrine is urged that the American Constitution, "by its own force," extends over every foot of soil owned by the United States, or that the Constitution follows the flag anywhere and everywhere that the flag may go.

That assumption was a step toward the justification of improper methods in government, and for some years it furnished the basis of the arguments in favor of the continuance and extension of human slavery in this country.

The Constitution has clothed the Congress with the powers necessary for establishing Territories and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting them, and has given that body sufficient scope within which to exercise such powers.

Congress not yet having determined the status of Puerto Rico, nor enacted a form of government for it, and not having made it a Territory of the United States, nor a colony, nor any form of dependency, Puerto Rico has no definable status and possesses only such municipal governmental qualities as may have been conferred upon it by order of the President of the United States under the war power. By this bill it is proposed to create a civil government.

Mr. President, many people of the United States seem to regard the new possessions acquired by American arms and deeded to us by Spain in accordance with the treaty of Paris, proclaimed at Washington April 11, 1899, as being fully annexed to the United States and entitled to the same rights and treatment as one of our home Territories. The truth is that Congress, under the Constitution, can give to the Puerto Ricans such a form of government as is deemed best for them and best for us.

I do not believe that the Constitution of the United States puts Congress in a strait-jacket and requires a particular form of government for every new acquisition of territory. We can give them a Territorial form of government, such as is our usual form. We can govern them by a commission, by a military governor, or govern them as colonies or dependencies. So far as I am concerned, I believe in the ordinary Territorial form of government; but so far as the Constitution is concerned, I do not regard the country as tied down to any particular form.

We ought to give them a government of law and a government of their own, if they are capable of carrying it on; but it rests with Congress to determine the time and character of the government when given.

One year prior to the 12th of August last, in pursuance of the joint resolution passed by Congress providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, there was a formal transfer of the sovereignty of Hawaii, accompanied by the raising of the flag of the United States over the public buildings and other property of the Hawaiian Islands.

And yet it is true that the republic of Hawaii still controls under its president and authorities that property, with the customs establishment, the post-office department, and the executive, judicial, and municipal functions of the Hawaiian republic still in operation. The postal laws of the islands still exact 5 cents postage upon letters between that Territory and the United States, instead of 2 cents.

The revenue collectors of the Hawaiian republic still collect Hawaiian customs duties, as they have continued to do all the time. They will continue to do so until the Congress of the United States shall enact a form of government to take the place of that now existing, and by which our Constitution and laws may be extended over that Territory, when those islands will be admitted into full fellowship with the United States and become an integral part of it. Even the labor laws of the Hawaiian Islands, offensive as they are, remain in force. They will continue until repealed by Congress, either by separate act or by the establishment of a civil government under the Constitution and by extending over those islands the laws of the United States not inapplicable, thereby repealing all local laws in conflict.

I trust that pending legislation will soon be enacted, whereupon Hawaii will be erected into a Territory of the United States, and then instantly the United States laws not inapplicable, as above stated, will be in force in the islands, with the Constitution and laws extended over the islands in terms by the act. Meanwhile the revenues of every kind continue to inure to the island government; in fact, certain revenues (perhaps approximating a million dollars) have already accumulated in the Hawaiian treasury.

Suppose that during the existing interim Hawaii, as in the case of Puerto Rico, had been devastated by a cyclone and the people rendered homeless and destitute, would the United States have been less humane or less charitable than they are to the Puerto Ricans? I know we would not. But Hawaii brings to us this accumulated revenue, which, by care and industry and thrift, she has accumulated, and it will all go into the Treasury of the United States.

Let it be understood that in both cases the conditions are only temporary, and must soon give way to that ultimate era of good government which is bound to come to all the possessions of the United States.

We have established temporary military governments in our new island possessions, looking toward their future welfare, and have in every possible way tried to qualify them for their coming responsibilities. In their transition from military governments toward the ways of peaceful life we are aiding them as best we can by sending them great quantities of supplies and provisions to relieve their necessities, and have tried to place in their hands the means for their support. We have reduced the burdens of tariff charges so that their progress toward financial independence may not be retarded or impeded.

Now, Mr. President, just what does the bill provide on the question of tariff duties? In the first place, it provides that the same tariffs, customs, and duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported into Puerto Rico, other than those from the United States, as are required by law to be collected upon articles imported into the United States from foreign countries; provided that on coffee imported into Puerto Rico there shall be a duty of 5 cents per pound. Coffee comes into the United States free, and it would go into Puerto Rico free but for this provision, which is enacted for the protection of the Puerto Ricans and no one else.

The bill also provides that Spanish, scientific, literary, and artistic works shall be admitted into Puerto Rico free for ten years from the 11th day of April, 1899, as provided by the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain; and, further, that all books and pamphlets printed in the English language shall be admitted free of duty when imported from the United States.

The bill further provides that all merchandise coming into the United States from Puerto Rico shall pay only a duty of 15 per cent of the duties required to be levied and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries; provided that on and after this bill shall become a law all merchandise and articles except coffee, not dutiable under the tariff laws of the United States, and all articles entered into Puerto Rico free of duty under the orders heretofore made by the Secretary of War, shall be admitted into the ports of Puerto Rico, when imported from the United States, free of duty, all laws or parts of laws to the contrary notwithstanding, and whenever the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Puerto Rico by this act established, and shall notify the President, he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereupon all tariff duties on merchandise and articles going to Puerto Rico from the United States and going into the United States from Puerto Rico shall cease, and from and after such date all such articles and merchandise shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty, and in no event shall any such duties be collected after the 1st of March, 1902.

Mr. President, I desire to again specially emphasize the proposition that this bill, so far as taxation is concerned, is a temporary measure, to end at the furthest in March, 1902, and sooner if the Puerto Ricans can have a civil government established and provide a system of taxation by which they can obtain the money to run their own government. Then free trade will come between the United States and Puerto Rico.

So, whatever anybody may think as to this policy of taxation, whether it be 15 per cent or any other per cent, upon the island of Puerto Rico as a permanent thing, it seems to me that every man must determine that it is better for us to raise a small amount to help them run that government than to appropriate the money indefinitely out of the United States Treasury, as we should have to do if we did not provide some such system as this; or to subject them, as my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggests to me, to direct taxation when they are in the distressed condition in which they are to-day.

Again, Mr. President, the bill further provides that whatever duties and taxes may be collected in Puerto Rico, less the cost of collecting the same, and the gross amount of all collections of duties and taxes in the United States on articles of merchandise coming from Puerto Rico, shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but held as a separate fund and be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the benefit of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by law.

It does seem to me that while, as I have said, it occurred to me at first that plain free trade between the United States and Puerto Rico was the right thing, yet when you come to investigate the condition of those people and learn that they are perfectly helpless, needing the support of the Government of the United States in some way, I believe that for temporary purposes there could not be a wiser provision than that which has been provided in the bill which we are now considering.

Mr. President, no man can truthfully say that if this bill shall become a law Congress is not dealing most liberally with the people of Puerto Rico. It imposes no hardships upon those people. It provides the least possible rate of duty upon a few things in order to raise a little money to run their government, and that "little" only for a little while until they can get a start in taking care of themselves by their own system of taxation, at which time absolute free trade is established between the United States and the island.

Who shall say that it is not right and just unless the objection is based on the doctrine that the island must be treated as occupying the same legal relation to the United States that any of the States occupy to the nation, and therefore, under the Constitution, Congress can not do otherwise than to establish free trade between that island and the United States? Any man who occupies that position, of course, can do nothing else but stand upon that ground, whatever the condition of those people may be; but it seems to me if he does not occupy that position, he can not say that this is not a just bill and a proper bill, under the circumstances, in starting out and trying to rehabilitate those people.

A wiser man than I has said that the next most disastrous event to a great defeat is a great victory. In the great struggle which has been successfully carried on with Spain, although we have won laurels of victory and added a vast territory to our possessions, yet unless we shall preserve and maintain our national dignity and honor in the management of that territory it will prove to us really a great disaster.

We have by the treaty of Paris brought to our sovereignty the fruitful and productive territory of Puerto Rico and of the Philippines, altogether the most magnificent acquisition of insular territory in the world. It is an acquisition the title to which is fully confirmed by the law of nations and is in our hands with which to do as we shall determine, in the wisdom of our counsels.

Mr. President, shall we turn this great victory into a great misfortune by unseemly disputes over the management of what has come to us as the result of the Spanish war? Shall we turn these many thousand square miles of the richest land in the world into a desert waste because we differ as to the exact policy which should be pursued toward that island?

We have properly collected $2,000,000 in duties up to January last, almost wholly from the representatives of the sugar and tobacco monopolies in this country, although claimed to have been levied upon Puerto Rican products, and we have already by law turned that sum over as a gracious gift to the people of Puerto Rico to relieve them from the burdens imposed upon them by the great cyclone and by the needs of the schools, the roads, and by the inroads of famine and disease.

The trusts of the United States have held in their hands the thousands of tons of sugar and tobacco gathered together in Puerto Rico, and the $2,000,000 dollars have been collected mainly from those great trusts owned in New York and Boston, and not at all, as is alleged by some, from the poor people of the island of Puerto Rico.

Let the people of the country understand this, that these duties were not imposed upon the sufferers of that island, but every possible means has been used to make the people of the United States believe that the poverty-stricken Puerto Ricans were being harassed and burdened still more by this tariff.

Let the truth be known. This whole "free-trade" scheme is nothing on earth but a deception, a delusion, and a snare to make our people believe that we are oppressing poor Puerto Rico. Let the truth be known, whatever may happen. Any candid man, I think, must admit that this bill is in the interest of the people of Puerto Rico. Mr. President, it was only yesterday that General Davis, now in command in Puerto Rico, said in emphatic terms by dispatches to the public press of this country:

> If free trade is adopted, I can not see how the necessary funds for conducting the affairs of the island are to be raised by myself or those who succeed me. Two million dollars are the present expenses, and this amount will be needed annually. There is only a small revenue incoming from stamps, liquors, tobacco, and mercantile licenses, and it is impossible to collect taxes because of the conditions.

I am glad that I have this here, for the reason that the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] read something from the Governor-General, and this yesterday was given to the press of this country. That comes immediately from the man who knows more about the situation there than perhaps any other man there or here.

It shows that some means must be provided for raising revenue, unless we are prepared to continue to pay money out of the United States Treasury, when it can be raised by such means as this bill proposes, without embarrassment to the Puerto Ricans, for running their government for the time being. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe ordinarily in making appropriations out of the United States Treasury for any such purpose if it can be avoided by any course consistent and fair to those who are in distress.

Mr. President, I am amazed to see the wave of misrepresentation which has swept over the country as to this question of a Puerto Rican tariff. It is high time to call a halt to this wild scramble of misrepresentation, backed up as it is by the direct personal insistence of representatives of the monopolistic interests to which I have referred.

General Davis knows the situation better than anybody, and I want to emphasize his testimony given above, which is a fortunate contribution to the history of current events. Free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States is all right under ordinary circumstances, and in two years at the most we will have it. I trust that by that time the people of Puerto Rico will be in a prosperous and self-sustaining condition.

We are aiding them as best we can and propose by this bill to put into their hands the means for their support until they have made a start toward financial independence and progress.

By the term "we" I mean the present Administration and the present Congress, aided by a great and important accession of patriotism from our soldiers and sailors, who upon the land and the sea have shown a history of valor unsurpassed. The soldiers and sailors of the United States have circled the globe with their glory. They have ceased to be provincial and have crossed the seas, the mountains, and the rivers, and traversed the earth.

They have planted the patriotic ensign of education and intelligence everywhere. Continents bear the evidences of this modern warfare in behalf of justice and right. The men who have borne our flag across the Pacific and over the archipelagoes loyally followed where loyal leaders led. They wore the badge of the United States and never asked to be called either Republican or Democrat. To be called an American soldier was honor enough. They never thought to inquire as to the politics of any of the gallant leaders of our armies. They were engaged in earning glory for the United States.

Mr. President, let us in justice to Puerto Rico and the other islands not destroy the distinctive relationship which exists between the islands and this country; and with reference to Puerto Rico the bill now pending should become a law at as early a date as possible. I rejoice that we have a Government and an Administration with stamina and good sense enough to see that justice shall prevail, and I hope that the middle course marked out by this bill will, by its enactment, soon demonstrate the wisdom of the Government of the United States.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I have been listening with great interest to the many and very able speeches which have been delivered upon the Puerto Rican tariff. I have endeavored to find in them a solution of the singular political conditions which seem to have arisen out of the presentation of this measure. I have thought perhaps the fact that the country is divided into storm centers and normally placid conditions is due to the extended discussion of the constitutional question having obscured the real meaning of a measure of revenue and relief.

There is no division among the majority in either House as to the power of Congress to legislate on this subject. The majority all agree that the Constitution does not extend by its own power over these new possessions, and that Congress can legislate for them as it deems wise, subject only to the prohibitions upon Congress in the Constitution. The Democratic party accepted the other view, that the Constitution does extend by its own force into the Territories, from the moment that it was invented by John C. Calhoun for the purpose of carrying slavery into the new Territories, when it was impossible against the aroused conscience of the country to secure legislation to that effect. It is but fair to say that while the action of the country by the unanimous consent of all statesmen and of all parties for fifty years, and the trend of the decisions of the Supreme Court, sustain the power of Congress to take the whole or any part of the Constitution and the laws of the United States into new Territories and to establish governments for them, yet the questions raised by the acquisitions of Cuba, Hawaii, and the Philippines, when presented to the Supreme Court, must result in such a broad and comprehensive interpretation as will make clear for all time the position of the United States upon the government of Territories which come to us.

While the practical part of this measure has received some consideration, yet it has resulted in pictures of Puerto Rico and its inhabitants which are utterly misleading. The lower house of the Iowa legislature the other day adopted a resolution for free trade with Puerto Rico on the sentimental ground that her people had accepted our sovereignty willingly, while other islands were resisting it. The sudden collapse of the Spanish power, and the almost instantaneous dropping into our hands of the island possessions of Spain, found different conditions in these possessions. It is admitted, for instance, that Cuba is to be under our Government only until she is capable of governing herself. We all know that, with the revolutionary elements and professional agitators of that island, if any excuse or opportunity had been offered there would have been a revolt against our authority. We all know that in the Philippines there would have been universal acceptance of government by the United States except that professional agitators, who revolutionized for revenue and had made fortunes in previous revolts, played upon the imagination of an ignorant people and led them into insurrection, hoping the United States would follow Spanish precedents and purchase their allegiance. It is equally true that in Puerto Rico the population is so poor and so crowded, and the conformation of the island makes it so easy for an army to put down insurrection, that, though the same government existed in Puerto Rico as in Cuba and in the Philippines, it was impossible to inaugurate revolution in Puerto Rico. The Puerto Ricans knew that they must come under some government, and after three hundred years of Spain hailed with delight the transfer to the United States.

Puerto Rico has been pictured here and presented to the country as if it were a Vermont, a Massachusetts, a Connecticut, or an Iowa, populated by an intelligent and educated people who had instantly grasped the problems of government and the institutions of the United States, and were in all respects fitted to early assume a place among the States of the Union; that prior and preliminary to this statehood they were entitled to every privilege, every law, every constitutional right which belongs to the citizens of the States. Puerto Rico has been described as a bride decorated with flowers and tropical coloring, and in culture, education, and training worthy to be the companion and helpmeet of the idealization of the highly developed, liberty-loving, and broad-minded American.

To get a horizontal view of this question we must come back to the testimony of Puerto Rican citizens and foreigners and of the officers of the United States which was given before the Committee on Puerto Rican Affairs. Like judges and juries who see and hear the witnesses, the members of that committee who, for hours every day during three weeks, saw these witnesses and heard their testimony received impressions stronger than the cold type of the evidence presents.

Right here I wish to express my profound appreciation of the great ability and conscientious industry with which the chairman of our committee, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], has conducted the investigation and the legislative management of this measure.

Puerto Rico is more thickly populated than any country in Europe. It is one of the most fertile territories on earth. From seashore to mountain top it can be cultivated. With capital, enterprise, and modern machinery the possibilities of increase in its productiveness can not be calculated. It is a little over two-thirds the size of Connecticut, but has a much larger population. Its industries are purely agricultural. As in all countries where there are no varied industries, the young men and the young women have no opportunities to engage in different pursuits. Where agriculture is the only occupation of thickly settled communities the conditions of India are repeated, and so there prevails in Puerto Rico a widespread and grinding poverty unknown in Europe or in America. There are, in round numbers, a million people upon the island. Seventy thousand are negroes, 250,000 of mixed negro and white blood, and about 700,000 are the result of the settlement by the wild adventurers, of all races and nations, who, in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, sailed and fought on the Spanish Main. One hundred thousand of these people can read or write; about 50,000 can do both. Nine hundred thousand are in absolute ignorance.

Of this million, 800,000 derive their living from agricultural pursuits. They live in huts, consisting of one room; they have work only during the season for coffee, for sugar and tobacco. The children from 10 to 16 years of age earn about 10 cents a day; vigorous manhood receives 30 cents, and old age, again, from 10 to 15 cents. They live on sugar cane and the fruits that grow, and are so cheap, in the Tropics, and it is estimated can sustain life on 5 cents a day per individual. Most of them have never known bread or meat as it is familiar to our people. They are hired by the day, the contract closing with the sun. By this means the owners of the large estates are free from responsibility for their care or maintenance, a responsibility which would come if the contracts were by the month or by the year. There are no schoolhouses in the island. Thus eight-tenths of this population are ignorant of politics, of government, of Spanish or American rule, and intent only upon the always immediate and exigent necessity of subsistence and life. In the majority of the families the heads are unmarried because they had not the money under Spanish rule to pay the expenses of the marriage ceremony, civil or religious. The 200,000 remaining consist of the landholders, merchants and factors, and of the carriers and skilled artisans in the towns and the small storekeepers in the country.

The island itself consists of two millions of acres. There are 1,200,000 acres in pasture, 181,000 in coffee, 70,000 in sugar, 14,000 in tobacco and the rest is in forests, orchards, gardens and underbrush. The land of the island is owned in 43,000 estates. A large proportion of these owners are Spaniards, English and other foreigners. The coffee, sugar, and tobacco estates are mortgaged for about one-quarter of their value at rates of interest varying from 10 to 25 per cent. The profits of production are so great, even with the antiquated machinery in use, that with normal crops and with the Dingley tariff in full force, as it has been, against them for the past four years, they were enabled to meet this interest and enjoy as much prosperity as is possible under Spanish rule. The government by Spain was oppressive to a degree. The taxes were enormous, no roads were built, no schoolhouses erected, no public improvements maintained, but these great revenues were dissipated by the Spanish officials. There was no justice in the courts, favoritism and bribery being universal. There was no habeas corpus, and civil rights were not respected. Arbitrary arrests were made and citizens lay in dungeons for years because there was no way by which they could get a trial. The Spanish Government gauged its exactions by the profit of the planter, and managed to take nearly everything that the planter could make which he could fairly call net above maintenance, his own support and the interest upon his debts.

For the five years preceding our occupancy the average value of the exports of the island was $16,000,000, of which $10,000,000 were coffee, $4,000,000 sugar, $700,000 tobacco, and the rest molasses, cattle, and hides. Such was the condition of this island when it was occupied by our troops, and submitted to our authority with scarcely a struggle. The introduction of American methods and government were rapidly producing most beneficent results when a calamity occurred which has no parallel as affecting the whole people of a country.

As will be seen from these figures, the great staple of the island, which employed, in one form or another, nearly three-quarters of the population and capital, was coffee. The coffee plantations are upon the steep mountain sides, and run from the foothills to the peaks. The coffee berry can not thrive under the tropical sun unless protected by partial shade, and so the original forests which clothed these mountain sides were cleared of underbrush and in its place the coffee-bearing trees were planted. The hurricane which swept over the island destroyed nearly the whole of these plantations. It threw down the forest trees or broke off the branches, and they fell crisscross, producing a network over the coffee bushes which made the farm a wreck. Under the tropical sun the weeds which choke the berries unless kept out began to grow luxuriantly.

The testimony showed that every day added to the danger of the annihilation of the coffee plantation; that in six months most of the coffee-berry plants would be killed, the plantations would have to be planted anew and it would take five years for the plant to reach maturity. The coffee planters, being, all of them, in debt, had no credit and no resources with which to clear off their farms. They had no machinery, but could have worked out the problem by the superabundance of labor with which they were surrounded if they had had the capital to employ it. The hurricane produced very great but not equally disastrous damage upon the sugar and tobacco plantations. So within twenty-four hours 800,000 people were left without any occupation or means of support, and the proprietors without any credit or money with which to clear their farms and employ the laborers who were clamoring for work and starving all about them. I have no hesitation in saying that if the island had not in this distress been under the United States, but had remained under the old Spanish régime, the amount of suffering and starvation would have appalled the world. But the President and the Secretary of War, acting through General Davis and the officers of the Army, used about $1,000,000 of the emergency fund in feeding these poor people and in preventing one of the ghastliest horrors of modern times.

The suspension of coffee, sugar, and tobacco industries reacted upon the people in the towns who lived by handling these products and by furnishing the supplies to the people of the interior. There was paralysis on the one hand of the purchasing power of their former customers, and on the other of the occupations by which they themselves earned a living. With the island in this stricken condition, and the people in this deplorable situation, it was impossible to raise revenues for schools, for roads, for courts, for police, or for any purpose of government by direct taxation. The Puerto Rican government must be supported and the means found for the recuperation of Puerto Rican industries and the resurrection of Puerto Rican farms and the salvation of the Puerto Rican people either by taxing the people of the United States, by taking money bodily out of the United States Treasury and pauperizing the island, or by finding a method by which the island itself can secure income and credit. It was when these conditions had become familiar to our committee that we changed our bill from free trade to the tariff measure which is now before the Senate, a tariff measure which is not a Chinese wall, not an oppressive act of arbitrary power, but the most generous and beneficent revenue system ever adopted by any government, because it gives to the island of Puerto Rico not only the duties collected at her own ports, but the duties collected under our laws at our ports upon products coming from the island.

When Daniel Webster was charged with being inconsistent in his later opinions, he said, "It is the privilege of wise men to change their minds." The members of our committee do not make any special claim to wisdom, but we have considered this question with open minds. The President has an open mind, in view of the later and overwhelming testimony about Puerto Rican conditions, is satisfied with the solution of them which this measure gives. General Davis, the governor of Puerto Rico, whose ability and fairness no one questions, has an open mind and after disbursing a million of dollars for the relief of the Puerto Rican people, and becoming personally familiar with their conditions, on March 31—that is, last Saturday—gave this authoritative opinion:

> I have not felt it proper for me to discuss Congressional matters, filling, as I do, an executive position. I have expressed my views fully, however, on Puerto Rico's needs, and I might say if Congress should adopt free trade the receipts of the custom-houses would naturally cease. One million five hundred thousand dollars has been collected during the fiscal year, and with free trade this will fall off. What, then, will run the island? Although I have received no official advices regarding an appropriation, I understand through the newspapers that an appropriation was decided upon, and I infer that this appropriation will be spent on insular government expenses. If free trade is adopted I can not see how the necessary funds for the conduct of the affairs of the island are to be raised by myself or those who succeed me. Two million dollars are the present expenses, and this amount will be needed annually. There is only a small revenue incoming from stamps, liquors, tobacco, and mercantile licenses, and it is impossible to collect taxes because of the conditions.

I wish in this connection to congratulate my friend the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that he has an open mind. He introduced on Saturday our original bill as a substitute for this one, which shows that my eloquent and able friend is within two months of us. [Laughter.] Within twenty-eight hours this bill is going to pass; the procession is moving on, and he had better get into the band wagon before it is too late. I say to my friend the Senator from Georgia, and his colleagues, that within twenty-eight hours is the opportunity. There are vacancies on the praying benches for salvation, and they had better come in. [Laughter.]

We come naturally now to the question of hardships upon the Puerto Rican people and of cruelty to the inhabitants of our new possessions by the proposed legislation. We were told with wonderful eloquence and passionate rhetoric when the Puerto Rican relief bill to appropriate $2,000,000 was before the Senate, that it was our plain duty to return to the people who have paid the duties under the Dingley tariff act since our occupation the money which had been collected. The whole policy of the Republican party, from the President to Congress, has been to give back to Puerto Rico all the taxes levied and collected upon her products—to give them back to her for the purposes of her government and for the purposes of her improvement and her progress. These duties had been paid by the sugar trust, which controls the sugar products of the island, and the tobacco trust, which controls the tobacco product of the island—two of the richest and greatest money-making corporations in the world. They had bought the sugar and tobacco at a price which included the Dingley tariff duties and sold them to the people of the United States at a large profit after the duties were paid. In the bill which we have just passed, instead of paying these duties back to these corporations, which have been the subject of so much abuse and with whom we have been charged with being allied, we have given them back to the people of Puerto Rico for their schoolhouses, for their roads, for the relief of their starving, and for the employment which will come in the proper administration of the fund.

The analysis of the productions of the island which are exported shows that about five-eighths is coffee. There is no duty on coffee, and so there is no outrage there. There is a duty at present of $1.60 per hundred pounds upon sugar and $1.85 per pound upon tobacco under the Dingley tariff act. There are millions of dollars' worth of this sugar and tobacco, owned by the sugar and tobacco trusts, which is held from the market and stored in warehouses in Puerto Rico awaiting the action upon this bill. This sugar and tobacco was bought from the planters of Puerto Rico at a price which included these Dingley tariff duties and still left a large profit for the purchaser. Every concession made from the Dingley tariff is that much more clear profit, not to the producer, or the laborer, or the citizen of Puerto Rico, but to these purchasers of their products. So by this act we are, out of the hundred per cent of additional profit which the sugar trust and tobacco trust would receive under free trade, taking 15 per cent for the people of Puerto Rico and leaving the purchasers 85 per cent for their own income. The only difference between the original recommendation of the President of the United States and the action of the House of Representatives and of the Senate committee is in the method by which the people of Puerto Rico can receive the whole of the revenue from the tariff.

The President's recommendation of free trade was made in order that Puerto Ricans might have the use of these duties in Puerto Rico by not having to pay them—that is, by keeping the money for public purposes in the island. The proposition of the House of Representatives and of this committee is that those duties shall be collected and returned to the people of Puerto Rico, because it is the only way by which the people of the island will get a dollar of benefit from them. Now, from whom will they be collected? In the last twenty-five years sugar has fluctuated as much as any other product in the market; coffee has been subject to the opening of new sources of supply, to failures of crops, and to all those elements which add or take away from 25 to 50 per cent of the market price. But while coffee and sugar importers have grown rich and by their skill, their capital, and their far-sightedness been able always to calculate future prospects and to make money, no matter what the conditions, the laborer upon the plantations who produced these crops has never known any difference in his wage. Unhappily for him, the labor market was always overstocked; unhappily for him, there was no industry but the land to which he or his family could apply for help. He was "the man with the hoe," meeting all the conditions of Dr. Markham's remarkable poem. He was too ignorant to know when good times were making fortunes for those who handle the product which he raised by his labor; he was too poverty stricken to subsist in an organized effort to increase the remuneration for his toil. It will be many a year before these conditions change for the masses of the Puerto Rican people. They can never change when an overcrowded population has but one means of livelihood and there are no varied industries for its relief.

Then who pays this tariff, and who gets the benefit of it? For the first time in the history of Puerto Rico it is paid by those who make money out of her, by those who are enriched by her toil; by those who are far removed from the ignorance and the suffering and the squalor of her population. The tariff money taken from them goes really to the people of Puerto Rico who never before received any benefit. It will go for schoolhouses and schoolteachers, which will make the next generation worthier of citizenship and self-government; it will go for roads, which will give employment and opportunities for other industries than merely agricultural; it will go for those ordinary functions of government which must be maintained or you have anarchy, and they will be maintained by this process without those burdens of direct taxation which, in the present condition of Puerto Rico, would be such a terrific brake upon her progress.

Now as to the charge that it will stifle the industries of Puerto Rico. Puerto Rican coffee, representing five-eighths of her product and of her labor, will come in free; Puerto Rican sugar and tobacco will come into our ports in competition with the sugar and tobacco of Cuba. Puerto Rican sugar and tobacco, when the Dingley tariff applied equally to both of them, found a ready and remunerative market in this country. Under the operations of this bill, by which full tariff duties are paid by all others and only 15 per cent of them by Puerto Ricans, the Cuban sugar man will pay in Dingley tariff duties $1.60 for every 100 pounds, while the Puerto Rican sugar man will pay 24 cents. The price of sugar, because of the enormous demand in this country, which is in excess of the supply, will be maintained. The Cuban sugar dealer will make a profit after paying $1.60 duty, and the Puerto Rican sugar man will make the same profit with an addition, on account of the concession of 85 per cent to him of $1.36 on every hundred pounds. This will practically give the controllers of the sugar product of Puerto Rico a return of from 50 to 80 per cent on their investment. Precisely the same conditions and precisely the same excess of profit will be the good fortune of the Puerto Rican tobacco dealer under this concession of 85 per cent from the Dingley tariff as against his Cuban competitor. There can be but one result of this concession of 85 per cent to Puerto Rico as against Cuba, and that is an enormous stimulus, on account of the enormous profit, to both sugar and tobacco areas and productions in the island of Puerto Rico.

Bearing in mind these figures and these enormous profits under this concession of 85 per cent from Dingley tariff duties, and still greater profits with free trade, the following opinion from President Havemeyer, of the sugar trust, is a contribution of great importance to this discussion. It settles emphatically in what direction lie the interests of the sugar trust:

NEW YORK BUREAU CHICAGO TRIBUNE,
New York, March 29.

President Havemeyer, of the American Sugar Refining Company, was the center of interest in speculative circles to-day, owing to the cut of 5 cents a hundred pounds announced by the Arbuckles and the possible action of the Havemeyer interests. The sugar king, in discussing the whole situation, was plain and outspoken regarding the position of Puerto Rico and the Philippines, and declared that there was no reason in the world why sugars should not be admitted free of duty from those countries.

"I am much in favor of it," he said, "and I believe the time is not far off when they will be admitted free of duty. Why, both of those countries are part and parcel of the United States, and no matter what action Congress takes, I am confident the Supreme Court will hold that the products of those colonies are entitled to free entry here.

"There is no more reason why a duty should be placed upon the products of Puerto Rico than on stuff coming into New York from Long Island. There is only a wide ditch between the United States and Puerto Rico. Well, if Puerto Rican sugars are brought in free, it will not be long before some similar policy is adopted with reference to Cuban products."

Here also is the opinion given Saturday by W. T. Townes, president of the Puerto Rico-American Tobacco Company:

W. T. Townes, president of the Puerto Rico-American Tobacco Company, says that the proposed tariff will keep Puerto Rico out of the American market; that Puerto Rico will sell to Europe, China, and Japan, and not a pound to the United States.

Puerto Rican industrial conditions, because of surplus population, lack of remunerative employment and paralyzing poverty, have thrown the transactions of the island into a few hands. As I have said before, the land is divided into 43,000 estates in a population of 1,000,000 people. The business of supplying the demands of the population, as well as handling the products of the island, is conducted by comparatively a handful of as keen and enterprising business men as there are in the world. Under these conditions they will control the price both of the things which the island consumes and which the island produces until education, intelligence, and varied employments have redeemed the island. A startling instance is given of this by cable, which informs us of the rise in the price of food during the last few days. Under the Executive orders of the President all breadstuffs now enter Puerto Rican territory free of duty, and yet the few men who control the supplies which feed the Puerto Rican people and import them from the United States, though they go in absolutely free, have raised the price 100 per cent to these poor, starving people, who are unable to get any relief. The tariff of 15 per cent if imposed would not raise this price; it would be paid by these dealers. It would amount to 4 cents a barrel on flour and to the same, proportionately, on other products, but the vivifying influences of revenue in the hands of an intelligent government and the great profit in the importations would speedily open the way for the farmers of the United States to ship into that market their products in such measure that, while they made money, these exactions could no longer be imposed upon the Puerto Rican people.

Under this bill this tariff lasts only two years, and may be ended by the Puerto Rican legislature at any time. It is a tentative measure; it is wholly for the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico; its proceeds are used for no other purpose than to improve their conditions and enlarge their opportunities. Congress is always in session, and two years will be an object lesson in the experiment of caring for and governing the Puerto Ricans.

The singular thing about this whole matter is the isolation of sentiment. There seems to be, and it is so reported, a storm center of sentiment in Indiana and not a particle in Ohio; that there is a fever in Minnesota and none in Michigan; that there is a sort of a wild burst of indignation in Oregon and not a particle in New York or Pennsylvania or New England, except Vermont. And why Vermont at this season of the year should melt is one of the mysteries of the study of the phenomena of nature. [Laughter.] It even warmed up my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] into a glowing sympathy and tenderness for free trade as a panacea for a stricken people which I have seldom heard, even from the most emotional of my friends. Why is it?

The history of remedial legislation presents no example of baseless excitement like that which prevails over this measure in certain parts of the United States. The localization of the storm is unprecedented. It has great volume and force in one State, with little evidence of it in the adjoining Commonwealth. A Northwestern State may have the fever, while the Middle States and New England are normal. In every instance in the contests of parties where a principle was at issue, the sentiment of the party in one State has been equally pronounced in every State. This phenomenal localization of interest compels the conclusion that a mere matter of providing means for carrying on government and relieving distress has been exaggerated into an acute struggle over a fundamental principle of right, or morals, or both.

This bill is the people's law. It restricts, as far as can be done, the power of trusts or combinations or concentration of industries. It puts upon the free list these products going from the United States into Puerto Rico—the food products from the American farmer—so that the American farmer has this market free as against the agriculture of other countries, whose imports must pay Dingley tariff rates. It gives to the Puerto Ricans the fullest opportunity for cheap food. Agricultural implements, which are so necessary for the resurrection of island cultivation, and the adoption of modern machinery to aid in lower cost and larger crops, are free. Rough lumber for mills, coopers' materials for sugar, molasses, and tobacco, and bags for coffee, are free.

Carriages to cheapen transportation and trees and plants to give variety in crops by raising large and small fruits, for which the island is peculiarly adapted, are free, as are all drugs which are used in the malarial diseases of tropical countries. In a word, every product of the farm or factory in the United States which will help Puerto Rico, enable her to rise triumphant from her ruins and give remunerative use for capital and employment and wages to her people, are on the free list. The luxuries consumed by the prosperous are, as they ought to be, taxed for the support of the government.

But this is not all. The whole question of taxation is remitted by this bill to the people and government of Puerto Rico. Here is the charter of Puerto Rican self-government. It is the spear which punctures the huge and swaying balloon of tyranny, oppression and violations of the Constitution and Declaration of Independence so laboriously blown out and expanded in the past few weeks. While standing on the collapsed canvas, and viewing its tragic mottoes, listen to the plain and passionless words of this bill:

SECTION 4. And whenever the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Puerto Rico by this act established, and shall by resolution duly passed so notify the President, he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereupon all tariff duties on merchandise and articles going into Puerto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Puerto Rico shall cease, and from and after such date all such merchandise and articles shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty; and in no event shall any such duties be collected after the 1st day of March, 1902.

In a word, what is all this contention about? What is the apple of discord which is lashing some friends to fury? The President proposed free trade, and this bill gives free trade in all the necessaries of life, in all implements and manufactures required for the resuscitation, development, and working of industries, and a tariff amounting, on the average, to 6 per cent upon their market value, on other products.

This tariff comes off by operation of law in two years, and as much sooner as the people of the island, through their own legislature, decide to abolish it, because they can raise the revenues necessary for the support of their government, their roads, and their schools and for their general welfare by direct taxation.

The opposition to this bill is the result of the usual tactical operations for advantageous positions in a Presidential year. The Calhoun theory of the Constitution and the century-old fight of free trade to destroy protection have made a united and desperate charge upon the policy and provisions of this measure. The Democratic position in regard to our island territories is clearly defined. They will claim that the moment any territory becomes the property of the United States by conquest, purchase, cession, or discovery it is under our Constitution and laws; that its people and products have the same rights and are entitled to the same freedom of movement all over the United States as the people and products of any State in the Union; that statehood must speedily come and can not be denied; that this would break down every protective barrier against pauper labor and admit free into our ports the things produced by people working in our tropical possessions for a few cents a day and would degrade our citizenship, and, therefore, if they get in power they will at once abandon these islands.

The Republican party stands upon the action of Jefferson, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, Pierce, and Seward, that Congress has the power to govern these acquisitions subject only to the prohibitions of the Constitution.

I was very much pleased in listening to my friend the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] to find him advocating what Jefferson did and what Monroe did and Pierce did and what Polk did, because they were all Southerners and all Democrats. At the same time he vigorously opposed precisely the same legislation for our new possessions which they had enacted for territories acquired by them. We stand where Jefferson did and legislate as he legislated; where Monroe did, and legislate as he legislated; where Pierce and Polk did, and legislate as they legislated. But my friend and his associates have wandered far from these old leaders of their party.

I recall for the consideration and admonition of my Democratic friends that story of General Jackson's governorship of Florida, to which he was appointed by President Monroe, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1821, providing "that all military, civil, and judicial powers shall be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct." He claimed and exercised the executive, legislative, and judicial functions of government under this commission, and was sustained in them all. As legislature he enacted laws which brought him, as governor, in conflict with the ex-governor under Spain. As governor he promptly arrested and imprisoned that ex-official, and as judge proceeded to punish for contempt the Federal district judge, who had issued a writ of habeas corpus for the Spaniard's release. It was after all this that he became and has since continued to be claimed as leader, counselor, and inspiration for the Democratic party.

Under this power we can and will provide both for the development of our new possessions and the protection of industries and employment within the United States. As time and experience demonstrate the necessity for new laws and changes of existing laws, they will be enacted, but always with intent to maintain the high standard of American citizenship and the scale of American wages. Preferential tariffs will promote trade between the United States and all these islands.

Puerto Rico, Hawaii, Guam, Tutuila, and the Philippines are to be held and governed by the United States with an imperative duty on our part to their inhabitants for their civilization, the encouragement of enterprises which will utilize their resources, and for their constantly increasing participation in their local and general governments, and also for their and our commercial progress and growth. I do not believe that we will incorporate the alien races, and civilized, semicivilized, barbarous, and savage peoples of these islands into our body politic as States of our Union.

Order, law, justice, and liberty will stimulate and develop our new possessions. Their inhabitants will grow with responsibilities of governing themselves, constantly increasing with their intelligence into conditions of prosperity and happiness beyond their wildest dreams of the results of that self-government they now so vaguely understand, while the United States, in the increasing demand for the surplus of our farms and factories in Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, and in the tremendous advantages of position from Manila for reaching the limitless markets of the Orient, can view without apprehension and with hopeful pride the inevitable expansion of our population and productions.

With that belief I hail with faith, I hail with hope, I hail with joy that expansion of our own country in its products, agricultural and manufacturing, and in its population, which it is evident will go on during the twentieth century. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Manifestations of approval or disapproval by the occupants of the galleries are not permitted by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, though it is doubtless a work of supererogation, I am impelled to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a little time, while with unstudied phrases, but I trust in a plain and I know in a sincere way, I discuss some of the questions involved in this legislation.

I do not underestimate the importance of sentiment. It is natural that the American people should be sentimental. They are a generous, liberty-loving people, and all who are generous and liberty loving are sentimental. I agree that almost every good thing grows out of sentiment. Love of home is a sentiment; patriotism is a sentiment. But, Mr. President, we can not, in discharging under our oaths a duty as trustees of the American people, be entirely governed by sentiment.

I feel, for one, that never since the close of the war for the preservation of the Union, when there confronted our people and the Congress questions of the gravest complication and novelty, has either the President or the Congress been called upon to solve problems equal in difficulty to those which confront us. It has been hitherto for a great many years a matter of comparatively trifling importance what constitutional relation the Territories sustain to the United States, because our Territories have been peopled by those of our own blood and kindred. Their habits and aspirations have been the same as ours, and it is true, as has been stated by the Supreme Court of the United States more than once, that all the Territories between the oceans have been regarded as in a state of pupilage or probation, looking ultimately to admission into the Union.

But the result of the Spanish war, Mr. President, has placed under our control—I use the phrase advisedly—territory containing eleven or more millions of people, a sixth of the population of this country, strangers to us, strangers to our language, strangers to our institutions, strangers to our aspirations and to our race. And that control, Mr. President, brings with it responsibility of the gravest sort.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], with almost dogmatic earnestness, contended, as do his colleagues on his side of the Chamber with hardly an exception, that by the acquisition of territory the Constitution of the United States, by its own force, extends over them, and by its own force makes citizens of the United States of its inhabitants. That is not, in the light of existing conditions, an academic question. It is one of the gravest possible problems which could confront a people. One circumstance only would tend, if I were suspicious, which I am not, to impeach a little bit the sincerity of that utterance, and that is the fact that the Senator only a day or so ago voted for an amendment offered from his side of the Chamber to extend the Constitution to Puerto Rico.

Testing his utterance by his vote, placing them side by side, they are like Kilkenny cats; they eat each other up; and if the Constitution is sincerely claimed here by its own force immediately upon the acquisition of territory to extend over it, to carry to its inhabitants all of the guaranties which that instrument gives to citizens of the United States, to bring them into our citizenship, it is strange that Senators should vote by statute to extend it.

Mr. President, this question and other kindred questions which will not down, which are far above party politics, which are of infinitely more consequence to our people than the success of this party or that, are to be solved only by the utmost care and thought and patience. Partisanship should find no abiding place in this discussion. These problems are not to be solved by catch phrases or by rhetorical rhapsodies. It is said—and that is a catch phrase—and I have received letters from valued constituents of mine, in almost every line of which I found the phrase "the Constitution follows the flag." An epigram is dangerous sometimes in meeting grave questions.

Does the Constitution follow the flag? I doubt not the Senators who think so are sincere in their belief, but does it? The proposition is too broad. The Constitution does not follow the flag, as it is stated here, Mr. President. Our Army took the flag to Cuba; and, after a magnificent exhibition of courage and soldier-like bearing, planted it in Santiago. Is the Constitution of the United States in Santiago, Mr. President? Is Cuba a part of the United States? But the flag of the United States is there. Can the Constitution go beyond the limits of the United States? Can we legislate for Cuba? No; but our flag is there.

The Supreme Court of the United States decided in Fleming vs. Page (9 How., 614) that the military occupation by American troops of foreign soil does not operate to extend the boundaries of this Government. The flag is there, Mr. President; our soldiers are there; but the Constitution is not there. The law, and the only law which is there, and which follows the flag beyond our borders, is the law of war. That is all. So when Senators—and we read it in every newspaper—say that the Constitution follows the flag, it never has been true, and it never can be true. The flag follows the Constitution. Wherever the Constitution extends, the flag goes, for it is the symbol of the Government, whose charter the Constitution is and whose powers are derived from the Constitution. That is all of that.

It is said, Mr. President, that the Constitution goes of its own force into the Territories. Is that true? It has been often stated in the press and suggested in the Congress that our contention that the Constitution does not go of its own force into the Territories is a novelty either devised in an hour of party exigency or as an expedient to aid the accomplishment of "imperialism." Mr. President, neither statement is correct. "There is nothing new under the sun" in constitutional propositions. This is an ancient one. Its history has been pathetic in some of its phases, as we look back upon it, now disappearing as settled and again resuscitated at the command of slavery. It was raised in 1803 and it was settled by Congress in 1803, that the Constitution does not of its own force go into the Territories of the United States. I quote what McMaster says in his History of the People of the United States. Of course the debates are quite scant of the Congress of that day, though he explored, as he has in all of his works, every source of original information. He says:

Thus were settled two constitutional principles of great importance. The first established the right of the President and the Senate to buy foreign soil; to this both Federalists and Republicans agreed. The second established the fact that foreign soil could, by the treaty power, be incorporated into the Union. These questions disposed of, a third—How shall the country thus acquired be governed?—at once arose. The Senate was first to attempt an answer in the bill to authorize the President to take possession of the Territory.

By it, till such time as Congress should provide a temporary government for Louisiana, all the military, all the civil and judicial powers were to be vested in such persons and exercised in such manner as the President should direct. To the Federalists the purpose and the meaning of this bill were as plain as they were outrageous. Between the day when the United States should take possession and the day when Congress should provide a temporary government some time must necessarily elapse. During this time the old form of government, based on the worst form of Spanish depotism, was to be continued. Jefferson was to take the place of King Charles—

How like to-day this language sounds.

Jefferson was to take the place of King Charles, and, without even consulting the Senate, fill every place from governor, intendant, alcalde, down to keeper of the public stores, with creatures of his own; it was, in short, to legalize on the soil of the United States a government under which the people possessed no civil rights; nay, could be punished for even wishing to enjoy them. The bill was therefore declared by the Federalists to be unconstitutional. It was combining in the hands of the President legislative, executive, and judicial power; for he was not only to appoint public officers but to determine in what manner they should act.

This, said the Republicans, is very far from being the case. The President is not to exercise one of the powers; he is to choose the men who are to exercise certain powers, and nothing more. But even if the bill did combine in his hands powers legislative, executive, and judicial, it would still be a proper bill.

I read this to show how old this doctrine is.

Whatever limitations the Constitution may fix to the power of Congress over the States, it fixes none to the power of Congress over the Territories. The Constitution is made for the States and not for the Territories. It does not extend to the Territories. What else is the meaning of the words "Congress shall have power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States?" Is not this grant unlimited? Has it not always been so construed? Who makes laws in the Territories of Indiana and Mississippi? The people? No. The Congress? No; the governor and the judges appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate. Could we pass such a law for the government of a State? We certainly could not. Does not this show that the Constitution is inoperative in the Territories?

And thereupon, Mr. President, upon a conference, it was settled in both Houses of Congress, early in the history of the United States under the Constitution, that so far as the Territories are concerned Congress may establish such government as it chooses and that they are beyond and outside of, in a sense, the constitutional limitations. That, thus settled, rested for many a year; but, Mr. President, it was not in the nature of things that it could be permitted to rest forever. A conflict was being waged in this country, sometimes seen and sometimes unseen, but never ceasing—the conflict between liberty and slavery, two antagonistic forces which can not anywhere live side by side in peace.

When the Mayflower landed the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, they brought religious liberty and they brought the love of freedom; when the Dutch ship landed a cargo of negro slaves on the James, then was planted on this continent the seeds of slavery, and and projected into the future an irrepressible conflict between those two forces, perpetuated in the Constitution.

When the framers of that instrument provided for the termination of the slave trade, but at the same time in a compromise gave political power to the ownership of men, women, and children, they added intensity to the natural antagonism of these forces to each other, which had to go on until in God's own time it should end in the survival of the fittest; and it went on, developing as a struggle partly for political power. When the Mexican war terminated with the acquisition of territory, Mr. Calhoun found it necessary in the interest of slavery to give renewed life to the dogma, buried in 1803, that the Constitution by its own force carried slavery into the Territories. If this could have been maintained, slavery in the Territories would obviously have been beyond reach of Congressional control.

It has seemed to me a little odd, I confess, to find old Republican leaders speaking of this negation of Mr. Calhoun's doctrine as a discovery. Why, Mr. President, the Republican party sprang into life to stay the advance of human slavery under this doctrine that the Constitution recognized that institution, as it did, and by its own force carried it beyond the reach of Congressional intervention into the Territories of the United States.

The first political speech to which I ever listened was made by an eloquent son of Massachusetts, Anson Burlingame. I remember it to-day as well as at the time—it was in 1856—in which he announced the Republican doctrine to be that the Constitution had no force in the Territories of the United States, and therefore could not be held to carry slavery into the Territories, and underlying the contest between Douglas and Lincoln was that proposition; and in the first platform of the Republican party, adopted in Philadelphia in 1856, it was declared:

Resolved, That the Constitution confers on Congress sovereign powers over the Territories of the United States for their government.

In the convention of 1860, which placed Abraham Lincoln in nomination, the Republican party declared:

That the new dogma that the Constitution of its own force carries slavery into any or all of the Territories of the United States is a dangerous political heresy, at variance with the explicit provisions of that instrument itself, with contemporaneous exposition, and with legislative and judicial precedent. It is revolutionary in its tendency, and subversive of the peace and harmony of the country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I will, but I should prefer to go on.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator, as he is a very able lawyer——

Mr. SPOONER. Thank you.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know he is entirely sincere and honest in his convictions on this subject, and so I should like to ask him whether or not the contention which he has just made in regard to the Constitution not carrying slavery into the Territories prevented liberty or freedom from going there? In other words, does it go there of its own force and accord, and is there no obligation on the part of Congress to recognize that the Declaration of Independence and the principles underlying it are universal and that they go to the Territories of the United States with the flag?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, that is only another way of putting the question to me whether the Constitution of its own force extends into the Territories—that is all. No one who has contended that the Constitution does not of its own force go into the Territories has insisted that Congress in its legislation is not bound by the principles of the social compact.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, then, if the Senator will permit me another question, I should like to ask him just to give his opinion—because it is a matter only of opinion with anybody at this day—whether or not the original contention of the Republican party in regard to this issue that the Constitution did not extend to the Territories or did not extend slavery there, did not rest on that only; that it would never have been advanced as preventing liberty from going there?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the contention arose first in 1803, and it arose largely in the South; but the Constitution recognized slavery. The claim was that the Constitution was in force in the Territories, and that a man's property in man, in woman, in child, was as sacred under that instrument in the Territories as was his property in a mule or in a horse, but the liberty-loving people of the North, with Abraham Lincoln at their head, in 1860, said no; the Republican convention said no——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. And we say no. I hope my friend will not interrupt me at this point.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no desire unduly to interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not like to decline to yield, but there are a number of Senators who desire to speak, and I speak embarrassed by the consciousness of that fact.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will not interrupt the Senator if he objects.

Mr. SPOONER. I speak under the embarrassment of knowing that I am excluding some other Senator from the floor. I am always glad to answer the Senator's questions.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was desirous of having the Senator explain why, if the question was settled in 1803, it was necessary to settle it again in 1860?

Mr. SPOONER. The settlement of 1803 was a legislative settlement, a practical Congressional exposition of the Constitution; but the contest between liberty and slavery was beyond reach of settlement or compromise. It went on, and the exigencies of the latter led Mr. Calhoun to reinvoke and urge with great ability that dogma which Mr. Benton referred to as the "transmigratory character of the Constitution." It was opposed by Mr. Webster, in the interest of liberty and of sound constitutional interpretation. We know now that the struggle between liberty and slavery could only be settled in one place—the battlefield. It was settled on a hundred fields of battle, and I supposed that this doctrine was shot to death on the battlefields of the war of the rebellion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. I supposed, Mr. President, after slavery had been laid away, when in the heat of battle the shackles of slavery had melted away forever, and the air of the United States, like the air of England, had become too pure for a slave to breathe in, that this doctrine invented for slavery had also ceased.

But, Mr. President, after Abraham Lincoln had passed away, after slavery had been abolished by the emancipation proclamation, the Congress submitted to the legislatures of the States an amendment to that great instrument which ought to put an end, I think, to this contention. It is as follows:

> Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

This wrote the emancipation proclamation, with its pledges, into the Constitution. How significant is the language employed, Mr. President. What does it mean? Why add the words "or any place subject to their jurisdiction," if the Constitution follows the flag, and if all places and territory acquired by the United States are a part of the United States and subject to the Constitution of its own force? Mindful of the old contention, determined to leave no possibility of further doubt upon it, the language employed was a deliberate recognition of the fact that outside of the "United States," using the phrase as it is used in that instrument, there might be places, territory, not an integral part of the United States, but belonging to it; not of it, but subject to its jurisdiction.

If the contention of the other side were right that the moment we acquire territory, large or small, that moment the Constitution, of its own force, extends over it, and that moment its inhabitants become citizens of the United States and it becomes a part of the United States, it would be difficult to find a theory upon which the framers of the constitutional amendment could use the language which they did.

Is the Senator waiting to ask me a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to put in a word, if the Senator will permit me, and if it will not interrupt him. May I have the Senator's consent?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would call his attention in a very kind way to the change of position, so to speak, which has taken place in regard to this question of the Constitution, and point out, if he will permit me, that those of us who still contend for that must have some other purpose than the extension of slavery.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. That we must have an innate, an inherent, an inherited, or a conscientious belief that the Constitution and flag go together, and that, therefore, the doctrine, if it was ever invented, as is claimed, for the purpose of extending slavery, can not be applied to those of us who still contend for it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is inherited. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well; you say it is inherited. Then I will direct the Senator's attention to the fact that the slaveholders, or the descendants of the slaveholders, or the ex-slaveholders, so to speak, of this day and time have changed places with the Republicans of 1860, and we are now contending for liberty as represented by the flag and the Constitution, and the Senator and his friends contend for the power of Congress to limit the citizen's rights, to limit his property rights, and in any way to legislate arbitrarily to take all of those rights away. We deny that Congress has that right.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, from the foundation of this Government Congress has exercised absolute power in legislating for the Territories; and I am not aware of any instance in which liberty has been found "bleeding in the streets." Is the Senator?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; but I do not see the application of it, if the Senator wants to ask me that question.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not to blame for that. [Laughter.] If my friend will take five minutes, he will see it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Possibly I might see it if I would take five minutes; but I do not see what liberty bleeding in the streets has to do with the constitutional question we are discussing.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator said, a few moments ago, if I understood him correctly, that he was contending still, slavery being dead, that the Constitution of its own force goes into the Territories in the interest of liberty.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, we contend, Mr. President, that the Constitution of its own force does not go into the Territories, and that nevertheless all of the Territories and the people of the Territories have been in the enjoyment of liberty and the rights of man.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to the fact that for the first time in our history in connection with the Territories——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was calling attention to the fact that for the first time in our history we are legislating differently in regard to Territories from anything we have ever done before. We have never denied the inhabitants of the Territories free access to our markets and equality before the law; and with a few limitations on Territorial governments, the Constitution has been applied wherever it was applicable, and nobody has ever disputed it.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, I have never been able to see how the Constitution of its own force could go in patches into the Territories of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is exactly what has bothered me in this matter.

Mr. SPOONER. I say this about that, that wherever the Constitution is extended by statute, as has been done over and over again, when Congress thought it wise to do it, it has gone there as a statute, not as a Constitution. It has gone there, adopted by Congress as a statutory rule in the Territory, precisely the same—Daniel Webster so claimed it, Mr. Edmunds so contends for it, and for one I agree to it—precisely the same as if the text of the Constitution were enacted in the body of the statute. But the notion that the Constitution can be expanded or contracted by an act of Congress I have never been able to approve.

Mr. TILLMAN. And yet the Senator's friends on the other side have introduced resolutions here extending certain provisions of the Constitution to Puerto Rico.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly they have.

Mr. TILLMAN. That shows that there is a difference of opinion in this Chamber.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Nobody on this side has claimed that wisdom will die with us; but you certainly on that side are divided enough to prove that you are not happy over the situation.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but that shows the Senator from South Carolina recognizes the fact, but does not understand it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I must confess that my mind is a little dull on some points.

Mr. SPOONER. What I mean by that is this: Section 1891 of the Revised Statutes, enacted in 1862, is as follows:

> The Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within all the organized Territories, and in every Territory hereafter organized, as elsewhere within the United States.

Statutes of a similar character had often been enacted. On some occasions Congress had refused to enact them. The whole theory of their enactment seems to have been that the Constitution of its own force did not extend into the Territories, and that the laws of the United States of their own force did not extend into the Territories. That is simply a legislative adoption of certain constitutional provisions, and my contention is that except as incorporated in this statute it does not go into the Territories. There comes a time when by legislative action the Constitution automatically, so to speak, expands or extends. That time comes when Congress in the exercise of its legislative power admits an organized Territory into the Union.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me right here?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator, but I am honestly trying to get some light. I do not want to disturb the Senator. I will ask the Senator as a lawyer to tell me how it is that some of our Congressional statutes have already gone to Puerto Rico before the Constitution got there? In other words, where did they get the "vigore" to go there?

Mr. SPOONER. They did not get any "vigore" to go there. That is the trouble with that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, they are there all the same.

Mr. SPOONER. Who put them there?

Mr. TILLMAN. The President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I will give the Senator some light.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want light.

Mr. SPOONER. The President is there as Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Under the Constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; under the Constitution; to this extent, that the Constitution makes him Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. And limits his power.

Mr. SPOONER. And limits his power? Not at all. As Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States in time of war? Not at all. Inter arma leges silent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a moment. In time of war the only limitation upon the power of the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy is the limitation placed upon every commander in chief by the laws of civilized warfare, and nothing else.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does not he take the oath of office to support the Constitution, and when he goes is he not bound by that in every official act?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; he takes the constitutional oath of office.

Mr. TILLMAN. He takes the oath and is bound by that oath of office.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not suppose that because he takes the oath of office as President and thereby, being President, becomes, under the Constitution, Commander in Chief, he has to take a copy of the Constitution in his pocket wherever the Army goes under the sky. If the Senator will permit me, the fact is, and the Senator ought to remember it, that the President of the United States is in Puerto Rico just as he is in the Philippines.

He is there just as he was in California after the treaty of cession. He is there under the war power, as the Supreme Court decided, and he will remain there in the exercise of the war power as Commander in Chief until Congress legislates for Puerto Rico. It is in the exercise of the war power that he has changed some of the laws of Puerto Rico. It is in the exercise of the war power that he has modified the tariff of Puerto Rico. It is in the exercise of the war power that he has extended the time of payment of certain mortgages in Puerto Rico. He is there as Commander in Chief, with all the powers which a commander in chief possesses under the laws of war.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I will be obliged if my friend will permit me to proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. One more interruption, and I will cease bothering the Senator. I wish to ask him this question. The treaty of peace with Spain is now something over a year old, and Puerto Rico has never been in rebellion; it never has fought us; it never has given us any concern except to try to relieve the distress, and we are beginning to legislate for Puerto Rico. Can the Senator give any reasonable explanation as to how and why it is that this peaceful island shall be treated differently in the legislation and the constitutional and statutory action which we propose to take from the territories which we acquired from Mexico?

Mr. SPOONER. I will show before I finish that never since the Constitution was adopted has a Territory and its people been treated with the generosity with which we are treating the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not——

Mr. SPOONER. I thought the Senator entered into an agreement not to interrupt me.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the Senator immediately turns around and presents me with a question which leaves me in a hole, so to speak.

Mr. SPOONER. I will help the Senator out.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that these claims in regard to generosity have two sides to them. We have given back to these people revenues we have collected at our customs-houses, in the way of the $2,000,000 which we voted them the other day, and now we propose to levy a small tribute, you may say, of 15 per cent of the Dingley rates. Then you turn around and give it back to them. Why it is necessary to take away the taxes and turn around and immediately restore them to the people is what I have never been able to understand.

Mr. SPOONER. I am sorry for that. It is very plain.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there any sense in taking money with one hand and turning around and handing it back to the man from whom you took it?

Mr. SPOONER. If you take it out of one pocket and turn around and put it into the other pocket, the fellow still has it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why take it away from him at all?

Mr. SPOONER. I will explain that.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator speaks of the liberality with which we are treating Puerto Rico. The question I wish to ask him is this; and I will not bother him any more: If I understand the situation in Puerto Rico, we claim the right to exclude those people from the benefits of the flag and the Constitution, and put them outside, make aliens of them, prevent them from having the benefits of free trade with the Union. We thereby set up a condition which means this: This Congress you say is very liberal, and declares that the Puerto Ricans shall pay only 15 per cent. The next Congress might declare for 150 per cent. If the right exists——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator kindly notify me when his question is ended? [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I am sure the Senator will not leave me in the middle of the ditch in that way. Let me get out.

Mr. SPOONER. Go ahead.

Mr. TILLMAN. What I want to call the attention of the Senator to is this, and I will ask him to discuss that feature of it: The benefit which Puerto Ricans are to receive from annexation to the United States, or from being a dependency or colony, will depend upon the liberality of Congress, if Congress has omnipotent power.

This Congress may be very liberal, but who knows what will be the action of future Congresses if that right exists? If we can levy 15 per cent, if it is constitutional, if the Constitution does not step in to bar Congress from such action, how can the property in that island ever get into that status in the markets where it will be a basis for getting money and loans, which farmers usually have to have? In other words, does not the very existence of this discrimination destroy all benefits and leave the Puerto Ricans in a hopeless condition, subject to the whims and the greed of a future Congress?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, I will not bother the Senator any more.

Mr. SPOONER. No, nothing of the kind.

But, Mr. President, if some of our friends would read the Constitution more carefully, I think they would come to the conclusion that their contention that the Constitution of its own force immediately goes to the territories acquired by the United States can find in that instrument no support whatever. There is not a single line in the Constitution, save in one place, where mention is made of territory.

Every clause of the Constitution almost speaks of States. The Constitution was made by States. The Government was made by States. "We, the people of the United States," meant the people of the States. It was the delegates of the people of the States who made the Constitution. It is only the States which can change the Constitution. It is the States which elect Representatives to the other branch of Congress. It is the States which elect Senators. It is to the States to which the judicial power of the United States extends, not to the Territories. It is in the States that the judges of the Federal courts have a life tenure under the Constitution, not in the Territories.

Mr. MASON. Would I bother the Senator from Wisconsin if I asked him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator wish to ask me?

Mr. MASON. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the decision by Marshall.

Mr. SPOONER. I am quite familiar with that decision.

Mr. MASON. But what I want to know is, if the Senator will not direct his attention to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will later.

Mr. MASON. All right.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator asked me a question the other day which I must confess I can not quite——

Mr. MASON. I am talking about this particular question. I wanted the Senator to say if Marshall did not decide there that for purposes of taxation, which is the bill now before the Senate, the Territories were as much a part of the United States as Maryland or Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPOONER. I will show before I have finished what Marshall decided and what Marshall did not decide.

But I was saying, Mr. President, that the Constitution furnishes a multiplicity of evidence that the chief concern of those who framed it was to create a national government with adequate powers, safeguarding by proper limitation and reservation the sovereignty and interests of the States.

I am running hastily over this subject, partly because of the time taken by interruptions, but I beg leave to refer in a cursory way to some of the provisions of the Constitution which show how much in the thought of the framers of that instrument were the States and how little in their thought was the Territory and the people living upon the same.

Congress was given power to establish an uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy "throughout the United States." The first bankruptcy law which was enacted in the exercise of this power did not extend to Territories at all. Would the Supreme Court hold invalid a bankruptcy law limited in its operation to the States?

The words "throughout the United States" are used three times in the Constitution—once in connection with the bankruptcy provision which I have just read, again in section 8, Article I, and again in Article II, which declares:

> The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

Of course no one would contend that the words "throughout the United States" here used included Territories, for under the Constitution Territories have no power to choose electors; only the States choose electors.

Section 8 gives Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." There was no thought of Territories.

The framers of the Constitution did not rely at all upon a militia in Territories or have such a thing in contemplation. What proof is there of this? In the authority given to Congress to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, there is reserved "to the States respectively" the appointment of officers.

It is provided that no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State. No thought was given to Territory.

It is declared that no preference shall be given, by any regulation of commerce or revenue, to the ports of one State over those of another, etc. The ports of Territories were not thought of.

It is declared that full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. No thought here of Territories.

It is provided with care "that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." Why not in Territories?

It is provided that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government. No requirement that Congress shall give to Territories and to the people thereof a republican form of government. This is quite significant, all bearing upon my proposition that the Constitution was for the States and to create a national government, with proper grants and limitations.

The President is required from time to time to give to the Congress information of the state of the "Union," which, of course, no one will contend includes Territories.

Consider Article III, relating to judicial powers:

> The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crime shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

This is full of significance. One of the grievances in the Declaration of Independence justifying revolution was "for transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses." Those men valued a trial by a jury of the vicinage, and sought to guard against the trial of one accused of crime, remote from home and friends and neighbors, among strangers. Yet they confined this safeguard to States, and explicitly left it to Congress as to the subject in the Territories to do its own will.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me? I see the Senator is a little annoyed by interruptions, and I shall not interrupt him to any extent. Are not the inhabitants of a Territory entitled to a trial by jury in the Territory?

Mr. SPOONER. In every case in which that question has been decided the Constitution has been adopted, so far as that was concerned, by statute, and the Supreme Court of the United States has left it an open question—and I will not stop to read the authorities—whether or not it is a right guaranteed by the Constitution or one derived from legislative power.

Mr. ALLEN. The Supreme Court has held that all the personal privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States go to the inhabitants of a Territory.

Mr. SPOONER. In a way, although Judge Bradley, one of the ablest judges who ever sat upon any bench, says that those rights are rather inferred from the Constitution and from our social compact than from any language of the Constitution itself.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Justice Field so held.

Mr. SPOONER. I know what the courts have held. The courts never so held in any case where the Constitution has not been "extended" by statute to the Territory.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the real true line of demarcation, as I understand—I ask the Senator for his opinion—is that the inhabitants of the Territories do not enjoy political rights, but do enjoy those ordinary privileges of liberty and protection from confiscation, trial by jury, and the like.

Mr. SPOONER. They enjoy nothing except what Congress gives them, in my judgment, and it does not answer the proposition that the Constitution does not extend of its own force over a Territory to say that when we do legislate as to a Territory we are not bound by some of the restrictions upon our legislative powers generally in the Constitution.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret to see the Senator disagree with the unanimous opinion of the court.

Mr. SPOONER. I have seen the Senator disagree so many times with the unanimous opinions of the Supreme Court that that ought not to worry him.

I simply read this for a moment to show how utterly out of mind in framing this instrument were the Territories and the inhabitants of the Territories, and I call attention to Article VI:

> In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation.

The Supreme Court has decided that that guaranty applies only to the States, and that so far as a Territory is concerned Congress may provide at its will where a person shall be tried. Congress may take him from his home and his neighborhood and may deprive him of a jury of the vicinage, may take him amongst strangers; but Congress can not do that in a State, nor can the State do it.

Mr. ALLEN. Nor can they do it in the Territories.

Mr. SPOONER. That is where the Senator differs from the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. The Supreme Court has never so decided.

Mr. SPOONER. That is either a question of judgment or a question of veracity.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not a question of veracity.

Mr. SPOONER. Whichever the Senator wants to make it.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not a question of veracity, because the Senator from Wisconsin is celebrated for his truthfulness, and I recognize that fact. The Supreme Court did decide in the Ross case, I think it was, that a man might be tried in Japan by a consular court——

Mr. SPOONER. I am familiar with the Ross case.

Mr. ALLEN. But they have never held the doctrine for which the Senator contends.

Mr. SPOONER. I am familiar with the Ross case. Let us see whether they have or not. In the case of the United States against Dawson, reported in 15 Howard, 468, the court say:

> The language of the amendment is too particular and specific to leave any doubt about it: "The accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall be committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law."
> A crime, therefore, committed against the laws of the United States out of the limits of a State is not local, but may be tried at such place as Congress shall designate by law.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the case where there is no judicial district, no judicial tribunal; but where there is a judicial tribunal, where there is a judicial district in a Territory, there is not an instance where the Supreme Court has decided that a man who has committed a crime or who is charged with a crime in that district or Territory can be taken to another place and tried.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator's accuracy were equal to his earnestness he would be a very dangerous antagonist on this particular question.

Mr. ALLEN. This is not a question to be laughed at.

Mr. SPOONER. But the very case of the United States against Dawson was where a district had been established by Congress and had been changed by Congress after the offense was committed, so that the question was whether a man was entitled to be tried in the old district, outside of the State of Arkansas and in the Territory, before a jury of his neighbors, or could be tried in the new district, away from his neighborhood, before a jury not of the vicinage; and the Supreme Court say that he can.

Mr. ALLEN. Sometimes in the division of districts it may so happen that the locality of an indictment may be in what is called a new district, where the party could be tried, of course, because it is the successor of the previous district; but I should like to put this question to the Senator. I will not interrupt the Senator if he protests.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. ALLEN. For instance, in New Mexico and Arizona there are well-established tribunals, with well-defined jurisdictions. Can a man be taken from the district of Arizona into the State of Maine for a crime alleged to have been committed in Arizona and there tried before a judicial tribunal?

Mr. SPOONER. My answer to that is that the Constitution of the United States—the Senator is familiar with it——

Mr. ALLEN. I have read it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will read a part of it which the Senator has evidently forgotten:

> The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

Article 6 requires Senators and Representatives and "the members of the several State legislatures and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, to take oath to support the Constitution." Nothing as to Territorial officials. And I might call attention to numerous other provisions of the Constitution upon the subject. Taken altogether, they establish to an unprejudiced mind that the Territories and the people of the Territories were not considered, but were provided for by a single section in the instrument, which I will refer to later.

Mr. President, there was good reason why the framers of the Constitution so completely ignored territory in that instrument. There is nothing strange about it. They never dreamed, of course, that we would acquire Louisiana. Those men, as farsighted as they were, never in their wildest dreams anticipated that before a few decades the domain of the United States—this Government which they were creating—would extend from ocean to ocean. We owned, when the Constitution was adopted, some territory. The Ordinance of 1787 had been enacted applicable to the Territory of the Northwest.

It was sparsely settled. It was settled by their own people, and they provided in that ordinance for the ultimate admission, when they reached 60,000 inhabitants, of those people into the Union as States. I think they indicated the number of States—not less than three nor more than five. They knew what territory was in dispute and would come by cession from other States. It never entered the minds of the framers of the Constitution that all the territory then in contemplation would not soon become States of the Union, whereupon they would be embraced by the Constitution.

Mr. BACON. Will I intrude upon the Senator from Wisconsin if I ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. No, except I feel that I am crowding other men, and if the Senator will permit me to proceed I shall be obliged.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment? I will not occupy much of his time, but as the Senator has submitted a very grave proposition and prefaces it by a decision of the Supreme Court, I should like to know if I understand him correctly.

Mr. SPOONER. My remarks will be reported.

Mr. BACON. I am not given to undue interruptions of Senators.

Mr. SPOONER. I know it.

Mr. BACON. I will promise not to trespass unduly on the Senator's time. The Senator from Wisconsin, in the case of Dawson, which, I think, is the one he has just quoted, cited the construction of the Supreme Court upon additional Article VI of the Constitution, in which the court passed upon the question whether or not the limitation as to the place where a man could be tried applied to a crime committed in a Territory.

The Supreme Court decided that in that case Congress had control of the question as to the particular place where a crime committed in a Territory should be tried. The point to which I desire to call the attention of the learned and distinguished Senator is this: Article VI contains a number of guarantees, which I shall proceed to read:

> In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial—

That is one—

> by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law—> and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation—

Two—

Three—> to be confronted with the witnesses against him—

Four—> to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor—

Five—

> and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense—

Six.

Now, one of these six guaranties in favor of one accused of crime is as to the particular place where it shall be tried. The Supreme Court decided that in the case of a Territory that did not apply to the extent that it would be limited to a particular district, but that the Government could prescribe where the trial should be had.

What I desire to know of the distinguished Senator is whether he understands from that decision of the Supreme Court as to that particular one of these six, that the Supreme Court meant to imply by that decision that no one of the six guaranties expressed in the sixth additional article to the Constitution was a guaranty of which an inhabitant of a Territory had the right to take advantage and to be protected by, or whether——

Mr. SPOONER. I understand the question.

Mr. BACON. Or whether he understands the Supreme Court limited it simply to the question of the particular place in the Territory, for reasons which shall be obvious, and that every other one of the six guaranties in the additional sixth article of the Constitution was as much the property and the right of the citizen of a Territory as it is of the citizen of a State, and without any statutory enactment by Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, the Supreme Court decided the question before the court, and they held that the first portion of that article was limited in its operation to the States. Whether they would hold that the other portions of the article were not limited to the States I do not undertake to say.

Mr. BACON. What is the Senator's opinion?

Mr. SPOONER. My opinion is, Mr. President, that if there were nothing in the Constitution upon the subject, there is a power higher than the Constitution. There are principles binding upon the Congress, which bind State legislatures, growing out of the social compact, a violation of which is so shocking to every man's sense of justice that it could not be sustained by any judicial tribunal for a moment, and not only that, but an intelligent constituency would not permit any Congress or any legislative body to indulge in an enactment that would violate them.

These are basic principles. They lie at the foundation of our civilization. They are principles the disregard of which drove our ancestors from England. They are the principles which Judge Chase had in mind when he said in Calder et al. vs. Bull et al. (3 Dallas, 385) that—

> The people of the United States erected their constitutions or forms of government to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to secure the blessings of liberty, and to protect their persons and property from violence. The purposes for which men enter into society will determine the nature and terms of the social compact; and as they are the foundation of the legislative power, they will decide what are the proper objects of it. The nature and ends of legislative power will limit the exercise of it.
> This fundamental principle flows from the very nature of our free republican governments, that no man should be compelled to do what the laws do not require, nor to refrain from acts which the laws permit. There are acts which the Federal or State legislature can not do without exceeding their authority. There are certain vital principles in our free republican governments which will determine and overrule an apparent and flagrant abuse of legislative power, as to authorize manifest injustice by positive law, or to take away that security for personal liberty, or private property, for the protection whereof the Government was established.
> An act of the legislature (for I can not call it a law) contrary to the great first principles of the social compact can not be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority. * * * A few instances will suffice to explain what I mean: A law that punished a citizen for an innocent action, or, in other words, for an act which, when done, was in violation of no existing law; a law that destroys or impairs the lawful private contracts of citizens; a law that makes a man a judge in his own cause; or a law that takes property from A and gives it to B. It is against all reason and justice for a people to intrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it can not be presumed that they have done it. * * *
> The legislature may enjoin, permit, forbid, and punish; they may declare new crimes; and establish rules of conduct for all its citizens in future cases; they may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they can not change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private contract, or the right of private property. To maintain that our Federal or State legislature possesses such powers, if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in our free republican governments.

It was this, I think, which Justice Bradley had in mind when he said:

> Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments; but these limitations would exist rather by inference and the general spirit of the Constitution, from which Congress derives all its powers, than by any express and direct application of its provisions.

Now, Mr. President, why was it that Congress provided that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States? Why was that provision of equality between citizens confined only to States? It is because they were making a constitution for States; they were creating a government for States, erecting a national government with such sovereignty as belongs to governments and with only the limitations which they expressed and fairly imply upon its power by the Constitution.

There is but one place in the Constitution in which the word "Territory" occurs. There is but one clause which deals with the subject, outside of the power to admit new States, and it is the power conferred by the States upon the government which they created, the language of which is of plain, well-settled, popular, and legal signification, and is so clear as to leave the art of construction no office to perform. It is as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Does the Senator from Georgia contend that the Constitution of its own force is in Puerto Rico?

Mr. BACON. As the Senator asks me a question (I would not interrupt him otherwise), I will state my opinion upon that subject. Of course so long as the war power is being exercised, I recognize the peculiar status such as the Senator has himself described, but whenever we legislate or organize a civil government, as the Senator has done me the honor to ask my opinion, whether it is in Puerto Rico or elsewhere, in my opinion we must do so under the powers and limitations of the Constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it has been decided over and over again, Mr. President—it is international law, declared by the Supreme Court of the United States—that when territory is acquired by cession the laws in force there remain in force until they are superseded by the conquering nation. I suppose that if we withdrew our troops from Puerto Rico, if we provided such a government for Puerto Rico as was provided by Congress for Louisiana and as we provide for Alaska, without any local legislature at all, until we enacted legislation the laws of the ceding government would be in force, would they not?

Mr. BACON. After we had organized a civil government?

Mr. SPOONER. If we simply organized a government such as there is now in Alaska, with a governor and executive officers, with no legislative powers at all?

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly, Mr. President, such laws as were consistent with our Constitution would remain in force, but those which were inconsistent with it, I say, most undoubtedly would not be in force.

Mr. SPOONER. That begs the question.

Mr. BACON. No; it does not. That exactly answers the question.

Mr. SPOONER. Now—

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Will the Senate permit me to dwell upon and analyze that phrase briefly?

Let me ask the attention of the Senate closely for a moment to this Territorial clause of the Constitution. It is the only source of express power in the Congress over the Territories, to dispose of them or to legislate respecting them or their inhabitants. If this provision were not in the Constitution, we would be remitted to the general proposition that the power to acquire territory—in other words, the war power and the treaty-making power—carries with it, of necessity, the right to govern the Territory.

I ask the Senate to note, first, that this power of disposition and government as to the Territory is given to the Congress Expressio unis est exclusio alterius. The word "dispose," in connection with the word "property," is a word of well-settled signification and was at the time the Constitution was adopted. As used in this clause it is generic and embraces any form of disposition. I do not stop to debate it. It is too plain. But, preceding the words which follow, the words "dispose of" are significant. Dispose of what? "Territory or OTHER PROPERTY."

The collocation of words demonstrates that the men who framed this provision intended that the word "territory" should have the meaning of property. That would have been sufficiently clear by the use of the words "dispose of." It was made as clear as the daylight by the use of the other words: First, "territory or other property," and, second, by the use of the word "belonging," which, in the connection in which it is used, in itself signifies ownership. Nor is that all. The clause indicates an owner—"belonging to the United States."

This means, of course, not the United States from the territorial or geographical standpoint, because land can not own land, but to the government or political entity which the States by the Constitution created, and to which that instrument obviously intended to give the power of ownership of territory and the disposition of territory as property, and the government of territory.

"Territory belonging to the United States" is one thing; territory, an integral part of the United States, is a different thing. This language is broad and prospective in its operation. The notion promulgated in the Dred Scott case, that the language applied only to territory acquired from Great Britain at the end of the Revolution, was long ago exploded by practical exposition of the instrument through the treaty-making power by Congress and by the courts.

Now, I ask the Senate to note, for it is important, that, aside from treating the territory of the United States then owned and thereafter to be acquired as property belonging to the United States, the power is conferred in very general, but adequate, language for the disposal and administration of territory, either by sale of land, the cession of territory, or the government of the inhabitants of territory. It would be quite impossible to confer a power in more elastic language. Let me recur to it:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories * * * belonging to the United States.

As contradistinguished from the words "being a part of the United States," these words are, for reasons which I have before given, more vital to our people than ever before.

It must not be forgotten that this clause as it is written not only gives the power to hold and to administer, but it gives the power to quit holding. This Government can dispose of property belonging to it. It is not so easy to find a power to dispose of an integral part of the United States, which "is it," but does not belong to it.

"Needful rules and regulations respecting." That leaves, and was intended to leave, to Congress the determination of what in a given case is or is not "needful." The language is elastic. It is a power of discretion, and it implies that what might be needful in one case might not be needful in another for Congress to determine.

I say, that from the beginning Congress has made such rules for government and administration as, in its judgment, were deemed needful and adapted to the conditions. We may determine one form of government and set of laws needful in Arizona and another in Alaska. The Louisiana government fell naturally within the power, as has the most liberal government fallen fairly within the power, which we have ever instituted.

I insert here, with leave of the Senate, some extracts from authorities on the subject, which I presented in the observations which I had the honor to submit upon the ratification of the treaty of Paris. I might add others:

That the power to acquire by treaty or by war necessarily implies the power to govern was asserted by Chief Justice Marshall in Sere and Laralde vs. Pitot and others (6 Cranch., 337). He says:

The power of governing and of legislating for a Territory is the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire and to hold territory. Could this position be contested, the Constitution of the United States declares that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Accordingly, we find Congress possessing and exercising the absolute and undisputed power of governing and legislating for the Territory of Orleans. Congress has given them a legislative, an executive, and a judiciary, with such powers as it has been their will to assign to those departments respectively.

The suggestion that we can acquire territory which we can not govern would be rejected by anyone. Chancellor Kent says (1 Commentaries, page 385):

It would seem, from these various Congressional regulations of the Territories belonging to the United States, that Congress have supreme power in the government of them, depending on the exercise of their sound discretion. That discretion has hitherto been exercised in wisdom and good faith, and with anxious regard for the security of the rights and privileges of the inhabitants, as defined and declared in the ordnance of July, 1787, and in the Constitution of the United States. "All admit," said Chief Justice Marshall (4 Wheaton, 422), "the constitutionality of a Territorial government."

The Supreme Court of the United States has said, Mr. Justice Bradley speaking for the court, in the case of the Late Corporation of Latter-Day Saints vs. United States (136 U. S., 1):

The power of Congress over the Territories of the United States is general and plenary, arising from and incidental to the right to acquire the territory itself, and from the power given by the Constitution to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. It would be absurd to hold that the United States has power to acquire territory and no power to govern it when acquired. The power to acquire territory other than the territory northwest of the Ohio River (which belonged to the United States at the adoption of the Constitution) is derived from the treaty-making power and the power to declare and carry on war. The incidents of these powers are those of national sovereignty and belong to all independent governments. The power to make acquisitions of territory by conquest, by treaty, and by cession is an incident of national sovereignty.

The Territory of Louisiana, when acquired from France, and the Territories west of the Rocky Mountains, when acquired from Mexico, became the absolute property and domain of the United States, subject to such conditions as the Government, in its diplomatic negotiations, had seen fit to accept relating to the rights of the people then inhabiting those Territories. Having rightfully acquired said Territories, the United States Government was the only one which could impose laws upon them, and its sovereignty over them was complete. No State of the Union had any such right of sovereignty over them; no other country or government had any such right. These propositions are so elementary and so necessarily follow from the condition of things arising upon the acquisition of new territory that they need no argument to support them. They are self-evident.

Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of the American and Ohio Insurance Companies vs. 356 Bales of Cotton (26 U. S., 1 Pet., 511, 542), well said: "Perhaps the power of governing a Territory belonging to the United States, which has not, by becoming a State, acquired the means of self-government, may result necessarily from the facts that it is not within the jurisdiction of any particular State, and is within the power and jurisdiction of the United States. The right to govern may be the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire territory. Whichever may be the source whence the power is derived, the possession of it is unquestioned."

And Mr. Justice Nelson, delivering the opinion of the court in Benner vs. Porter (50 U. S., 9 How., 235, 242), speaking of the Territorial governments established by Congress, says: "They are legislative governments, and their courts legislative courts, Congress, in the exercise of its powers in the organization and government of the Territories, combining the powers of both the Federal and State authorities."

Chief Justice Waite, in the case of First National Bank vs. Yankton County (101 U. S., 129, 133), said: "In the organic act of Dakota there was not an express reservation of power in Congress to amend the acts of the Territorial legislature, nor was it necessary. Such a power is an incident of sovereignty, and continues until granted away. Congress may not only abrogate laws of the Territorial legislatures, but it may itself legislate directly for the local government. It may make a void act of the Territorial legislature valid, and a valid act void. In other words, it has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the Territories and all the departments of the Territorial governments. It may do for the Territories what the people, under the Constitution of the United States, may do for the States."

In a still more recent case, and one relating to the legislation of Congress over the Territory of Utah itself, Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S., 15, 44), Mr. Justice Matthews said: "The counsel for the appellants in argument seemed to question the constitutional power of Congress to pass the act of March 22, 1882, so far as it abridges the rights of electors in the Territory under previous laws. But that question is, we think, no longer open to discussion. It has passed beyond the stage of controversy into final judgment. The people of the United States, as sovereign owners of the National Territories, have supreme power over them and their inhabitants. In the exercise of this sovereign dominion they are represented by the Government of the United States, to whom all the powers of government over that subject have been delegated, subject only to such restrictions as are expressed in the Constitution or are necessarily implied in its terms."

The Supreme Court say, in Murphy vs. Ramsey (114 U. S.):

The people of the United States, as sovereign owners of the National Territories, have supreme power over them and their inhabitants. In the exercise of this sovereign dominion they are represented by the Government of the United States, to whom all the powers of government over that subject have been delegated, subject only to such restrictions as are expressed in the Constitution or are necessarily implied in its terms or in the purposes and objects of the power itself; for it may well be admitted in respect to this, as to every power of society over its members, that it is not absolute and unlimited. But in ordaining government for the Territories and the people who inhabit them, all the discretion which belongs to legislative power is vested in Congress; and that extends, beyond all controversy, to determining by law from time to time the form of the local government in a particular Territory and the qualifications of those who shall administer it.

It rests with Congress to say whether, in a given case, any of the people, resident in the Territory, shall participate in the election of its officers or the making of its laws; and it may, therefore, take from them any right of suffrage it may previously have conferred, or at any time modify or abridge it, as it may deem expedient. The right of local self-government, as known to our system as a constitutional franchise, belongs, under the Constitution, to the States, and to the people thereof, by whom that Constitution was ordained, and to whom by its terms all power not conferred by it upon the Government of the United States was expressly reserved. The personal and civil rights of the inhabitants of the Territories are secured to them, as to other citizens, by the principles of constitutional liberty which restrain all the agencies of government, State and national; their political rights are franchises which they hold as privileges in the legislative discretion of the Congress of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, can territory belonging to the United States, the property of the United States, subject to such regulation and government as may be deemed needful, be an integral part of the United States, with the Constitution of its own force extending over it and making of its inhabitants citizens because a part of the United States? I beg leave to suggest to our friends on the other side that they are skating on thin ice when they insist, in our present environment, that by the acquisition of territories under the treaty of Paris they became parts of the United States, their inhabitants became citizens of the United States, and the Constitution ex proprio vigore is over the Philippines and Puerto Rico.

Territory which never "belonged" to the United States could not well ever become a part of the United States. If territory belonging to the United States ceases to be the property of the United States and becomes a part of the United States with the Constitution over it by its own force, where is to be found the power to dispose of it, and where will Senators find the power to carry out, if Congress should adopt it, the policy of establishing a stable government in the Philippines and ceding the sovereignty to that people?

If it becomes an integral part of the United States, and if, as such, the Constitution ex proprio vigore embraces it, what power is to be found for withdrawing the Constitution from it and from its inhabitants? The Constitution is above statute, and where it goes of its own force it is quite difficult for me to see how any statute can withdraw it in any event.

If it is property belonging to the United States and provisions of the Constitution are extended over it by statute, the power which put it there by statute as a statute can take it from there. But if the Constitution goes there automatically, once there it is always there; the flag follows it, and in the sense in which the Senator speaks of it, it follows the flag. But it is not easy to discover after territory has become a part of the United States, has ceased to be the property of the United States, to belong to the United States, the Constitution has irrevocably gone over it of its own force, making citizens of its inhabitants, where Congress obtains the power to dispose of it—to cede it to Great Britain or to Russia.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator whether Congress has power now to dispose of the Gadsden purchase—I mean, to cede it back to Mexico?

Mr. SPOONER. It is a part of Arizona. I think so.

Mr. PETTUS. Would it have power to cede Arizona?

Mr. SPOONER. I should say it might.

Mr. PETTUS. Is not the Constitution there?

Mr. SPOONER. It can not cede Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly not. It can not cede Alabama. Even the wildest Republican theorist has never suggested such an idea as that.

Mr. SPOONER. No; we could not part with Alabama. We would not cede it if we could.

Mr. PETTUS. My question is, Does Congress not have the power to cede New Mexico back to the State of Mexico?

Mr. SPOONER. I think so.

Mr. PETTUS. The Constitution is there?

Mr. SPOONER. The Constitution is there by statute. The Constitution is there, Mr. President, only because Congress passed an act adopting as an act certain portions of the Constitution in New Mexico. But if the Constitution went there of its own force, if New Mexico had ceased to belong to the United States, if it had become a part of the United States itself, and its people were all citizens by virtue of the Constitution itself, I know of nothing in the Constitution which would empower Congress to cede it. There is something more than what is merely academic in the distinction between territory belonging to the United States and territory a part of the United States itself.

Now, Mr. President, I leave this, imperfectly presented, with regret, for to me it is a great principle, essential to the interests of our people, and I am not willing to abate or consent to a diminution of the power of government or disposition conferred by the Territorial clause of the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is very hard not to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. It is evidently hard for the Senator not to interrupt anyone. [Laughter.] Now, I take up the case of Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton), and I shall have finished, although imperfectly in every way, the discussion which I have been making, or attempting to make.

This case, Mr. President, is one largely relied upon by the Senators on the other side as establishing the proposition that territory acquired by the United States becomes by force of the Constitution a part of it, and that the Constitution, ex proprio vigore, extends over it.

I will not quibble about words. Territory belonging to the United States, as I think Puerto Rico and the Philippine Archipelago do, become a part of the United States in the international sense, while not being at all a part of the United States in the constitutional sense.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] challenged Senators here the other day to give some reason why a portion of this decision is obiter.

The Chief Justice gives two conclusive answers to the question, thus:

> First. This case presents to the consideration of the court a single question. It is this: Has Congress a right to impose a direct tax on the District of Columbia?
> Second. If the general language of the Constitution should be confined to the States, still the sixteenth paragraph of the eighth section gives to Congress the power of exercising "exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever within this District."

The last quotation shows that all the reasoning which preceded the last sentence was absolutely unnecessary to the decision of the case. If any case in itself ever afforded stronger evidence of obiter dicta I have not discovered it.

That was the question and the only question involved in the case; but it is a curious decision in some respects. Under that clause, section 8, Article I, that "the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but such duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," the court decide, or arguendo say, that the power to levy the taxes mentioned there is without limitation——

Mr. MASON. As to place.

Mr. SPOONER. As to place; that wherever the Federal jurisdiction goes the power exists to levy any tax authorized by that provision of the Constitution. The court say, in addition, that when the power is exercised it must be exercised in harmony, if it is duties, imposts, and excises, with the rule of uniformity. If it is a direct tax, it must be apportioned upon the basis of the census provided for by the Constitution.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the power given to Congress by section 8 of Article I, "to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," is coextensive with the sovereignty of the United States.

Although I appreciate the audacity which is involved in a challenge by anyone of the correctness of the reasoning of the great Chief Justice Marshall, I have not been able to persuade myself that the argument by which he sustained, under section 8, the power to levy a direct tax upon the District of Columbia is a sound one. The court held that Congress might levy a direct tax upon the States, which, of course, is true, and that to levy a direct tax upon the States, they must apportion it according to the census, in order to its validity, which, of course, is true.

No one would dispute that Congress could not omit one State from the apportionment of a direct tax without destroying its validity. The Chief Justice held also that Congress had the power to levy a direct tax upon the Territories, although it was not essential to the validity of a direct tax upon the States that one should be levied upon the Territories. This is not quite easy for me to understand if, under section 8, the Territories are a part of the United States in the constitutional sense. Subdivision 4 of section 9 provides:

> No capitation, or other direct, tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

This is very clear. Nothing, however, is clearer in the Constitution than that the "census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken" is confined absolutely to States and does not extend at all to Territories.

Subdivision 3 of section 2 of Article I provides that—

> Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers. * * * The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

It will hardly be contended that this compulsory enumeration or census is not limited to the States. The object of it is twofold.

First. To furnish a basis for apportionment of Representatives in Congress. They come only from the States; the Territories have none; under the Constitution they can have none. Therefore, so far as the principle of compulsory census refers to obtaining a basis for apportioning Representatives, it can only refer to an enumeration in the States.

Second. To afford a basis for apportionment of direct taxes. This is the same census, and a direct tax under the Constitution "shall be apportioned among the several States." It is hardly to be supposed that the framers of the Constitution intended, when they provided that an enumeration should be made within three years after the first Congress and within every subsequent term of ten years thereafter, upon which should be based the apportionment of Representatives and direct taxes, that the enumeration for apportioning Representatives should be one thing and that for the apportionment of the direct tax should be another.

It is very clear that the Constitution requires an enumeration every ten years in the States. It is equally clear to me that it requires no enumeration at all in the Territories. Congress has the power, of course, to include the Territories, rather in the sense of taking an account of stock voluntarily, but not at all in obedience to a constitutional mandate.

I venture the suggestion that, all things considered, it was the purpose of the framers of the Constitution that direct taxes, as such, should be levied and apportioned only where the Constitution required the periodical census or enumeration to be taken, and that the power to tax the District of Columbia, as the great Chief Justice suggested, was adequate under the clause that gave Congress exclusive legislative power over that District. And I think he might have added that, as to other Territories, the power to tax is conferred by the Territorial clause, subdivision 5 of Article IV.

In this connection I may be permitted to say that the acts levying direct taxes in the early history of the country certainly indicates that the understanding upon the part of Congress was that the "United States" was constituted of the States and did not include the Territories.

The first section of the act approved August 2, 1813, enacts—

> That a direct tax of $3,000,000 shall be, and is hereby, laid upon the United States and apportioned to the States, respectively, in the manner following.

This apportionment included no Territory. The act approved March 5, 1816, section 2, enacts—

> That a direct tax of $3,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, laid upon the United States, etc.

By a separate section a direct tax was levied upon the District of Columbia, and it ought not to escape attention, and it could hardly be justified except under the clause giving Congress exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, that, while all the States were included in this levy and apportionment for a direct tax, none of the Territories were except the District of Columbia.

Of course it is clear that you can not levy a direct tax upon one State and not upon another; and if Territories are a part of the United States, as States are, it would be quite difficult to understand how you could levy a direct tax upon the States and one Territory and not upon the other Territories equally a part of the United States. But so it was.

It is proper that I should call the attention of my colleagues to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Cherokee Tobacco vs. The United States (11 Wallace, 616). It is admitted, I think, that an excise tax or duty can not be levied in one State and not in all States upon the same article and at the same rate.

If the Territories are, under Loughborough vs. Blake, for taxation purposes a part of the United States, it would seem to follow that Congress can not levy an excise tax in one Territory and not in all Territories just as in the States. Yet in the Cherokee Tobacco case, involving the validity of the internal-revenue act of 1868, section 107 of which exempted the Indian Territory from the internal-revenue taxes imposed by that act (except those which were imposed upon distilled spirits, fermented liquors, tobacco, snuff, and cigars), the Supreme Court sustained the tax.

It can hardly be doubted that Congress might, under the decision, have exempted the Indian Territory altogether, and of course if it could exempt the Indian Territory it could exempt other Territories. Yet it seems to be true that Congress can levy upon one Territory a tax for national purposes and leave the rest of the Territories untaxed for national purposes.

That could hardly be true if the Territories are, under section 8, a part of the United States, so as to require duties, imposts, and excises to be uniform. It would hardly seem to be a mere matter of rate. I have not thought that whisky could be taxed in Pennsylvania and New York and not taxed in Kentucky, or be taxed at $1.10 per gallon in Maryland and Kentucky and not taxed at all in Pennsylvania and New York.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It exempted all the Territories.

Mr. SPOONER. It exempted all the Territories except from the whisky tax and the tobacco tax. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Cherokee tobacco case, sustained the validity of the act. So in the exercise of this taxation, in so far as the Territories are concerned, Congress may do what it chooses, and they are not a part of the United States in the sense that Congress must tax all alike by a uniform rule.

But, Mr. President, Congress may levy a direct tax on one Territory and not on others. It may levy a tax for national purposes in one Territory and not in others. It may levy one sort of a tax in one Territory and a different tax in another. Congress may levy an income tax in a Territory for certain purposes.

Mr. BACON. For the purposes of that Territory.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, Mr. President, the imposition provided by this bill is to my mind a valid one, even if we take Loughborough against Blake not only as correctly decided but as correctly reasoned. Why? Loughborough against Blake is a decision under Article VIII, known as the taxing clause of the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises.

What for? For national purposes—to pay the debts of the United States, to provide for the common defense, the building of fortifications, the construction of ships, the maintenance and organization of armies, and the general welfare of the United States. But such duties, imposts, and excises levied for that national purpose must be uniform "throughout the United States."

That is not this case, Mr. President. The tax imposed by this bill, measured by 15 per cent of the rates imposed by the Dingley law, so called, is not levied, in my judgment, under section 8 of the Constitution at all, because it is not levied for national purposes. It is levied for a local purpose, and a local purpose only.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. In a moment. It is levied for a local purpose only. We have abundant power, under the clause of the Constitution to make needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States, to levy this tax, and we levy it for the benefit of Puerto Rico. In levying it we are acting, as the Supreme Court of the United States have often said, as a local legislature for Puerto Rico. We are levying it as we could give to the local legislature of Puerto Rico the power to levy it. Not one dollar of it is to go into the Treasury of the United States to be used by the United States, to pay the debts of the United States, to provide for the common defense of the United States, or to promote, in a large sense, the national welfare of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me now?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. I understand the proposition of the Senator to be that this 15 per cent of the Dingley rate (we will call it 15 per cent for short) upon all goods coming from Puerto Rico to the United States, is a legitimate tariff law, because it is not levied for national purposes; that as the law provides that this money when collected shall be devoted to the uses of Puerto Rico, it is not for a national purpose, and therefore it does not fall within the prohibition of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution.

Now, the question I wish to submit to the learned Senator is this: According to the statement of the Senator, made to-day, the Constitution of the United States exists in Arizona and New Mexico by reason of the statutory provision of the United States Congress. If it is a statutory provision, of course it is one liable to repeal, and therefore any tariff duty which we might levy could not be pronounced to be unconstitutional, because it would simply be to that extent the repeal of a statutory law.

That being the case, the question I desire to propound to the Senator is this: Does the Senator hold that if we pass a law that all goods exported from the Territory of New Mexico into any part of the United States should be subject to a tariff duty of 12 per cent of the Dingley law, it would be a constitutional law which could be enforced by the courts, if we went further and said that all the moneys thus collected should be paid into the treasury of the Territory and devoted to uses for the benefit of the Territory?

Mr. SPOONER. In view of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, I will answer the Senator's question, yes.

Mr. BACON. To do that?

Mr. SPOONER. I say yes, in my opinion.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is obliged to say "yes."

Mr. SPOONER. I do not say so because I am obliged to do so.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I mean the Senator is logically obliged to say so.

Mr. SPOONER. I say yes, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the word "exports," as used in the Constitution, applies only to articles exported from the United States to a foreign country.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of exports.

Mr. SPOONER. What are you speaking of?

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of a tariff duty on articles imported into the United States, if you please, from New Mexico, upon which we would levy a tax of 15 per cent of the Dingley law, upon all the copper, for instance, brought from New Mexico—if there were any such tariff, for I am just using this as an illustration—into the United States. Could we levy a tariff duty upon any product of New Mexico brought into the United States, if at the same time we stated that all the money raised from such tariff duty should be paid into the treasury of the Territory?

Mr. SPOONER. My proposition is that, acting as the legislature for a Territory, we may tax any product of that Territory for the Territory; for its support; for the support of its government.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I am not speaking of a direct tax. I am asking the question whether or not the imposition of a tariff duty upon the products of New Mexico brought into the United States would be a violation of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, and if that could be justified by the further provision that all the money collected under such tariff duty should go into the treasury of New Mexico? If it is not true in the case of New Mexico, it is not true in the case of Puerto Rico.

Mr. SPOONER. I care not what you call it. You may call it "a tariff," or you may call it "a tax." A tax is what it is. The Supreme Court has decided that it is a tax upon the article, and not upon the right to bring it in or the right to take it out. I contend that as Congress, under the power given to make all needful rules and regulations for Territories, legislating solely for a Territorial and not for a national purpose, we are unrestricted by constitutional limitations as to the object of the tax or the amount of the tax.

I think a clear distinction is to be drawn between the exercise by Congress of the power under section 8 to levy taxes, duties, imposts, and excises for national purposes, and the power of Congress under the Territorial clause of the Constitution to levy taxes by whatever name you call them purely for the local purposes of the Territory.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator will pardon me, I want to get his position, if I can.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator has not yet gotten it, I do not know how I can give it to him, and I have certainly been unfortunate in expressing myself.

Mr. MASON. It may be a misfortune on the part of the Senator, or possibly on mine. Will the Senator tell me where there is in the Constitution power to raise any money from impost duties, save for national purposes, except in the section the Senator has just quoted—that is, section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, which provides that impost duties may be laid "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States?"

The other section the Senator quoted provides that a State may levy an impost duty, but that, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, means an import from some foreign country; and that same section provides that, after the State has retained the expense of its inspection laws, every dollar of the net produce—those are the words used—is turned into the Treasury of the United States. In other words, I ask the Senator to show some place in the Constitution where the power is given to levy an impost duty except for governmental purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. Why, Mr. President, what is an impost duty as such? It is defined by the Supreme Court of the United States. If you levy it for national purposes, you are subject to the rule of uniformity. The purpose for which it is laid under section 8 is clearly indicated in the section itself; it is "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

We can not levy any duty—and I am not disputing now that the decision in Loughborough vs. Blake in all it says is correct—you can not levy a tax; you can not levy a duty, an impost, an excise, the proceeds of which are to go into the Treasury of the United States, to be used in paying the debts of the United States, in maintaining the armies of the United States, in promoting the general welfare of the United States, except by following the rule of apportionment or the rule of uniformity; but Congress finds its power to levy taxes in the Territories for the support of the Territories not from that clause of the Constitution, because if that were the only clause conferring the power to tax for the Territories you could not tax for the Territories at all; you would have to tax and take the proceeds of the tax into the Treasury of the United States for general purposes, and we could not tax in a Territory with reference to its needs unless we taxed in the same way in all the Territories in disregard of their "needs."

We did not levy the tax in Alaska—referred to in the very able speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] on Saturday—under this clause of the Constitution. We levied it under that great and general clause of the Constitution which gives us the power, without limit, to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States. We can levy a tax, but we are not obliged to levy the same tax.

Mr. MASON. Do you mean to say you can make a law that is in violation of the limitations of the Constitution?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, I never have contended yet that Congress could constitutionally pass an unconstitutional act. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. You know the Constitution says all impost duties must be equal.

Mr. SPOONER. This is not an impost duty for two reasons; nor an export duty for two reasons; nor is it exacted for a national purpose under Article VIII of the Constitution. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided more than once, and it is the settled law, that exports and imports within the meaning of the Constitution are articles brought from a foreign country into the United States or taken from the United States to a foreign country. (Woodruff vs. Parham, 8 Wallace, 123; Coe vs. Errol, 116 U. S., 517.)

Mr. President, when this bill shall have passed, if it is passed, the ports of Puerto Rico will cease to be foreign ports under the decision of the Supreme Court in Fleming vs. Page. Why? Because we shall have established there taxation—taxation and collection for national purposes—we will throw the Dingley law around Puerto Rico, and collect duties just as they are collected at the port of New York for national purposes.

We will grant clearance papers to vessels clearing from the ports of Puerto Rico and coming to the United States, signed by officers of the United States acting under the authority of Congress. We will nationalize their ships and admit them to the coasting trade of the United States; and under the authorities they will cease, therefore, to be "foreign ports;" from the standpoint of our revenue laws (Fleming vs. Page, supra), they will be domestic ports of an island belonging to the United States; and articles going from the United States to Puerto Rico and coming from Puerto Rico to the United States will not be exports or imports within that language of the Constitution, because they neither come from nor go to a foreign country or a foreign port within the meaning of our revenue laws.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for again interrupting him; but I am anxious to know if I correctly understood him as to the matter we had under discussion a moment ago.

Mr. SPOONER. I am very unfortunate if I did not make myself understood, and if the Senator will permit me, I would rather go on.

Mr. BACON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I have never refused to yield to him under any circumstances.

Mr. SPOONER. That is true. Nor have I to him. I withdraw my remark, and beg his pardon.

Mr. BACON. I have always submitted to interruption by the Senator, knowing that he was as well capable, if not more capable, to embarrass me by a question than any other Senator in the Chamber. I simply desire to know, without the question being mixed up with any argument relative to the power of taxation, whether I understand the Senator correctly to say that, under his view of the law and as a logical conclusion of the propositions which he has submitted here to-day, it is within the power of the United States Congress to pass a law levying a duty to be collected from all articles coming from a Territory into the United States if the same law provides that the money thus collected shall go into the treasury of the Territory?

Mr. SPOONER. If I have not made my position clear to the Senator, I am unable to do so.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, while he spoke of the power of taxation——

Mr. SPOONER. This is the power of taxation.

Mr. BACON. Do I understand the Senator to say "yes" to my question?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator kindly state the proposition again, as my attention was diverted for a moment?

Mr. BACON. The question is this: Whether I correctly understand the Senator to say that the Congress of the United States can pass a law imposing duties to be collected upon articles coming from New Mexico, for instance, into the United States, provided the duties are not levied for a national purpose, and provided further that the purpose is expressly stated to be for the benefit of the Territory and to go into the treasury of the Territory?

Mr. SPOONER. I think so; yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. The only reason why you can not tax an article going from State to State is because of the prohibition of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution; but Congress is not, so far as the Territories are concerned, restricted much, if at all, in that respect.

The commerce clause of the Constitution gives Congress power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes," as decided by Judge Morrow, whom I know to be an able lawyer, in Endleman vs. United States (86 Fed. R., 456). The power of Congress as to interstate-commerce regulations in a Territory is altogether different in many ways, so far as limitations are concerned, from the power of Congress in regulating commerce among the States. In the case of Gibbons vs. District of Columbia (116 U. S., 404), to illustrate what I mean, referring to the case of Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheat., 317), the court says:

> The point there decided was that an act of Congress laying a direct tax throughout the United States in proportion to the census directed to be taken by the Constitution might comprehend the District of Columbia; and the power of Congress, legislating as a local legislature for the District, to levy taxes for District purposes only in like manner as the legislature of a State may tax the people of a State for State purposes was expressly admitted and has never since been doubted. (Welch vs. Cook, 97 U. S., 541; Mattingly vs. District of Columbia, 97 U. S., 687.)

So I say, Mr. President, that we levy this tax for Puerto Rico, not for the United States.

Now, what is the tax? It is a tax on an article. An article going from the United States into Puerto Rico may be taxed, may it not, for the benefit of Puerto Rico? You may call it an import tax over there, if you choose. The court has stated that it was a tax upon the article, not upon the right to enter; a tax upon an article coming from Puerto Rico to the United States.

You may call it an export tax if you choose, although it is not one within the meaning of the Constitution, for it is not a foreign port. It is a tax upon the article; we collect it for Puerto Rico, and the proceeds of the tax each way are not to go into the Treasury of the United States for national purposes, but are to go to all intents and purposes into the treasury of Puerto Rico for local purposes. It is to be expended solely for that local government. But, Mr. President, I must leave this branch of the subject.

Now, Mr. President, as to this bill—and I can not proceed to even a brief discussion of it without paying my tribute of respectful admiration to the consummate ability, patience, tact, and legislative skill with which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has conducted it upon its long and sometimes, it seemed, perilous journey.

He has been unremitting in his labor, taking no thought of his own comfort, listening to suggestions from every one, and adopting them when they commended themselves to his judgment, in making this bill what he wished it to be, what I wish it to be, and what we all wish it to be—not only a just but a generous bill to the people of Puerto Rico.

I would have been glad personally if we might have deferred for the time being the civil-government bill; I would have been glad if we could have sent a committee there to investigate conditions thoroughly, when it would have been possible to legislate with fuller information as to the interests of nine hundred and sixty thousand or a million people, strangers to us, of whose customs and conditions we know comparatively little. But the consensus of opinion in the Senate has been that at the earliest day there should be a civil-government bill of some sort enacted for Puerto Rico, and to that I yield.

The features of the civil-government provisions in the main meet my approval. I have not been in favor of a clause admitting that people at this time to the citizenship of the United States, preferring to leave the status as it was left by the treaty, and as, I think, the treaty-making power was perfectly competent to leave it. I am not ready, until we have looked further—for there is no haste about it—to admit into our citizenship forever 960,000 people, over 800,000 of whom have not the intelligence which would fit them for citizenship. Nothing shall hurry me upon a proposition of this nature where reasonable delay harms no one. In all such matters there is more danger of undue haste than otherwise.

They know nothing of us; they know nothing of our ways; they know nothing of our system, nothing of our institutions. They have never known anything of good government; they have lived under a tyranny; they have been spoliated and oppressed; and we should, it seems to me, keeping in mind the permanent interest of our own country, make haste slowly in changing the status in that respect of that people.

I have not been willing, either, Mr. President, to vote to give them a Delegate in Congress. I shall only take a moment to say why. These are great propositions before us. I would not vote to give Hawaii a Delegate in Congress. There is no difference between a Delegate in Congress and a member except in the matter of a vote. It has always been considered a pledge of statehood. No Congress gives a Delegate to a people except upon the theory that the time is to come when they shall be admitted to statehood and entitled to participate as one of the States of the Union.

I know not how time may change my own view upon that subject, but I am frank to say, with a heart full of kindness for that people, I am not yet ready, nor are we called upon now, to give that quasi pledge of statehood, or to imply that they will ever reach a condition where it shall be either for their interests, or certainly for ours, to let them become one of the members of this Union.

I may be too conservative, Mr. President, but be that as it may, I desire, above all things, as I now see it, that the Union shall be limited to States composed of our own people, native and naturalized, a part of us in heart and thought, in loyalty to our institutions, in appreciation of the blessings of this Government and love of our flag, lying between the oceans on this continent. Possibly some day conditions may be changed, and it may be the judgment and sentiment of our people that my vision in this day is too narrow.

It will be time enough to contemplate this radical change in our situation when the people on their sober second thought shall so instruct their representatives. I am not so instructed; and, following my own best judgment, I will not vote to give Puerto Rico at this time a Delegate in Congress. I willingly vote for the proposition in this bill to give them, at the expense of the United States, a commissioner, whose status shall enable him to represent their necessities and their wants to the Congress.

This is a temporary proposition as to Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico is in a transition state, having "just pushed off from one shore and not yet landed on the other." There is something pathetic about the island; there is something pathetic about the people. Under all the tyranny of Spain, I believe, they never rebelled; they earned the name of the "Ever Faithful Isle."

They are suffering not only from the paralysis which followed the withdrawal of the Spanish, and the imposition of the tariff of Spain and Cuba upon Puerto Rican products, but they are suffering from a hurricane and the devastation which it wrought. Is there a man in either House of Congress who is willing to treat that people otherwise than with generosity? We are not content simply giving them justice; we wish to be and we will be generous, and we are, by this bill, surely generous.

The President in his message to Congress recommended that we give to that island free trade, and he included that with many other recommendations. A bill was introduced into the House giving to that island free trade. The Senator from Ohio introduced a bill giving to that island free trade; and that bill has been offered by my friend from Georgia, I believe, as a substitute for the pending bill. Mr. President, in my judgment, nothing more brutal to Puerto Rico could be devised by the Congress of the United States than that so-called "free-trade" bill.

I see in the newspapers every day the command, "Treat Puerto Rico as we treat our own Territories." We are treating Puerto Rico better than we ever treated our own Territories, Mr. President. In our own Territories for many years past we have put in force our internal-revenue laws; we have put in force our war tax. What sort of kindness would it be to an impoverished and distressed people to put in force in Puerto Rico the internal-revenue laws in force in New York.

As the Senator from Ohio has said, as the gentleman who introduced the bill into the House has said, as the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana on the committee have so eloquently and well said, when they came to investigate the whole subject they found beyond question that the people of Puerto Rico were so impoverished that they could not submit to a system of direct or local taxation which would be of any value in raising money with which to support their government. Think about it! An internal-revenue tax in Puerto Rico of $1.10 a gallon on rum.

They raise about 1,500,000 gallons of rum a year. It is the Puerto Rican drink. Many people think that no one should use alcohol. Perhaps that is true, or it may not be, but it is the Puerto Rican beverage, just as beer is the beverage of the German. It is sold over there for 30 cents, or thereabout, a gallon. The people use it all over the island; they have always used it.

Now, for us to step in there with our internal-revenue law, which the Senator's substitute provides for and which the free-trade bill in both Houses provided for, and levy a tax of $1.10 a gallon upon it would be to accomplish two purposes: First, it would be to fail utterly in raising revenue under it, and, second, it would be to alienate that people at the beginning from us. There is no better or surer way to alienate a people than to step between them—especially if you are a new ruler, a stranger—and the established habits and customs of themselves and their ancestors. You might as well attempt to conciliate and make friends of the Italian peasants by depriving them of their chianti or of the German by depriving him of his national beverage.

"Habits, soft and pliant at first, are like some coral stones, which are easily cut when first quarried, but soon become hard as adamant."

Take the matter of tobacco. The Spaniards are smokers. Many people think tobacco is poison, and I think so myself; but those of us who have used it know how strong a hold it has upon those who learn to love it. "Thy clouds all other clouds dispel, and lap me in delight!" The prisoner must have it oftentimes to avert insanity. The soldier must have it in the loneliness of the picket line or while waiting for the bugle to sound the onset. The Puerto Rican must have it. You levy a tax of $3 a thousand upon cigars in Puerto Rico, and levy almost a prohibitive tax upon cigarettes, partly imposed for revenue and partly imposed for a better reason than for revenue, and what is the effect upon the people of Puerto Rico—not upon the well-to-do of Puerto Rico, but upon the people of Puerto Rico?

In 3,000 little shops General Davis testifies, they sell a little rum, a little tobacco, and they sell cigarettes which they roll themselves. You put a dealers' license tax upon them and you drive every one of them not only out of business but out of home to starve, unless we appropriate the money to feed them. That is treating Puerto Rico as we treat our own people in our own Territories. It is not only not generosity, Mr. President, but it is not justice. I have the evidence of General Davis and others that they can not submit to internal revenue, but I can not stop to present it. The evidence is overwhelming and incontrovertible. Even this morning there comes from him the following:

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO, March 31, 1900

In an interview to-day with the Associated Press correspondent, Governor-General Davis said:

"I have not felt it proper for me to discuss Congressional matters, filling, as I do, an executive position. I have expressed my views fully, however, on Puerto Rico's needs, and I might say, if Congress should adopt free trade, the receipts of the custom-houses would naturally cease. One million five hundred thousand dollars has been collected during the fiscal year, and with free trade this will fall off. What, then, will run the island?

"Although I have received no official advices regarding an appropriation, I understand through the newspapers that an appropriation was decided upon, and I infer that this appropriation will be spent on insular government expenses. If free trade is adopted, I can not see how the necessary funds for conducting the affairs of the island are to be raised by myself or those who succeed me.

"Two million dollars are the present expenses, and this amount will be needed annually. There is only a small revenue incoming from stamps, liquors, tobacco, and mercantile licenses, and it is impossible to collect taxes because of the conditions."

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me right there?

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. BACON. Just to read what some of the Puerto Ricans themselves say on that subject?

Mr. SPOONER. I know what some of the Puerto Ricans say about it.

Mr. BACON. I mean representative Puerto Ricans.

Mr. SPOONER. But they are not the Puerto Ricans who would suffer from it.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to read it?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; but I should like to finish, for I have been delayed. I beg the Senator's pardon for not yielding to him at this point.

Mr. BACON. I shall not trespass upon the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, you may take the other taxes, the tax on medicines, and all that, and that is not all there is to it either. That bill provides that this tax upon the people of Puerto Rico shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States just as our internal-revenue taxes collected from our Territories and our States are paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SPOONER. Am I? The House bill so provided.

Mr. BACON. I do not know about the House bill. The Senator is mistaken about the bill framed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which I have offered as a substitute. The bill is a very much better bill than the one now pending.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not help the question so far as internal revenue is concerned, because you simply would not get any revenue from it.

General Davis testified that the trifling tax of 11 cents a gallon on rum and a small tax on some other articles he names, which I have forgotten, he found the utmost difficulty in collecting. He said 100,000 families in Puerto Rico do not have $5 per family—and yet you propose to levy an internal-revenue tax like ours upon that impoverished and distressed people.

Mr. President, we could not very well, as a matter of public policy, undertake to appropriate from our own Treasury, indefinitely, the money with which to support that government and that people. It is not a wise way either for us or for them to start them upon the experiment of American local government. We have appropriated $2,000,000, collected from duties upon imports from Puerto Rico and paid into our Treasury. We did not appropriate that, Mr. President, because we had wrongfully collected it; we appropriated the money of our own people out of the generosity of our people, to relieve those who have so suddenly come under our control and under our protection.

That is, under the amended bill, to be used not simply for the construction of roads, not simply to promote education, not simply to help in the construction of waterworks and to supply modern sanitary methods to Puerto Rico to promote the health of that people, but it is to be used in relieving cases of individual distress, and it is be used in the purchase of seeds for the farmers; it is to be used in enabling them to rehabilitate themselves and their agriculture, and to help them to recover as quickly as may be from the terrible devastation and loss caused by the hurricane.

What is this duty? It was considered that the best way to raise money for Puerto Rico would be to levy this tax for them. It is indirect—the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] called it tribute. Tribute levied upon whom? Tribute paid to whom? Tribute collected for whom? It is a tribute, Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], collected from a few, collected from the rich, to be paid for the benefit of the many in the establishment and support of local government. Is not that right?

The sugar men pay 30 cents a day to the poor creatures who work for them all the day long under that semitropical sun in the cane fields. Should not they pay something in this transition period; should they not pay something out of their profits upon that product in order to support that people in the government which we are proposing by this bill to give them? And it is a tax, every dollar of which goes to them and not one penny of which comes to us. Call that tribute!

Mr. BACON. Whom does it come out of?

Mr. SPOONER. It comes out of the sugar trust and their brokers, who are suing the Government to-day, as stated by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], for about $2,000,000, was it not?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Eighteen hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator take the position that the tax will not fall upon every laborer on that island engaged in the production of sugar?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course it will not.

Mr. BACON. I can not answer the Senator in an interruption, but when I have the opportunity I will demonstrate to the contrary.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the old doctrine. That is what every man who wants free trade, not simply with Puerto Rico but with the whole world, says.

Mr. BACON. On the contrary, as a general proposition, it is the position taken by protectionists that the producer is the man who pays the tariff, not the consumer. I showed the other day, and I can show it more plainly and elaborately, that in this case it necessarily comes out of the producer.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose the producer does pay it. Who is the producer?

Mr. BACON. Every man engaged in the production of sugar.

Mr. SPOONER. There are not many engaged in the production of it.

Mr. BACON. What?

Mr. SPOONER. The owners of the plantations.

Mr. BACON. Every man engaged in producing sugar is engaged in it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will venture to say that the Senator from New York is right, that if you further enrich the men who bought up the sugar and tobacco by bringing it into this country free, you will not add a penny to the price of labor among the men who work in the cane fields in its production.

People may talk about a lobby. There has been a lobby here—there has been a lobby here from the beginning. It has not been a lobby representing the poor men and women and children of Puerto Rico. It has been a lobby of men controlling this product of sugar, who have made money and who have been here representing their own pockets, and nothing else.

Mr. BACON. Oxnard.

Mr. SPOONER. Oxnard? Not at all.

Mr. BACON. He appeared before the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose he did appear before the committee. Did the committee pay any attention to him?

Mr. BACON. They have done exactly what he demanded should be done.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know what the Senator may think, but I want to say this: I impute to the Senator the loftiest purpose, but the suggestion that the Congress of the United States, a majority of the other House and of this, could be influenced to do injustice to Puerto Rico or in legislation of this character by Oxnard, by some protected interest, is a libel upon our institutions which ought not to be uttered here, and ought not to gain lodgment anywhere.

If a majority of both Houses of Congress—and this talk is bandied around when you are in the majority and when we are, as to great matters of legislation even involving humanity—are influenced in an ulterior and subtle way, although not in a corrupt way—if that be true, this Government is a failure. The men who are in favor of this bill, the men who reported this bill, were not influenced by Mr. Oxnard. The men who are advocating the passage of this bill are not advocating it on account of Mr. Oxnard. This is not a protective duty. Only 57,000 tons of sugar or 60,000 tons come from Puerto Rico into the United States. It is a bagatelle compared with our annual consumption of sugar.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, of course I do not desire to get into any controversy on the subject, but as he has very caustically denounced the suggestion——

Mr. SPOONER. I do not denounce the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I understand that. The Senator very generously exempted me before he uttered the denunciation, but I call his attention to the fact that the suggestion of that thought certainly came from the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator was proceeding to show that if there were any lobby here it was a lobby opposed to the particular contention which he favored, and therefore in favor of the contention which we supported, and I simply replied that that did not seem to be universal; that there was one very prominent man who had certainly come before the committee, and the first thing we had heard of a tariff on Puerto Rican products was from him.

Mr. SPOONER. It is one thing for a man to go before a committee and in an open way present his views——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Oxnard was before our committee. He came there as any other citizen of the United States would have come, if he had so desired. We heard his testimony and he went his way. I never saw him about before, except only on the day he testified. If he has been here since, certainly if he has been here as a lobbyist, he has not been in the company of the committee or anybody connected with it, and except only as we would pay attention to what he might say in a proper way he was not heard by anybody connected with us and had no influence except as any other citizen of the United States would have.

Mr. BACON. I do not intend so to state. On the contrary, I am merely replying to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, when he practically arraigned those of us who were in favor of free trade with the statement that that was now what was being contended for and urged by a lobby representing protected interests. I simply said there was a lobby on the other side.

Mr. SPOONER. I had no thought of arraigning the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Not me in particular.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor your side. I think you are opposed to this bill sincerely.

Mr. BACON. I think you have every reason to believe so.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I think so; and I know of no difference between the sides here in that respect. It has never occurred to me that Senators were opposed to it on this side of the Chamber or on the other for any other reason than a frank one, openly stated, and I have never thought or intimated anything to the contrary. But I say what I know, that there has been a lobby here, a large one, an industrious one, endeavoring to secure the passage of a free-trade bill, even though it did carry the internal-revenue taxes to Puerto Rico, and for purely selfish purposes.

Mr. BACON. I do not think any member of that lobby has ever thought it to his interest or profit to speak to any man on this side of the Chamber on the subject. I have never heard of one.

Mr. SPOONER. They have represented a selfish interest only, and not the interests of the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. TURLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin one question, if I do not interrupt him.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TURLEY. Do I understand the Senator to maintain that this tax comes out of the sugar trust and will be paid by the sugar trust?

Mr. SPOONER. The sugar trust is suing to collect what it did pay.

Mr. TURLEY. I understood you in your statement just a moment ago to say that the tax would fall on the sugar trust.

Mr. SPOONER. I say that the tax will be collected from the rich producers of sugar over there or from the importers, one or the other, and that in either event it comes from the right spot and goes to the right spot. It comes from those who obtain a product which is produced by poorly paid and impoverished people, and through our instrumentality it goes to the masses to aid in government, in education, and in their support.

Mr. TURLEY. I will ask the Senator this question: What does he think is the effect of this tax? Does it fall on the sugar trust? Is the sugar trust benefited by the tax or hurt by the tax?

Mr. SPOONER. I can not tell absolutely. I do not know what secret arrangement there may be between the sugar company and the producers.

Mr. TURLEY. I understood him to state that the tax would fall upon the sugar trust. The reason why I ask the question is this: If it does fall on the sugar trust, in his opinion, and if, in his opinion, it is a constitutional or lawful tax, one which we ought to levy, then I do not see any reason for stopping it in two years.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand that. It is a much larger matter than that our people think.

I will speak a moment about the free list. I have been anxious from the beginning that the free list should be enlarged. It is not enlarged for the purposes of exploiting or benefiting our people. It is enlarged, as I understand it, for the purpose of benefiting the people of Puerto Rico.

It is enlarged, as the President enlarged it in the exercise of his war power, so that the people of Puerto Rico shall not be obliged to pay any taxes upon the necessaries of life. The people who buy luxuries, silks, satins, and velvets are well-to-do, and they can afford to pay something for the mass of people who are poverty stricken.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], for whom I have the profoundest respect, thought he could see a parallel between this tax and the tax imposed by the British Parliament which led to the Revolution by our forefathers. The only point of similarity seemed to be that the act of the British Parliament provided for the use of the money as a separate fund for the protection of the colonies. What sort of "protection" of the colonies was it? It was a tyranny. That Parliament had passed laws suppressing the industries of the colonists, laws absolutely brutal.

If I had the time to read them I could show that. It had passed laws to stifle their growing prosperity, to prevent any possibility of competition between them and the workers at home, to prevent the upbuilding of any industries and to impair their ability to become independent industrially and self-supporting. That money was to be used not for the benefit of the colonies. It was used, and that was one of the complaints of the Declaration of Independence, to pay salaries to pampered favorites and to maintain an army in this country, not for the protection of the colonists, but for the oppression of the colonists.

Is there any parallel between the action of the British Parliament and George the Third in their treatment of the colonies and the action of the Congress of the United States and President McKinley in our treatment of Puerto Rico? We appropriated the $2,000,000 for the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico from our Treasury. The Senator will have no doubt that the President will use every dollar of it wisely in relieving distress over there and in accomplishing the broad and generous purpose which he had in recommending it and which we had in enacting it? Where is the parallel? We raise this money by indirect taxation. For whom? For the people of Puerto Rico. It is not to be disbursed by the Congress either, or by George the Third, or any other tyrant. It is to be disbursed, until otherwise provided, by the President of the United States, William McKinley, as kindly, gracious, and sympathetic a gentleman as ever lived.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator gives me altogether too much credit. The suggestion of this parallel did not come from me, but it came, as I stated, from Senator Edmunds, who held a seat here, and who was a colleague with the Senator from Wisconsin for many years. It is in three lines. He stated——

Mr. SPOONER. I know what he stated.

Mr. PROCTOR. He stated:

> It will imitate and parallel the acts of the British Parliament.

I merely very mildly carried out his suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not speak about who suggested it. I do not care who suggested it. I know Senator Edmunds. I have the profoundest respect for his ability and his integrity, but I have no approval whatever for that suggestion, whether it came from Senator Edmunds or from the Senator from Vermont or from anybody else. There is no resemblance whatever between the two propositions.

Mr. President, what does this bill provide? It is a temporary measure. The Senator thought it was a violation of "plain duty," and not only a violation of plain duty but a violation of common honesty. That is his opinion doubtless sincerely entertained. It violates no pledge made by General Miles. The Congress of the United States will carry out every pledge that General Miles made which a commanding general has any right to make. The Senator does not doubt that the Congress will deal justly with the people of Puerto Rico. The Senator introduced an amendment making these duties good until July 1. I suppose he will vote for it. That is a compromise with iniquity. That is a compromise with violation of "plain duty and common honesty;" but that is, I suppose, only a "little fraud" and cruelty on the people of Puerto Rico, from the Senator's standpoint.

There is only one thing in this bill by way of permanent policy on the part of the United States toward Puerto Rico, aside from a few Government features. What is it? It is free trade. It provides, and wisely provides, and the suggestion did not come from the Senate, that so soon as the local legislature provided for by this bill shall have passed an act to meet the necessity for local revenue and a resolution that they have so enacted a law, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue a proclamation declaring that fact, and thereupon by operation of this bill all duties between Puerto Rico and the United States shall cease.

That leaves it in the hands of the President, who is supposed to wish free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States as soon as it is practicable, having regard to the interests of that people, to bring it about. Has the Senator from Vermont any doubt that as soon as the President, working with the local government there and aiding in its establishment, finds that a system has been adopted for the local support of that local government, he will promptly proclaim the fact and make trade between the United States and Puerto Rico free?

Mr. MASON. Does the Senator from Wisconsin understand that under this bill the President can do that before the expiration of the time fixed by the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course he can. The provision is to continue two years, unless before the expiration of that time the local legislature shall have adopted a system of local taxation, in which event, the President shall proclaim the fact and thereupon, by the terms of this bill, there shall be free trade between the United States and Puerto Rico.

I prophesy Puerto Rico will when the time comes urge a continuance of the imperceptible indirect tax, as against any local system.

Mr. BURROWS. It can be done within ninety days.

Mr. SPOONER. It can be done in ninety days or four months or five months. The President has wisely sent a skilled man there to investigate the fiscal possibilities of that island and to aid in devising a system which shall enable support of the local government without unjustly taxing individuals. It takes time to devise and formulate a system for such a people.

Mr. President, I have as usual allowed myself to be interrupted to such an extent that I have occupied much time. I have omitted much I would have been glad to say. I only want to say this, in conclusion: I am as sensitive as any man to public opinion. I know of no man here who is not sensitive to public opinion. I do not quite understand, I am sure, some phases of the denunciation of this measure. I value the confidence of the people. I try to deserve it, as we all do. I know of no reward in public life except popular approval. I care more (as we all do) for the approval of constituents than anything else connected with Senatorial life; but I am here under a "plain duty," and it is a sworn duty, too, and I propose to discharge it.

After looking this matter over, giving to it all the thought and study which I could give it, I have become convinced that the wise, the generous, the right, and the just thing, and the only thing we can do under the circumstances is to pass this bill, raising this money as a local tax for local purposes, and leaving it to the President to promote at the earliest possible date the adoption of a system of local taxation and upon proclamation by him—for it requires no further action of Congress—free trade under this bill with Puerto Rico. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The applause must not be repeated. If it is, the Sergeant-at-Arms will be instructed to clear the galleries. It is a violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, as a member of the committee which had this bill under consideration for some three weeks, and which heard the witnesses, the representative citizens of Porto Rico who came in to present their case, I venture at this late hour to trespass for a few minutes upon the Senate, to give briefly the reasons why I believe the passage of the bill will be for the best interests of the people of Porto Rico and at the same time will be doing justice to our own people and our own country.

The committee, with the exception of myself, is composed of able lawyers or gentlemen who have had many years' experience in legislative affairs and are students of governmental policy and political economy. The able chairman, in presenting to the committee the bill to which he had given much thought and study, frankly stated that we were confronted with a new question, a new problem to solve in our political history—the forming of a civil government for a part of our newly acquired possessions; that he had no pride of opinion which he would not cheerfully yield if a better plan or system were presented. The committee, collectively and individually, had no object in view but to frame a law that would result in contributing to the prosperity and happiness of the people of Porto Rico and at the same time guard well the institutions and rights of the people of the United States.

LIMITATIONS OF CONGRESS.

The question, therefore, which we first considered was, What are the limitations of Congress under the Constitution? What right or privilege does one of the present Territories of the United States enjoy that may not be enlarged or denied or withheld from Porto Rico? If we have the power to enlarge, deny, or withhold any privilege, is it right, is it policy, for us to do so?

That we may intelligently understand the whole question at issue justice and right demand that we should first consider the conditions that exist in Porto Rico. We find that the island of Porto Rico has an area of about 3,600 square miles; that it has a population of about 1,000,000 persons, approximating the density of the population of China—certainly more than double that of the same area of any agricultural region of the United States. Porto Rico has 280 persons to the square mile, while the State of California has only 8 persons to the square mile, and India and its dependencies have but 229, or 51 persons less per square mile than has Porto Rico.

More than one-third of the entire population is of the negro or mixed race; the balance are mostly of Spanish origin—emigrants from Spain during the past three centuries, and their descendants. There is, of course, a small percentage of other nationalities, but they are principally of Spanish descent, negroes, mulattoes, and what we call in the United States colored people.

It was in evidence before the committee that the aristocracy and rich Porto Ricans are well educated and accomplished; that their lawyers and physicians and professional men had received liberal educations in the universities of Europe and the United States. But these were only a few favored ones as compared with the whole population of the island.

WAGES AND VALUE OF EXPORTS.

The last Spanish census, taken in 1897, showed that only 13.3 per cent of the population could read and write. Contrast this with the United States, where our last census shows that 87 per cent of all the people 10 years old and over, including the colored people and civilized Indians, could read and write. We also learned from sources which we deemed reliable that the wealth of the island, real estate and personal property, is divided among a very small percentage of the population, estimated at 10 per cent of the people, while the ownership of all the land of the island is vested in about 43,000 people; that the great mass are very poor, and earned barely sufficient to buy subsistence and meager clothing. The wages of the laborer on the sugar, tobacco, and coffee plantations ranges from 20 to 30 cents per day, but the supply far exceeds the demand, and tens of thousands of people are unable to find any employment at any rate of wages.

Brig. Gen. George W. Davis, commanding general of the department of Porto Rico, states that the poor people of the island comprise from one-third to one-half of the total population, and their food consists of rice, beans, yams, sweet potatoes, corn, bananas, and sugar cane. Of this food bananas constitute 75 per cent of the total consumption. These are the laborers on the plantations. Their habitations consist of poles covered with palm leaves, and their bed is a hide on the ground, or the bare ground itself, with rarely a sort of bench for a resting place. The next class comprises the small coffee proprietors, owners of little cattle ranches, men engaged in transportation, in small trades, or manufactures, clerks, and servants. The third and highest class embraces the proprietors of estates, larger merchants, and professional men.

Nine-tenths of the exports from Porto Rico have been composed of coffee, sugar, and tobacco, the average value of these articles exported, from 1893 to 1897, being $9,000,000, out of a total of about $10,000,000. Of these three articles of export, the value of coffee was a little over $6,000,000; of sugar and molasses, about $2,400,000, and of tobacco, $450,000. Outside of these staples the island has had few resources, the aggregate of all exports other than those named being only a few hundred thousand dollars.

WHOM FREE TRADE WILL BENEFIT.

With these existing conditions it is not difficult to understand why free trade will benefit the few who own and control the lands which are adapted to the cultivation of sugar, tobacco, and citrus fruits. They are willing that others should pay for the support of the government that protects them in their property, and gives them all the advantages accruing from a strong and stable form of government. Their lack of American patriotism; their undue love of self-interest, is emphasized by the fact that one of the principal sugar producers in the island that appeared before the committee said he was an English subject, and had no intention of becoming an American citizen. Yet he was here, a representative from the great commercial organization of Porto Rico, urging the committee and urging Congress to give them free trade, that he might bring into this country free the products of the labor of the peons and the contract laborers of the island.

Mr. MASON. The Senator will not be annoyed, I think, by an interruption.

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all. We are in search of light. I shall be pleased to give any answer that I can, and if I can not answer his question now I will do as many of our judges, take it under advisement and answer later.

Mr. MASON. My only suggestion to the Senator was, that while that class of men ask for free trade the committee respond by giving them 85 per cent of what the Englishmen ask for.

Mr. PERKINS. There was no evidence whatever that that class of people were asking for free trade. They are asking for something to eat, something to keep soul and body together.

Mr. MASON. I was talking about the English whom the Senator said wanted free trade.

LABOR IN THE ISLANDS.

Mr. PERKINS. I beg pardon; I stand corrected.

Mr. MASON. You gave them 85 per cent of what they asked.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a slight interruption?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly; I am always pleased to yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that there are peon contract laborers in the island of Porto Rico?

Mr. PERKINS. They work for those who control them without any regard to their physical, mental, or moral condition. Their employers pay them that which is only sufficient, as it appeared in evidence, for them to live from day to day by boiling half-ripe bananas, eating sugar cane, and the yams that they dig from the soil.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not get away from the point, however. Is there any evidence anywhere showing that there are imported peons there or persons under contract like there are in Hawaii?

Mr. PERKINS. No, there is no person——

Mr. TILLMAN. They are simply forced to accept these low wages because of the competition among the laborers for the job; in other words, owing to the density of population on the island.

Mr. PERKINS. It is 280 persons to the square mile, and that makes it impossible for all to find employment. Right here I want to speak of the competition with the beet-sugar industry of this country. The beet-sugar industry of this country makes every farmhouse, every association of farmers, an anti-trust combination. In my own State there were eight to ten beet-sugar factories, and every one of those beet-sugar factories buys the beet, the product of the soil, from the farmers. They bring it to their factory, and when it leaves it it is refined coffee sugar ready for the table. No sugar trust or any other combination of capital can control the beet-sugar product of our soil. It is one of the great industries of this country.

THE BEET-SUGAR INTEREST.

The beet-sugar interest of the United States is only ten years old, yet it has become thoroughly established. Fully 100,000 acres of land were last year devoted to the cultivation of the sugar beet, producing 1,000,000 tons, for which farmers were paid over $5,000,000. These beets were manufactured into sugar at thirty beet-sugar factories, which produced 100,000 tons of sugar.

Among these beet-sugar factories are those at Bay City, Mich.; Binghamton, and Rome, N. Y.; Pekin, Ill.; Lagrande, Oreg.; Norfolk, Grand Island, and Ames, Nebr.; Grand Junction and Rockyford, Colo.; Ogden, Lehi, and Springville, Utah; Carlsbad, N. Mex.; Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; Park, Minn.; Fairfield, Wash.; Crockett, Alvarado, Watsonville, Salinas, Oxnard, Chino, Beetaravia, and Los Alamitos, Cal. In addition to these, nearly fifty new factories are projected to care for the crops of next year, covering the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and California.

The above will show that the beet-sugar interest is confined to no one section of the country, but that practically every State can become a sugar producer, opening to its farmers another avenue to prosperity so long as their labor is not compelled to compete with that which is satisfied with 20 or 30 cents a day. In addition to opening another market to farmers, the beet-sugar factory adds to the population and prosperity of the States wherein it is situated by building up around it a town, as do manufactories of other kinds in the manufacturing States.

In California the sugar factories that have been established have become the centers of towns, where formerly there were only bare fields. The number of laborers employed, where from 2,000 to 4,000 tons of beets a day are turned into sugar, is very large, and a town necessarily grows around the factory, which gradually and surely increases by the establishment of other industries necessary to the factory, to the people, or to the neighboring farmers. The capital invested in these plants is very large; one, the Spreckles factory near Salinas, Cal., costing $2,500,000. The daily output of sugar from this factory alone is 1,000,000 pounds, which requires 25 cars of 20 tons capacity each to take it away.

IN THE INTEREST OF THE FARMERS.

If, as is said, Mr. Oxnard came here in that interest, he came here in the interest of the farmers of this country, because every twenty farmers in any county in California, in Nebraska, in Colorado, in Utah, in Kansas, aye, in Michigan, can form an association and there grow the beet that yields from 12 to 16 or 17 per cent of saccharine, and produce sugar in the factory. There can be no sugar trust or other combination in producing sugar beets in this country; and I for one am in favor of keeping the hundred million dollars in this country to distribute among our farmers and our own people rather than send it to China or any other foreign country to purchase the cane sugar produced by them.

It was also in evidence before the Committee that a very large percentage of the landowners of Porto Rico are Spaniards, who have thus far given no indication of becoming Porto Ricans, which they must decide to do under the treaty during the present month of April. The general impression is that they will nearly all retain their Spanish nationality, as they are not in sympathy with the United States or its institutions.

It therefore seems to me to be the part of wise statesmanship for the United States to make haste slowly. That we have the right as a nation to make such laws for the government of Porto Rico and our other acquired territory or dependencies as we believe will redound to the interest of the people I think has been uncontroverted by the learned junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Ross] and by other constitutional lawyers who have discussed this phase of the Constitution.

The Constitution implies that we may acquire territory by discovery, treaty, or conquest; and no one denies that proposition. The right to thus acquire is derived from the fact that the United States is a sovereign nation, and has the same inherent right as such nation to acquire property that a person has to acquire and hold it, the means of acquisition being perfectly legitimate.

NEW TERRITORY.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from California allow me?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator certainly does not mean to assert that the Constitution anywhere says that we may acquire territory by conquest, cession, or discovery?

Mr. PERKINS. It says by implication, and the courts, I think, have so held. I will quote you in a few minutes later what one of the great expounders of the Constitution, Mr. Webster, says.

Mr. ALLEN. There is no language of that kind in the Constitution, although by war and by discovery, I suppose, we have the implied power to obtain territory.

Mr. PERKINS. We have acquired it as the result of war, by purchase, by treaty, and by conquest. I do not know in what manner we have acquired Porto Rico unless it is the result of the war which my friend voted for in the interest of humanity.

Mr. ALLEN. It came as an incident of war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. It came under our power to make war.

Mr. PERKINS. We have it now at all events, and the question is, What is best to be done with the island?

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me right there?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to interrupt him unnecessarily, but in determining the status of Porto Rico should we look primarily at the welfare of the people of the United States proper or the welfare of the Porto Ricans and their wishes in the matter?

OUR FIRST DUTY.

Mr. PERKINS. I believe our first duty is to our own. A man who is not true to his own home, to his own family, to his own community, will not make a good public citizen anywhere.

Mr. ALLEN. Would the Senator take into consideration the commercial interests of the United States as superior to the welfare and happiness of the Porto Ricans?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, while we can be generous and true and loyal to our own, we can at the same time be liberal to those who are less favored.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose the Porto Ricans want political autonomy and want a republic of their own, and to give them that we come in conflict with the commercialism of the United States, to which sentiment would the Senator yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, there is a wise saying of a very wise statesman, "It is time enough to cross the river when we reach it." When the Porto Ricans have attained that intellectual standard, have made that advance in morals and religion and American patriotism which the distinguished Senator from Nebraska so much reveres, then we will take up this question and see what it is proper for us to do for them at that time.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the Senator to decline to answer the question?

Mr. PERKINS. Territory may be acquired by discovery. We have discovered several islands down in the Pacific Ocean, and they belong to us by right of discovery. We have others by treaty. When territory is acquired, whether by discovery, treaty of purchase, or by conquest, it becomes property to be disposed of as the nation may see fit. The Constitution provides that this disposition of "territory and other property" is to be made by Congress, which has not only the power to "dispose of," i. e., to sell or give away, but it "may make all needful rules and regulations respecting it." Whenever this right to dispose of and make rules and regulations concerning property in territory has been disputed, whether in the courts or elsewhere, the right has always been upheld.

ACTS OF GRACE.

The erection of such acquired territory into a political entity or government, whether State or Territorial, the bestowal of citizenship upon its people, the granting of any special privileges, and relief from any burden are all mere acts of grace upon the part of the Government. With the bestowal of these rights or the reliefs from any burdens neither the President nor the judiciary have aught to do (except as the President may exercise his veto power), for the Constitution gives to "the Congress the power."

In the case of Porto Rico and other territory acquired as the result of our war with Spain, the territory came to us as the lawful prize of war, to indemnify the United States for injuries suffered and reimburse this victorious nation for the expenses of the war. The "catchy" phrase "the Constitution follows the flag" is euphonious, but it is merely claptrap and untrue. Protection to life, guardianship of property, the maintenance of order follow the flag of the United States, but all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the Constitution do not follow the flag, and if they did it would in many cases be ruinous to the nation that, as the result of war, acquires territory.

HOW CALIFORNIA WAS GOVERNED.

The history of California is a case in point. The territory of which this State was a part became territory belonging to the United States through the treaty with Mexico. Upon taking possession of it, as soon as war with Mexico was begun, a military government was established, which continued until a constitution was framed, a State government organized, and the country admitted to the Union as a State. There were during this interval of about four years as many military governors, and during all that time there was no contention that the laws of the United States applied to the Territory by virtue of the Constitution. On the contrary, it was acknowledged that they did not so apply, and that they must be extended over that Territory by act of Congress. Soon after the treaty was signed the President brought this matter to the notice of Congress in messages, but no action was taken. In his message of December 4, 1848, President Polk said:

It will be important to extend our revenue laws over these Territories, and especially over California, at an early period. There is already a considerable commerce with California, and until ports of entry shall be established and collectors appointed no revenues can be received.

A collection district was soon after formed, a collector appointed, and the revenue laws made to apply to the Territory. But this was nearly the extent to which the laws of the United States applied to the new Territory up to 1850.

At the time California was admitted as a State the military governor reported that the only government in the Territory was that established by the Mexicans, with the exception of a few military orders issued by him or his predecessors. The new Territory was left practically to itself for four years, during which time the Constitution had not of its own power extended over it the laws. Indeed, it was expressly acknowledged that Congress could alone extend these laws over California. The Constitution clearly did not follow the flag in this or other instances of the kind. Congress had power then, as it has now, to place a new Territory under such laws as it thought fit.

A TIME FOR EDUCATION NECESSARY.

Porto Rico and the Philippines are ours to have and to hold and to dispose of as Congress in its wisdom may see fit. If we retain them, a period of pupilage—a time for education—must be theirs, so that they may be fitted to understand and have the capacity to enjoy the rights of American citizenship.

Were it true that the Constitution follows the flag, we would have to be careful about going to war, and still more careful of the acquisition of territory that might come to us as victors. The doctrine is practically destructive of the war power of the Constitution.

Suppose that, as the result of the Spanish war, Spain herself had fallen to us as a territory, indemnifying us for the expenses and losses of the war—a territory filled with a people possessed with animosity toward us, their conquerors, hatred of our institutions, and incapable because of training and education to assimilate with us for centuries to come—would anyone claim, would my friend from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], or my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] claim, that we should give those hostile Spaniards all rights which we possess under the Constitution? Should citizenship with its blessings be theirs?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PERKINS. Should they be admitted to freedom of trade and equality of commerce with us?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

THE QUESTION OF EQUALITY.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator a few minutes ago to speak about the ownership of land in Porto Rico, and he seemed to reprobate or to oppose equality under the flag because some Englishmen and a large number of Spaniards own the real estate there. Therefore he limits the benefits of liberty to the nationality, does he?

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all, Mr. President; but the Porto Ricans are electing, many of them, to become citizens under the treaty. The Spaniards say they have no sympathy with our institutions or with our form of government. The Englishmen say, in effect, the same. They say: "We will maintain our allegiance to our mother country; we want all of these privileges and all of these benefits, but we will remain your landlords."

Mr. TILLMAN. What will we do, then, if all the land there belongs to aliens—Spaniards and Englishmen? Are you just going to leave that island dangling between Scylla and Charybdis, or between the devil and the deep sea, so to speak? Are you going to hold on to it, and yet not let it have any of the benefits of citizenship?

Mr. PERKINS. My friend is off his course, using a nautical phrase. I used that as one of the arguments to show that it was not the plain people, that it was not the working people, the middle class, who were asking for free trade, but it was the foreign landholders, the foreign capitalists, and I said it was one of those conditions which existed there that your committee had taken into consideration when this bill was before them.

NOT A PARALLEL CASE.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I should like to have the Senator's interpretation or explanation of the purpose which he has, ulterior or present, in regard to this alien landlordism. Are we as a nation here going to legislate for the common people of Porto Rico or for the landlords? I understood him to say that we were going to legislate for the common people. How are you going to relieve those common people unless you turn that government over to them and let them legislate those people out of their homes by taxation?

Mr. PERKINS. If the land were open, as it has been in our Western States, and we could send our farmers from South Carolina and from New England there to build homesteads, to preempt the land by homesteading upon it, then I could see that we might give them American citizenship, and that we might take them into our political family. But I am relating now the conditions that exist there.

Mr. TILLMAN. What do you want with those people at all, then?

Mr. PERKINS. You have got them.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we have the Porto Rican case on hand in such a way that we can not elevate the common masses and give them a chance to get homes, and can not legislate against the landlords who live in Spain or in England, what do we want with the island at all?

Mr. PERKINS. My friend voted for the treaty which gave us the island.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg pardon; I did not. I did my level best to defeat it, and I wish to God it never had been passed.

Mr. PERKINS. The treaty was ratified with the influence on his side. His friends aided it just the same.

Mr. TILLMAN. There were only three or four over here who voted for it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, following the thread of my narrative as to the acquisition of territory, I want to suppose a case that is not unlikely to occur. An Asiatic war, we will suppose, takes place, into which this Republic might be drawn, and we are victors in the struggle, as we always are. With my friend from South Carolina on our side there is no such word as fail. Suppose the Chinese Empire should fall to us as a war indemnity. We would have acquired a territory with 400,000,000 population, of a class that we have spurned from our shores as we would a pestilence. Should those unassimilative people be permitted to overrun us and affect the body politic and our institutions with a leprosy worse than death itself, because of the recognition of the absurd catch phrase that has been bandied from one to another and brought hither and thither, that "the Constitution follows the flag?"

THE MEANING OF THE FLAG.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator recall that one of the catch phrases that is very popular was promulgated by President McKinley at Ocean Grove, that the flag would not mean one thing in the Philippines and another in Porto Rico and another in the United States, but that it would mean the same thing everywhere?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, President McKinley was right when he said it. The flag means protection; it means law and order; it means that everyone who will obey the law shall have the protection of the flag, of Old Glory. President McKinley has said many patriotic and noble things. He never said a truer word than that where the flag goes, where Old Glory waves, there is the bond for law and order. When a sailor boy in a foreign country I have seen Old Glory flying over the American consul's house, and as I approached it I almost felt as Moses felt when he drew near the burning bush and the voice came to him, "Thou standeth on holy ground."

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the President said only what was true and right then, what about this other catch phrase of his, that it is our plain duty to give Porto Rico free trade? He seems to have been mistaken once in his infallible utterances, anyway.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE FLAG.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, none of us are infallible. It is said that wise men sometimes change their minds. Others who are not so wise persist in saying that the horse is 16 hands high, and they adhere to an opinion previously formed.

It has been clearly elucidated to-day that it was impracticable to collect any other tax for the support of that government except in the manner which your committee have provided for. I have heard my friend again and again say here that the way to dispense charity is to help people help themselves; and so the President, so the people of the United States, want to reach out their helping hand to the Porto Ricans and say, "We will help you to help yourselves." That is right.

That is true charity, Mr. President. A man who dispenses alms and gives it for grace alone does not benefit the receiver if he is well, but he does him a great injury. My friend has added another tribute in his very words of criticism, one which redounds to the praise and credit of President McKinley, who is patriotic and loyal and who wants to do that which is for the best interests of the people of our whole country and those who as a result of the war have fallen to us.

But, as I said, shall these unassimilative people be permitted to overrun us and affect the body politic and our institutions with a leprosy worse than death itself because of recognition of the absurd catch phrase, I repeat it, that "the Constitution follows the flag?" Better defeat to our arms and the payment by us of a war indemnity than that; aye, a hundred times better. When defeat is more advantageous to a nation than victory, it will cease to wage war, and the duty imposed upon Congress by the Constitution "to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a navy" need no longer be performed.

DANIEL WEBSTER ON THE CONSTITUTION.

In the discussion of the question of extending the Constitution and laws of the United States to Upper California and New Mexico, the great "expounder of the Constitution," Daniel Webster, said:

Let me say that in this general sense there is no such thing as extending the Constitution. The Constitution is extended over the United States, and over nothing else. It can not be extended over anything except over the old States and the new States that shall come in hereafter, when they do come in. There is a want of accuracy of ideas in this respect that is quite remarkable among eminent gentlemen, and especially professional and judicial gentlemen.

It seems to be taken for granted that the right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, and every principle designed to protect personal liberty, is extended by force of the Constitution itself over every new Territory. That proposition can not be maintained at all. How do you arrive at it by any reasoning or deduction? It can only be arrived at by the loosest of all possible constructions. It is said that this must be so, else the right of the habeas corpus would be lost. Undoubtedly these rights must be conferred by law before they can be enjoyed in a Territory.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not like to interrupt him. The extract from Daniel Webster's speech was a speech made in a law case, was it not?

Mr. PERKINS. It was made in the Senate. He was the great expounder of the Constitution, second in the opinion, I am sure, of my friend from Georgia only to John C. Calhoun.

Mr. BACON. Oh, I do not hold him second. Does the Senator say that that was in a debate in the Senate?

Mr. PERKINS. In the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator kindly state what debate it was?

Mr. PERKINS. I took it from Benton's Thirty Years in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator will find, if he will notice, that it was uttered elsewhere. I may be mistaken, but I know he did express a similar opinion in a law case.

WHAT WE SHOULD CONSIDER.

Mr. PERKINS. He said it in a discussion of the question of extending the Constitution and laws of the United States to Lower California and to New Mexico. I copied this extract from his speech in Benton's Thirty Years in the Senate. I will read what was said again by Webster, that grand old man. I like to read that which he said as I do the Proverbs of Solomon, and I know that it will leave lasting impression upon those of us who ponder well upon his words. He was a beacon light of patriotism in the history of our country, and we can all afford to be devotees at the shrine of patriotism. Mr. Webster said again:

The Constitution was made for the States, not Territories; that no part of it went to a Territory unless specifically extended to it by act of Congress; that the Territories from first to last were governed as Congress chose to govern them, independently of the Constitution and often contrary to it, as in denying them representatives in Congress, a vote for President and Vice-President, the protection of the Supreme Court; that Congress was constantly doing things in the Territories without constitutional objection (as making mere local roads and bridges) which could not be attempted in a State.

I speak of this from a layman's standpoint, and as one who can go out on the sands and gather up pebbles and when he sees one of great value it comes home to him intuitively that it is not an ordinary gem. So it seems to me, after reading this discussion, that there can be no question but what the right is given Congress under the Constitution to enact such legislation as it deem wise and expedient for the government of our Territories and dependencies.

In framing laws for our new possessions, it is, in my opinion necessary for us to consider the needs of the constitutional States as well as to consider those of the islands; and it is possible for us all to concur, I think, that the needs of the islands may not be exactly those of the States, and that consequently laws necessary in the latter might not be the best for the former. I fear there is a disposition on the part of many, a great disposition of the great sympathetic people of our country, to permit their sympathy to outweigh judgment in this matter.

If there is we should be on our guard against it, lest it lead us into paths on which there is no turning back and which lead no one can now say where, but, perchance, to disaster. In dealing with this question, therefore, it behooves us to exercise calm, judicial judgment, uninfluenced by those feelings which, while among the most noble of humanity and which come straight from our hearts, we should be careful not to be unduly influenced by, feelings which may lead us astray.

PORTO RICO CAME LIKE A METEOR.

The little island of Porto Rico comes to us under peculiar circumstances. We did not seek it. Like a meteor from the sky that falls to the earth, we did not invite it to come, but it is here, and can not be disposed of by declaring that there is no authority under the Constitution to remove this meteor from the earth. Porto Rico was thrust upon us by war. Its people had never asked, perhaps had never desired, to become a part of the United States. Their civilization was impressed upon them by a nation in which the principles of freedom and self-government have hardly even yet taken root.

They are wholly ignorant of those principles, and their beliefs and customs are not those of the Anglo-Saxon, whose thousand years or more of struggles for self-government have had a cumulative effect which is seen in the institutions of our own country. They are not yet Americans, though they now deserve to be such, and Americans they can not be without going through some of the stages of development through which our ancestors have passed.

The peoples of a country can not, like Aaron's rod, blossom and bear fruit in twenty-four hours. The transition of a government of despotism to democracy is a slow process; the masses are not prepared for the change; generation after generation must first be educated in the school of civil and religious liberty before they can fully appreciate the benefits they may enjoy under a republican form of government.

"Heaven is not reached at a single bound:
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round."

It is to my mind clearly evident that in the case of this island we have to deal with questions which differ materially from those presented by the acquisition of continental territory, in which the characteristics of American life were at the time, or very shortly thereafter, predominant. In none of these cases was it necessary to deal with problems furnished by a foreign population, for that population was at once overwhelmed by Americans and practically ceased to exist. We are not, therefore, legislating for the Louisiana purchase, for Texas, or for California, but we are legislating for a people foreign to our institutions and our civilization, and in thus legislating these facts should be constantly borne in mind. Though attached to us by indissoluble bonds, Porto Rico is not yet an integral part of the United States. That union can come only when the island, through education and experience, becomes American.

A SCHEME OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

The bill before us deals with Porto Rico upon this basis. It provides a scheme for civil government, through which the people may be educated along those lines which the Anglo-Saxon has followed so long, and which in time will make them in truth as in fact citizens of the United States. It is due them that they should have this privilege, and it is granted to them in this bill. But with this privilege go responsibilities, one of which is self-support. The affairs of the island can not be administered without cost, and it is no part of the character of freemen to permit themselves to be supported by others. Self-government and self-support are inseparable. Can it, therefore, be separated in the case of Porto Rico at the bidding of sympathy without doing wrong to the people of the island and violating our own principles?

It has been a question as to the best manner in which this self-support can be secured. There are two ways in which the United States gets the means of self-support—through customs duties and internal taxes. We of the United States pay both kinds of tribute, and find it no great burden as compared with the benefits we derive. Even the internal tax for war purposes is lightly borne and not felt by the masses. But how would a land, poll, or consumption tax be considered by a people of whom the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics thus spoke in 1898:

While the 200,000 (of its 1,000,000) of its population who live in cities and villages enjoy some of the conveniences to which our people are accustomed, the large proportion of the rural population is of extremely simple habits in the matter of food, clothing, and habitation, and with small earning capacity and a small per capita of a depreciated currency can not be expected to soon become large consumers of our products.

A little rice, a little flour a few beans, and plenty of bananas, plantains, breadfruits, and vegetables satisfy their physical necessities; a few yards of cotton cloth for the adults and nothing for the children meet their principal requirements for clothing, while a few rough boards and a plentiful supply of plantain and palm leaves supply the material for the humble dwellings throughout the interior and in many of the villages. With but about one-fifth of its population able to read and write, the knowledge of the outside world is extremely limited and with only 150 miles of railroad and less than 250 miles of good wagon road on the island the means of intercommunication are not such as to enable a prompt stimulation of its production or consumption.

PORTO RICO'S ADVANTAGE 85 PER CENT.

It is hardly possible that a land, poll, or consumption tax on a people such as are here described could with justice to them be imposed. The domestic business pursuits should be untrammeled, and in consequence it has been deemed wise, as well as expedient, to impose no tax of this kind on the island, but to raise what money is needed by an indirect tax from duty on its exports to this country and internal-revenue taxes on manufactured articles only that are exported into the United States.

The money thus collected, being derived in this way, and also from duties on foreign imports into Porto Rico, comes from the most productive kinds of business in the island. So this indirect tax is less severely felt than if of a more general character, and every dollar thus collected is turned into the insular treasury of Porto Rico for the sole benefit of the people of that island; while in the District of Columbia and every other Territory of the United States the money collected from internal revenue is paid into the National Treasury at Washington.

But in order to reduce the revenue collected from the island to a minimum, this duty has been fixed at only 15 per cent of the existing tariff rates, thus giving to Porto Rico an advantage of 85 per cent over its competitors. In order further to favor the people of the island no duty is levied on flour, rice, produce, cereals, beans, fish, pork, bacon, fresh beef, mutton, and many other articles of food; also, books and pamphlets printed in the Spanish and the English languages, lumber, oxen, machinery, etc., for making sugar, rum, and brandy, and we have reduced the duty upon building material and other articles to less than one-half of the regular tariff on imports from the United States.

UNPRECEDENTED GENEROSITY.

No Territory of the United States has ever been treated in so liberal a manner as this Government now proposes to treat Porto Rico. In the district of Alaska Congress has imposed a special license tax upon business industries, which paid into the National Treasury last year nearly a quarter of a million dollars, and this, too, in our own Territory of Alaska, snowbound and away up in the polar regions. We have imposed that upon our own people, and yet our sympathetic friends say that this bill is an outrageous oppression upon the Porto Ricans.

Mr. President, I would be just to all; but I never did when a boy have any patience with those good, kind-hearted, dear old women who met on Friday afternoons at a sewing society and there made pantalettes and clothing for the Hottentot children of South Africa, while their own neighbors' children were going about barelegged and barefooted. I believe in charity commencing at home.

So I say in this case we have made an exception, perhaps, to the general rule, because Providence in His wisdom sent a great tornado, a great hurricane, over that island, causing devastation and ruin to the people. Tornadoes come in Nebraska; epidemics and pestilences stalk broadcast over our land; and yet we do not ask charity or this beneficent kindness from our Government; but we press forward and commence again to combat what may be called a special dispensation of Providence, to bring us to a realizing sense that we are only mortal, and that we, perhaps, are progressing too rapidly in our material affairs.

The only tax that is to be paid in Porto Rico is that upon the most profitable kinds of productive enterprise, and all the money thus collected is to be returned to the island for public purposes. This and such other expenditures as the General Government will make from the general revenue of the United States for the support of our Army and Navy, improvement of fortifications, geological and coast and geodetic surveys, light-houses, quarantine stations, government roads, parks, etc., should and will tend to promote the well being and prosperity of the island.

OUR TREATMENT OF THE ISLAND.

The new public works undertaken will be of lasting benefit to the inhabitants; money will be expended in wages, which will give relief to many of the needy, and all will feel the beneficent effect of an era of progress. A few days since Congress passed an act appropriating $2,095,455.98 to be expended in Porto Rico for the benefit of that island, and our people and the Government have poured in tens of thousands of dollars' worth of provisions and supplies to relieve the sufferers from the tornado that swept over a part of the island.

Contrast this liberal treatment with that of Spain toward Porto Rico. Dr. Carroll, special Treasury agent, sent to the island to report upon its condition, states in his report, at page 57, that an export duty and cargo taxes were levied by Spain in Puerto Rico on coffee, tobacco, and other articles, and that this tax alone in 1896 amounted to $351,624. This, with taxes upon real estate, consumption tax, and other taxes, amounts to ten or twenty times the small duty we propose to levy upon her sugar and tobacco.

The Statesman's Yearbook, an English publication, recognized as reliable authority, states that Spain levied taxes upon Porto Rico in 1896 amounting to $1,091,000 and expended only $781,000 in the island, the remainder being Spanish profit from this colony. To this we may add the enormous salaries paid from the resources of Porto Rico to the Spanish court officials that were sent over from Spain to administer the military and civil government of the island.

THE HIDDEN SECRET.

A letter written from Porto Rico to the Hon. G. W. STEELE, of the House of Representatives and read there a few days ago, not only shows conclusively that a tariff of 15 per cent will be entirely acceptable, but indicates that the only class who would benefit from absolute free trade are the very ones who, it is now alleged, desire this tariff. The pertinent portions of this letter are as follows:

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO, March 17, 1900.

MY DEAR MAJOR: We are watching with interest here the hurricane that the proposed 15 per cent tariff has raised, and are wondering what it is all about. A 15 per cent tariff is not obnoxious to the people here; at any rate not to the planters and to the great body of the people, the only clamorers for out-and-out free trade being the men who have bought up most of the sugar and a good part of the tobacco.

I am credibly informed that the American Tobacco Company has absorbed the greater part of the tobacco interests of the island, and absolute free trade would mean that they stand to make a pocketful of money. This talk of the placing of the tariff at the behest of the trusts which control tobacco and sugar strikes us here as the most arrant rot, since those very interests are the ones that would profit most from absolute free trade. The people here take it that the United States is not going to appropriate money from the National Treasury for the purpose of running this island. Hence the money, about two and a half millions a year, must be raised either by a tariff or by direct taxation.

Under the present system there is not a cent of taxes collected on land or improved real estate. The insular revenues have come from tariff, and the municipal fund has come from taxes on the necessaries of life. Even under this system the planters have had to appeal for a suspension of process to save their lands from foreclosure, and the levy and collection at this time of a direct tax would practically mean the sale of the island under the hammer. Perhaps the holders of the mortgages have a voice in the clamor, for the purpose of forcing the plantations into the hands of the sheriff.

The experience here has been that the removal of the tariff has not cheapened anything to the consumer. Acting under the demand for cheaper necessaries, the War Department removed the tariff from rice, bacon, beef, beans, and a number of other articles, but despite this removal of the tariff, not one of these articles sells any part of a cent cheaper in the stores to-day than they did with the tariff imposed, and whatever benefit has been derived from the abolition of those tariff dues has been divided between the wholesaler and the retailer.

THE TRUE SITUATION.

I believe, Mr. President, that this letter sets forth the true situation in Porto Rico as far as this proposed tariff is concerned. I do not see that the abolition of this 15 per cent tax would benefit any others than those indicated, or that it could tend to increase export trade appreciably more than the 85 per cent reduction proposed will do. Indeed, according to this letter, the abolition of the tariff on goods imported into the island is of no practical benefit to the consumers. The pork packers and millers of the West and other provision dealers of the East would simply divide the duty saved with the sellers of the articles. Yet this duty has been omitted from the bill in the hope that competition will eventually reduce the selling prices of the articles, so that the purchasers may after a while derive some benefit from the omission.

Besides all this, the bill, if enacted into law, will remain in force only two years, during which time its defects will be fully ascertained. If any are made apparent, it will be possible to correct them before any appreciable damage has been wrought. I do not see, Mr. President, how any plan could be fairer to the people of Porto Rico than the one proposed.

In talking with one of the advocates of free trade about the ungenerous manner in which he said we had treated the Porto Ricans. I asked him, after citing him the principal features of this bill, what we had done to oppress those people that was so much more severe than had been the treatment of Spain? "Why," said he, "Spain permitted them to vote; they voted under the despotic Spanish Government; and now our free republican Government has stepped in and denies them the right to the ballot."

Mr. President, it is in evidence before your committee that while those people had the right to vote under the Spanish régime, they had but a very small minority of the returning board, and the result of the elections was always in accordance with the edict which had been promulgated by the captain-general of the island, who said the Crown—the home government—desired the result of the ballot to be in favor of such and such persons. The returning board always complied with their instructions to the letter, and it has been said that in the whole history and experience of the elective franchise in Porto Rico this great boon that was given them and that we have denied to those oppressed people there had never been an instance where the result of the election was not in accordance with the desire of those who were in authority and who wanted such and such persons elected.

THE PRINCIPLE OF PROTECTION.

But, Mr. President, in addition to the wise and beneficent features I have alluded to, while we have been, as I have said, more generous and more liberal to Porto Rico than we have ever been to any Territory of the United States, the bill has in view one other prominent point, to my mind, which I think your committee are entitled to credit for embodying in it.

The bill maintains the principle of protection to American labor and American civilization against foreign competition and influence; and in justice to ourselves this protection must be always maintained. Sympathy for other races less fortunate than we should not induce us to open our doors to influences that would tend to sink us to their level. There is and can be no stationary period in our career as a nation.

We must either go forward or backward. Our course up to this time has been always forward, and we should see to it that it shall be always so as far as we can determine it. In our efforts to determine what the future shall be, I do not think we can do better than to maintain at all points the principle of protection until we can see a little farther into the future. We shall have to deal with problems concerning other races and other civilizations, which differ more from our own than do those found in Porto Rico; and it will be long before we can see clearly all the conditions surrounding them, and be in a position to act intelligently for the best interests of these people as well as for ourselves.

The interests of our own country and people must always be first in our minds, and we must act with that idea predominant. We should be recreant in our duty to our own should we permit any opening to occur through which danger might come to them. Their greatest safety will be, in the future as in the past, that protection against the influences of alien customs, habits, and ways of life which has been provided by our laws and hallowed by the benediction of our forefathers. We should in no case make exemptions from that policy which may be used hereafter as grounds for urging its wholesale abrogation.

The honor and dignity of labor should ever be maintained and protected against competition from servile and cheap contract labor, no matter from what source it may come, whether it be from our own territory or dependencies in the islands of the sea, or whether it comes masquerading under the guise of reciprocity.

For these reasons I believe it wise to maintain this principle as against Porto Rico until the future is more clear than it is now, and until we can learn what a breach in the existing laws will admit, whether influences for good or for evil.

GOVERNMENT THROUGH THE PRESIDENT.

I would call to mind, Mr. President, the manner in which Porto Rico has been governed up to this time by the President, acting through military governors. I do not think it can be denied that there have been much better conditions than under Spanish rule. It is true that the elements have brought great distress to the people, but even for political purposes such misfortune can not be laid at the door of the Administration. The fact is that, aside from the destruction worked by a hurricane, the island of Porto Rico is better off than it has ever been since Spain possessed it.

It was overwhelmed with taxes which bore hard on all classes of people. Even what they consumed was taxed; and their incomes, above expenses, had to yield a portion to be sent to Spain. Export as well as import duties were levied, and a tonnage tax and other schemes for raising money were tried. But, as soon as the island came into possession of the United States, an effort was at once made to relieve the people of some of these burdens.

Beef and mutton, oxen, machinery, food stuffs, building material, etc., were admitted free of duty. The price of bread was brought down from 8 to 4 cents. There was a tax on consumption levied on all articles to eat, drink, or burn. Sugar, sold for 3 cents, was made thus to cost the consumer 6 cents. Every little town imposed this consumption tax on rum, rice, beer, pease, meat, charcoal, milk, etc. All these taxes have been abolished. Everywhere there was an income tax, the Spanish Government determining what that income was by making its own estimate. This has been abolished also. Every bit of land was taxed for all it could bear, and the money made to swell the amount collected by Spain, and in all these collections the Spanish citizen was always enabled, by characteristic means, to secure material rebates, thus thrusting the burden on the very poorest classes.

All this iniquitous system has been abolished by the President, and the military government established has been a blessing to the people. These taxes which have ground the poor to the dust should not be revived by any system of direct taxation. The most profitable business enterprises of the island should be made to pay their fair share of the expenses, which they have so long escaped. This is provided for in the present bill. But even without such a law as is here proposed the people of Porto Rico would be far better off than they ever were under the rule of Spain.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 14, section 19, line 7, there is one word that ought to be stricken out. It is the word "general," which occurs after the word "attorney." It reads "attorney-general," and it ought to read simply "attorney." I move that it be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I shall vote against this bill. I shall not do so, however, without some hesitation and embarrassment, for I deeply regret the necessity for differing with so many of my party associates on this floor; but I do not consider this a political question, and I am so firmly convinced "our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets" that I can not see my way clear to do otherwise than to express my dissent to the tariff features of this bill by voting against it. While my own view on this subject is a matter of no great concern, it is some satisfaction to me to know that the overwhelming sentiment of the people of my State is in accord with the view I entertain and they indorse the vote I propose to cast.

The State of Oregon, which I have the honor in part to represent, is intensely in earnest in its demand for free commercial intercourse between this country and Puerto Rico, and the people of my State are especially insistent in their demand for fair dealing with the people of the island of Puerto Rico. They can not understand why we should refuse to do that which was promised and which every consideration of good faith requires should be done.

I am not prepared to say that the legislation which the Republican majority in this Congress seem determined to enact, in violation of the pledges made to the people of Puerto Rico, will cause a loss of the State of Oregon to the Republican party in November next, but I do say, and I say it with much confidence, that if there is any one act of this Congress that will render doubtful the vote of that State it is the passage of this bill in its present form, by which it is proposed to repudiate the pledges heretofore made to the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SIMON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator says that if we pass this bill we will violate pledges made to Puerto Rico. What pledge? Will the Senator kindly specify a single one made to Puerto Rico that this bill will be a violation of?

Mr. SIMON. The pledges that were made by General Miles when he entered the island of Puerto Rico and gave assurances to those people which are wholly inconsistent with this proposed legislation.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not so understand it. I do not know of any language which General Miles employed except that in his proclamation in which he stated we had come to promote prosperity and bestow upon those people the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government. Now, what single thing that General Miles promised is denied to the people of Puerto Rico by this bill? I have heard that statement over and over again here in the Senate and elsewhere, but I have never heard any man point out a pledge given by General Miles or anybody else that this bill violates in the slightest degree.

Mr. SIMON. The language referred to by the Senator from Ohio and the assurances given by General Miles, which were supplemented by the honorable Secretary of War and subsequently by the President of the United States, are what I have reference to.

Mr. FORAKER. I will state to the Senator, if he will allow me a moment—I do not want to interrupt him especially at this late hour—that the Secretary of War made no pledge to anybody.

Mr. PETTUS. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Ohio has not had the permission of the gentleman occupying the floor or the recognition of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. SIMON. I consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was understood that the Senator from Oregon yielded to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Oregon to yield, and the Senator from Oregon says he did yield, and I understood the Chair to recognize me. I submit that the Senator from Alabama was out of order.

In the language employed by the Secretary of War there is no pledge given; and if there had been, it could not have been in the nature of a pledge. It was nothing but a recommendation.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me?

Mr. FORAKER. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. How could the Secretary of War or the general in Puerto Rico complicate at all or commit the United States any more than they could in the Philippines to a permanent Congressional policy?

Mr. FORAKER. The suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin is well taken.

Mr. SPOONER. We have had in the Philippines the talks of consuls and the talks of this man and that man and the letters of this man and that man.

Mr. FORAKER. It was the business of General Miles to carry the flag into Puerto Rico, but not his business to lay down any policy by which the Congress should be bound.

Mr. SPOONER. General Sherman undertook to do that. He was a very great soldier, but he did not succeed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SIMON. I do.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that the point of the Senator from Oregon is not whether General Miles had a right to make promises, or the Secretary of War had a right to make promises, or the President had a right to make promises, but that General Miles had made promises, and the Senator from Ohio and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin immediately proceed to reply that they had no right to do it. I did not myself believe that any promise had been made which had in fact been violated. But the point of the Senator from Oregon is clear and distinct that they had made promises, to which the answer of the other two Senators is that they had no right to do it. Which is the fact?

Mr. SPOONER. There are two things about that. First, they had no right to do it, and, second, they did not do it.

Mr. FORAKER. They did not do it. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct in his answer.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is intelligible, but the prior answer of the Senator was not intelligible.

Mr. SPOONER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire for making the whole business intelligible.

Mr. CHANDLER. I always endeavor to do it whenever the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Wisconsin need correction or instruction; but I certainly thought the Senator from Oregon was entitled to make his point, and demonstrate it if he could, that promises of this sort had been made. I did not think they had been.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to say one word and to ask for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SIMON. I yield to all Senators, and to each one of them.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to ask my friend the Senator from Oregon to state, if he will kindly, what General Miles promised to the people of Puerto Rico greater than is enjoyed by the people of the District of Columbia, the capital of the nation. If he made any such promise I hope our friend will inform us.

Mr. PETTUS. I rise to a point of order; not exactly a point of order, but I desire some information from the Senator from Oregon, if he will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SIMON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I wish to ask this question: Do you not think it would be best, considering the hour, for Senators to allow you the few minutes you have in which to make this discussion for yourself, without all these wonderfully wise interruptions?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Presiding Officer will sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SIMON. I prefer to go on, if it is agreeable to Senators. None of us differ about the assurances given by General Miles to the people of Puerto Rico. We may construe them differently. I construe them one way, and the distinguished Senator from Ohio construes them differently. I may be wrong. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio is wrong. I do not know who is right. We must each construe those utterances and construe the proclamation made by General Miles as we think it is entitled to be construed.

Mr. President, I am not so pessimistic as to believe that the enactment of this legislation will result in the defeat of the Republican candidate for President in November, although I have no doubt that a very large element of the Republican party will be greatly disappointed with the enactment of this tariff legislation, and that it will lose to that party many votes that it otherwise would receive; but I have an abiding confidence that very many of the people offended by this proposed legislation, especially the business element and the conservative people of this country, upon sober second thought will never consent to turn the administration of governmental affairs over to Mr. Bryan and his associates upon a platform akin to that adopted at Chicago in 1896, and that notwithstanding what I conceive to be a serious party blunder, President McKinley will be triumphantly reelected in November next.

Mr. President, in my opposition to this measure, I of course address myself entirely to the tariff features of this bill. I have no fault to find with those features of the bill which provide for a civil government for Puerto Rico. These provisions have my hearty approval, and I regret that they are so connected with the tariff legislation that I am compelled to vote against the civil government features of the bill in order to make my opposition to the tariff provisions effective.

I shall not discuss the constitutional phase of this question. It is a matter of indifference to me, so far as my action upon this bill is concerned, whether Congress has or has not the constitutional power to legislate in this manner. I oppose the tariff features in this bill because it is unfair, unjust to the people of Puerto Rico, and in violation of the promises made to them.

In the acquisition of Puerto Rico we assumed obligations which can not be evaded. In my judgment it is unworthy of this great country to do otherwise than faithfully comply with every assurance given to the people of Puerto Rico when General Miles and his army landed upon that island. In his proclamation to the people of Puerto Rico, General Miles said, referring to the military forces that came to occupy the island:

> They bring you the fostering arm of a nation of free people, whose greatest power is in its justice and humanity to all those living within its fold. * * * We have not come to make war upon the people of a country that for centuries has been oppressed, but, on the contrary, to bring you protection, not only to yourselves, but to your property, to promote your prosperity and bestow upon you the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government.

What does this language mean if not that the people of Puerto Rico should enjoy the same rights, the same privileges, the same immunities, and the same benefits, and be subject only to the same conditions and limitations that the people of the United States enjoy and are subject to? Whether General Miles had authority to bind this Government need not now be considered. As against a small and helpless country we are in no position to assert, even if we cared to do so, that we are not bound by the assurances given or the promises made by General Miles.

I have, however, yet to hear of any department of this Government, or any of the executive officers of this Government, repudiating the assurances given or the promises made by General Miles, and until this legislation was proposed I had never heard of any contention made that by the annexation of Puerto Rico trade relations between that island and this country were to be conducted otherwise than upon a free commercial basis or that the island would receive different treatment from that accorded to other territory of this nation. What right have we now to repudiate these assurances given to the people of Puerto Rico by General Miles and subsequently indorsed not only by the Secretary of War, but by the President?

Mr. President, who is it that opposes the performance of "our plain duty" to the people of Puerto Rico? The clamor about the Capitol from the "protected interests" must not be taken for the voice of the American people.

Almost the entire press of this country, which strongly reflects the sentiment of the people throughout the nation, demands the abolition of all customs tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico. A very insignificant number of the leading newspapers oppose this demand.

No question in recent years has arisen that has been so thoroughly discussed by the press, nor upon which it has been so thoroughly united, as that concerning our proper treatment of Puerto Rico, nearly every one of the leading newspapers insisting upon admission to this country free of duty of all the products of the island of Puerto Rico. Is there any stronger evidence of the sentiment of the people of this country upon this all-absorbing topic than is to be found in the daily utterances of the press of the country? Can it be possible that the majority of the press, as well as the majority of the people of this country, are wrong upon this great and all-absorbing question?

If we can not afford to permit Puerto Rico to have free commercial intercourse with the rest of this country, it is high time for us to declare that we are incapable of either governing or protecting that island, and we should haul down our flag and abandon our efforts to do either. We have no right to hold Puerto Rico unless we are willing to permit free commercial relations, as the people of that island believed they were to have. This country never has held in the past and never can hold territory as a political dependency and subject to unequal taxation.

The people of Puerto Rico are now under our flag and subject to our jurisdiction and entitled to considerate and humane protection and fair and generous treatment, and therefore sentiment and public policy alike forbid that we should hold them for colonial exploitation and profit.

Mr. President, the proposition to discriminate against the people of Puerto Rico by the imposition of this 15 per cent of the Dingley tariff upon a limited number of articles is, in my judgment, wrong in principle. It is not protection, because it does not protect a single industry that requires protection or that would thereby obtain protection. It is not free trade, because it imposes what I conceive to be an iniquitous charge and burden upon the island.

It is neither free trade nor protection. It simply deprives the people of Puerto Rico of the right that they had every reason to believe they would have in common with our people, to trade with every portion of our country without any tariff restriction, and asserts the power on the part of this Government to impose such discrimination against the products of that island as we may hereafter see fit to impose. This claim or assertion of right as against the people of Puerto Rico is, in my judgment, contrary to the spirit of the compact under which we assumed jurisdiction over and control of Puerto Rico and in violation of the express promise made to her people.

By the express limitation of the tariff feature of this act to a period of two years, it is clear that in the judgment of the majority of this Senate free-trade relations should exist between this country and Puerto Rico.

Can we afford to discriminate in our tariff laws against the products of any territory belonging to the United States or against any people that owe allegiance to our flag? Every principle of justice, good faith, and common honesty would seem to require that we should not disappoint the people of Puerto Rico in their expectations of fair treatment at the hands of our people.

If conditions have so changed since the 5th of December last that it is apparent now that discrimination should be made between the people of the United States and the people of Puerto Rico, and it is no longer "our plain duty to abolish all customs tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets," ought not the people of this country to be apprised of these changed conditions, the causes producing them, and the apparent necessity for violating the pledges heretofore made?

I have not been convinced, nor have the people been convinced, that conditions have changed or that there is justification for the action proposed.

I can not by my vote sanction this proposed violation of pledges made to a weak and dependent people.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to take a new departure from my course in the last nine years in this body. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I wish to submit some remarks to the Senate upon this bill. I did not oppose the arrangement for a vote. I should like to know, and have it understood, whether, if we adjourn now, I can to-morrow have time, either at the beginning of this discussion or some other time, to be heard upon this subject. Can I hold the floor in the morning?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland was not recognized. The Senator from Vermont made a motion, and yielded to the Senator from Maryland for a question, not for discussion. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to yield to me.

Mr. WELLINGTON. If the Senator yields to me I will put the question, Can I hold the floor in the morning?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator can not hold the floor as a matter of right, because that is never allowed in the Senate. There is not any doubt at all, I suppose (the Senator from Ohio will perhaps confirm what I say), that the Chair will recognize the Senator from Maryland in the morning, so that he can go on with his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Vermont, who moved to adjourn, and yielded to the Senator from Maryland, and the Senator from New Hampshire interrupted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Ohio if there is any doubt that the Senator from Maryland can go on to-morrow?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio as being in charge of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. The junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] have both given notice that they will speak to-morrow at the close of the routine business. Then, commencing at 2 o'clock, until which hour they claim they will occupy all the time, the rule of the Senate is that we will have only fifteen-minute speeches until 4 o'clock. I do not know what claims there will be for the floor. I should be very glad to have the Senator from Maryland given an opportunity to speak. How much time will the Senator probably want to occupy?

Mr. WELLINGTON. I should like about thirty minutes, I should say.

Mr. FORAKER. It is possible you can get in to-morrow morning, immediately after the junior Senator from Texas, who follows the junior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Could I do this: Give notice, if it please the Senate, that after the Senator from Texas has concluded his remarks I shall address the Senate upon this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that, except only that when we come to 2 o'clock we will pass under the fifteen-minute rule. That has been agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I suppose I shall have to take my chances upon that, and then appeal to the charity of the Senate to give me a little more time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator will have time. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me, that we may have an executive session for a moment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FORAKER. I will do all I can to accommodate the Senator from Maryland.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. I said to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], who wanted to leave the Chamber, that in my opinion there would be no executive session, and that if such a motion were made I would make objection to it; but the Senator from New Hampshire tells me that he has only one particular matter of business, to move a reconsideration which it is necessary to make now, and I yield for that alone.

Mr. CHANDLER. I can assure the Senator from Ohio that the Senator from Arkansas would not object.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 3, 1900, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate April 2, 1900.

CONSUL.

Charles E. Barnes, of Illinois, to be consul of the United States at Cologne, Germany, vice John A. Barnes, deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 2, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

SURPLUS FROM WAR-REVENUE LAW.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, requested to inform the House of Representatives whether in his opinion, based upon such knowledge as he has, the present laws for the raising of revenue are creating and will continue to create a surplus in the Treasury over and above the wants of the Government, and if so, to what extent at the end of the current fiscal year, and a like report as to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

That he also report to the House of Representatives his estimates of the probable receipts of the Treasury from all sources of revenue for those years, to wit, customs, internal revenue, and miscellaneous sources.

Resolved, That he also report to the House of Representatives the amount of internal-revenue taxes received under an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, upon articles not theretofore taxed; that said statement be itemized as far as possible for the year ending June 30, 1899, and for the nine months ending March 31, 1900.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman about that resolution before consent is given. I have not been able to examine it and only heard it during the time it was read. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not substantially the resolution introduced by myself some weeks ago, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish information in respect to the internal-revenue receipts?

Mr. PAYNE. I did not know that the gentleman had introduced any resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is a resolution pending before the Ways and Means Committee calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for that information. Does this resolution go beyond the internal-revenue provisions of the war-revenue law?

Mr. PAYNE. It relates to the war-revenue law. That is all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not hear the gentleman. The question I asked was, Did it include anything but the internal revenue?

Mr. PAYNE. It does ask for information as to the possible revenue. It does not refer to any revenues except the war-revenue law, although it does ask general information on the subject of revenues for the period.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

CUSTOMS DUTIES ON GOODS, ETC., FROM PUERTO RICO.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, requested to report to the House of Representatives the names of persons, firms, and corporations who from time to time have paid customs duties on goods and articles of every description which have entered into the United States from Puerto Rico since the treaty with Spain, with the articles and the amounts paid by each and the dates of each payment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to move an amendment on that. I suggest that the Secretary of the Treasury also inform us from whom these importers purchased the goods upon which import taxes were collected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He can not tell that. It is beyond his power. There is no means of ascertaining.

Mr. McRAE. He can find out; but make it "if practicable."

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman knows that the Treasury has no reports of that character.

Mr. McRAE. I will make it "if possible."

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I do not think that ought to go on.

Mr. McRAE. I move the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask the previous question on the resolution and the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks the previous question on the resolution——

Mr. McRAE. The Chair had stated the question; the gentleman did not have the floor, and the Chair recognized me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair listened to what the gentleman had to say.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not objecting to a vote on your amendment.

Mr. McRAE. It is hardly fair for the Chair to say that he listened to what the gentleman had to say. The gentleman from Ohio was in his seat. The Chair can do that if he chooses.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield for an amendment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to the amendment being offered, after the suggestion that I have made, that it is a matter the Secretary of the Treasury has no knowledge of or can have any of. I agree to the amendment being offered, and move the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution "and also, if possible, from whom the importers purchased such goods upon which import taxes were collected."

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52; noes 62.

Mr. McRAE. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 89, answered "present" 20, not voting 159; as follows:

Mr. FOSS with Mr. CUMMINGS.
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. FITZGERALD of New York.
Mr. VREELAND with Mr. QUARLES.

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I was announced as paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARK. That is an error. I arranged a pair with that gentleman to continue for three days last week, including Saturday, but not to continue this week.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. CROWLEY, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Speaker, on this roll call I voted in the affirmative. I find, however, that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FARIS. When I voted I was under the impression that the pair had been transferred. I desire to withdraw my name and be marked "present."

By direction of the Speaker, Mr. ZENOR'S name was again called, and he responded "present."

Mr. GIBSON. I voted on this question, overlooking the fact that I was paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. TATE. I wish to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

By direction of the Speaker, Mr. GIBSON'S name was again called, and he responded "present."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. KLUTTZ, until the 2d of April. I prefer to let the pair stand to-day, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. WEEKS, did not vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question being then taken on the resolution, it was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURKE of Texas, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAHLE of Wisconsin, for one week, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. YOUNG, for three days, on account of important business.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PAYNE. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2283) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, established in the District of Columbia a department of insurance, and the assessor of said District shall be ex officio superintendent of insurance. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to appoint in the office of said assessor one insurance clerk, at an annual salary of $2,000; said insurance clerk shall devote his services exclusively to the business of said department. Said superintendent shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to insurance, insurance companies, and beneficial orders and associations.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said superintendent to see that all laws of the United States relating to insurance and insurance companies of every description, benefit orders, and associations doing business in the District of Columbia are faithfully executed; to keep on file in his office copies of the charters, declarations of organization, or articles of incorporation of every insurance company, benefit association, or order, including life, fire, accident, plate glass, steam boiler, burglary, cyclone, casualty, surety, indemnity, live stock, credit, and maturity companies or associations doing business in the District of Columbia; and before any such insurance company, association, or order shall be licensed to do business in said District it shall file with said superintendent a copy of its charter, declaration of organization, or articles of incorporation, duly certified in accordance with law by the insurance commissioner or the proper officer of the State, Territory, or nation where such company or association was organized; also a certificate setting forth that it is entitled to transact business and assume risks and issue policies of insurance or contracts of indemnity therein; and if its principal office is located outside of the District of Columbia it shall appoint said superintendent as its attorney, upon whom legal process may be served; and the fees for filing with the superintendent such papers as are required by this section shall be $10, and for filing each annual statement, $15, to be paid to the collector of taxes of said District; and no other license fees shall be required of such insurance companies or associations except as provided by sections 9 and 10 of this act.

SEC. 3. That the said superintendent shall furnish, in December of each year, to every such company or association hereinbefore mentioned or its agent in the District of Columbia, the necessary blank forms for the annual statements of such company or association, which shall be duly returned to the superintendent on or before the 1st day of March in each year, signed and and sworn to by the president and secretary; or, if a foreign company, by its manager or proper representative within the United States, showing its true financial condition as of the last preceding 31st day of December, which shall include a detailed statement of its assets and liabilities on that day, the amount and character of business transacted, losses sustained, and money received and expended during the year, and such other information as the said superintendent may deem necessary. Any such company or association failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall have its license to do business in the District of Columbia revoked.

SEC. 4. That no fire insurance company, except a mutual fire insurance company, shall be permitted to do business in the District of Columbia unless it has a paid-up capital of not less than $100,000; and no mutual fire insurance company shall be permitted to do business without having a surplus of not less than $10,000, or to write fire insurance on property located in the District of Columbia, except in strict compliance with the provisions of the policy known as the "New York Standard Policy," now required by the said State of New York, in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"This company shall not be liable beyond the actual cash value of the property at the time any loss or damage occurs, and the loss or damage shall be ascertained or estimated according to such actual cash value, with proper deduction for depreciation, however caused, and shall in no event exceed what it would then cost the insured to repair or replace the same with material of like kind and quality; said ascertainment or estimate shall be made by the insured and this company, or, if they differ, then by appraisers, as hereinafter provided; and, the amount of loss or damage having been thus determined, the sum for which this company is liable pursuant to this policy shall be payable sixty days after due notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss have been received by this company in accordance with the terms of this policy. It shall be optional, however, with this company to take all, or any part, of the articles at such ascertained or appraised value, and also to repair, rebuild or replace the property lost or damaged with other of like kind and quality within a reasonable time on giving notice, within thirty days after the receipt of the proof herein required, of its intention so to do; but there can be no abandonment to this company of the property described.

"This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact or circumstance concerning this insurance or the subject thereof; or if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated herein; or in case of any fraud or false swearing by the insured touching any matter relating to this insurance or the subject thereof, whether before or after a loss.

"This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the insured now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy; or if the subject of insurance be a manufacturing establishment and it be operated in whole or in part at night later that 10 o'clock, or if it cease to be operated for more than ten consecutive days; or if the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured; or if mechanics be employed in building, altering, or repairing the within-described premises for more than fifteen days at any one time; or if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership; or if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fees imple; or if the subject of insurance be personal property and be or become incumbered by a chattel mortgage; or if, with the knowledge of the insured, foreclosure proceedings be commenced or notice given of sale of any property covered by this policy by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed; or if any change, other than by the death of an insured, take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance (except change of occupants without increase of hazard), whether by legal process or judgment or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise; or if this policy be assigned before a loss; or if illuminating gas or vapor be generated in the described building (or adjacent thereto) for use therein; or if (any usage or custom of trade or manufacture to the contrary notwithstanding) there be kept, used, or allowed on the above-described premises, benzine, benzole, dynamite, ether, fireworks, gasoline, greek fire, gunpowder exceeding 25 pounds in quantity, naphtha, nitroglycerine or other explosives, phosphorus, or petroleum or any of its products of greater inflammability than kerosene oil of the United States standard (which last may be used for lights and kept for sale according to law, but in quantities not exceeding 5 barrels, provided it be drawn and lamps filled by daylight or at a distance not less than 10 feet from artificial light); or if a building herein described, whether intended for occupancy by owner or tenant, be or become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for ten days.

"This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot, civil war or commotion, or military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority; or by theft; or by neglect of the insured to use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property at and after a fire or when the property is endangered by fire in neighboring premises; or (unless fire ensues, and, in that event, for the damage by fire only) by explosion of any kind, or lightning; but liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon.

"If a building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease.

"This company shall not be liable for loss to accounts, bills, currency, deeds, evidences of debt, money, notes, or securities; nor, unless liability is specifically assumed hereon, for loss to awnings, bullion, casts, curiosities, drawings, dies, implements, jewels, manuscripts, medals, models, patterns, pictures, scientific apparatus, signs, store or office furniture or fixtures, sculpture, tools, or property held on storage or for repairs; nor, beyond the actual value destroyed by fire, for loss occasioned by ordinance or law regulating construction or repair of buildings, or by interruption of business, manufacturing processes, or otherwise; nor for any greater proportion of the value of plate glass, frescoes, and decorations than that which this policy shall bear to the whole insurance on the building described.

"If an application, survey, plan, or description of property be referred to in this policy, it shall be a part of this contract and a warranty by the insured.

"In any matter relating to this insurance no person, unless duly authorized in writing, shall be deemed the agent of this company.

"This policy may by a renewal be continued under the original stipulations, in consideration of premium for the renewed term, provided that any increase of hazard must be made known to this company at the time of renewal, or this policy shall be void.

"This policy shall be canceled at any time at the request of the insured, or by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation. If this policy shall be canceled as hereinbefore provided, or become void or cease, the premium having been actually paid, the unearned portion shall be returned on surrender of this policy or last renewal, this company retaining the customary short rate, except that when this policy is canceled by this company by giving notice it shall retain only the pro rata premium.

"If, with the consent of this company, an interest under this policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the insured as described herein, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended hereto.

"If property covered by this policy is so endangered by fire as to require removal to a place of safety, and is so removed, that part of this policy in excess of its proportion of any loss and of the value of property remaining in the original location, shall, for the ensuing five days only, cover the property so removed in the new location; if removed to more than one location, such excess of this policy shall cover therein for such five days in the proportion that the value in any one such new location bears to the value in all such new locations; but this company shall not, in any case of removal, whether to one or more locations, be liable beyond the proportion that the amount hereby insured shall bear to the total insurance on the whole property at the time of fire, whether the same cover in new location or not.

"If fire occur the insured shall give immediate notice of any loss thereby in writing to this company, protect the property from further damage, forthwith separate the damaged and undamaged personal property, put it in the best possible order, make a complete inventory of the same, stating the quantity and cost of each article and the amount claimed thereon; and, within sixty days after the fire, unless such time is extended in writing by this company, shall render a statement to this company, signed and sworn to by said insured, stating the knowledge and belief of the insured as to the time and origin of the fire; the interest of the insured and of all others in the property; the cash value of each item thereof and the amount of loss thereon; all incumbrances thereon; all other insurance, whether valid or not, covering any of said property; and a copy of all the descriptions and schedules in all policies; any changes in the title, use, occupation, location, possession, or exposures of said property since the issuing of this policy; by whom and for what purpose any building herein described and the several parts thereof were occupied at the time of fire; and shall furnish, if required, verified plans and specifications of any building, fixtures, or machinery destroyed or damaged; and shall also, if required, furnish a certificate of the magistrate or notary public (not interested in the claim as a creditor or otherwise, nor related to the insured) living nearest the place of fire, stating that he has examined the circumstances and believes the insured has honestly sustained loss to the amount that such magistrate or notary public shall certify.

"The insured, as often as required, shall exhibit to any person designated by this company all that remains of any property herein described, and submit to examinations under oath by any person named by this company, and subscribe the same; and, as often as required, shall produce for examination all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers, or certified copies thereof if originals be lost, at such reasonable place as may be designated by this company or its representative, and shall permit extracts and copies thereof to be made.

"In the event of disagreement as to the amount of loss, the same shall, as above provided, be ascertained by two competent and disinterested appraisers, the insured and this company each selecting one, and the two so chosen shall first select a competent and disinterested umpire; the appraisers together shall then estimate and appraise the loss, stating separately sound value and damage, and, failing to agree, shall submit their differences to the umpire; and the award in writing of any two shall determine the amount of such loss; the parties thereto shall pay the appraiser respectively selected by them and shall bear equally the expenses of the appraisal and umpire.

"This company shall not be held to have waived any provision or condition of this policy or any forfeiture thereof by any requirement, act, or proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or to any examination herein provided for; and the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss herein required have been received by this company, including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required.

"This company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss on the described property, or for loss by and expense of removal from premises endangered by fire, than the amount hereby insured shall bear to the whole insurance, whether valid or not, or by solvent or insolvent insurers, covering such property, and the extent of the application of the insurance under this policy or of the contribution to be made by this company in case of loss, may be provided for by agreement or condition written hereon or attached or appended hereto. Liability for reinsurance shall be as specifically agreed hereon.

"If this company shall claim that the fire was caused by the act or neglect of any person or corporation, private or municipal, this company shall, on payment of the loss, be subrogated to the extent of such payment to all right of recovery by the insured for the loss resulting therefrom, and such right shall be assigned to this company by the insured on receiving such payment.

"No suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements, nor unless commenced within twelve months next after the fire.

"Wherever in this policy the word 'insured' occurs it shall be held to include the legal representative of the insured, and wherever the word 'loss' occurs it shall be deemed the equivalent of 'loss or damage.'

"If this policy be made by a mutual or other company having special regulations lawfully applicable to its organization, membership, policies, or contracts of insurance, such regulations shall apply to and form a part of this policy, as the same may be written or printed upon, attached, or appended hereto.

"This policy is made and accepted subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions, together with such other provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed hereon or added hereto, and no officer, agent, or other representative of this company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached.

"In witness whereof, this company has executed and attested these presents this —— day of ——, 19—."

This policy shall not be valid until countersigned by the duly authorized agent of the company at Washington, D. C.

And all insurance companies or associations of every description licensed to do business in said District shall be required to maintain a reinsurance reserve fund equal to 50 per cent of all premiums on unexpired fire risks having one year or less to run, pro rata in proportion for all premiums on unexpired fire risks having more than one year to run, and the entire premium on unexpired marine risks, and whenever any such company or association not excepted from the operations of this act shall become insolvent or impaired to the extent of 25 per cent of its capital stock it shall be the duty of the superintendent to suspend its license, and unless such impairment or insolvency shall be made good within sixty days thereafter it shall be the duty of the superintendent of insurance to revoke its license to do business in said District; and it shall be unlawful for any insurance company or association of any description to do business in the District of Columbia without a license, or to continue business after the revocation of its license; or, if organized outside of the District of Columbia, to write fire insurance, except through its licensed agent in said District, and any such company or association violating this provision shall be liable to a penalty of $20 for each day it transacts business without such license, the sum to be recovered by the Commissioners of said District by suit in the name of the District of Columbia in any court of competent jurisdiction; and any person who shall aid in carrying on the business of any such company, or act as agent or solicitor for such company, not licensed to do business in the District of Columbia, or whose license is revoked, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in the police court of said District shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, and in default of payment thereof by imprisonment in the jail of said District for not less than ten or more than sixty days; and the superintendent of insurance shall issue such license to any such insurance company or association whenever it shall have complied with the provisions of sections 2, 9, and 10 of this act: Provided, That the superintendent of insurance shall have power to make an official examination into the affairs of any insurance company or association organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, or having its principal office therein, at his discretion, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such company or association is impaired or insolvent as aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That no insurance company or association organized outside the territorial limits of the United States shall be licensed to do business in the District of Columbia until it shall have complied with the laws of some one of said States requiring a deposit of not less than $100,000, or shall have deposited in the registry of the supreme court of the District of Columbia bonds of the United States or municipal bonds the par and market value of which shall be not less than $100,000, to be approved by the superintendent of insurance and the Commissioners of said District, to be held and maintained unimpaired in the registry of said court as a reserve fund for the liquidation of any judgment or judgments which may be obtained against such insurance company or association in said court or any inferior court of competent jurisdiction in said District of Columbia; and the financial statements of insurance companies or associations required by this act to be filed annually with the superintendent of insurance shall set forth specifically the assets, liabilities, and conduct of the affairs of such companies or associations within the United States, and such statements shall be verified under oath by the manager or assistant manager or other proper officer of such companies or associations within said United States.

SEC. 6. That every insurance company or association doing business in the District of Columbia shall, through its local agents or representatives, furnish to the superintendent during the month of January of each year a statement of its business in said District, setting forth specifically the amount of its premium receipts, the amount of losses paid, the amount of expenses incurred respecting the business done in said District during the calendar year last preceding; and said superintendent shall preserve a separate record of the same in his office for convenient reference, showing the ratio of such losses and expenses, respectively, to said premium receipts; and all insurance companies of every description, except mutual companies, shall pay to the collector of taxes, before March 1 of each year, a sum equal to 1½ per cent of the said premium receipts of the last preceding calendar year, in lieu of all other taxes, except taxes upon real estate and any license fees provided for by this act, and upon the failure of any company to pay said taxes before March 1, as aforesaid, the license of said company shall be revoked and a penalty of 5 per cent per month shall be charged against said company, which, together with said taxes, shall be collected before said company shall be allowed to resume business.

The superintendent of insurance shall report annually to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on or before the 31st day of March, the financial condition of each insurance company and association doing business in said District, as of the 31st day of December last preceding.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the said superintendent of insurance to ascertain whether the capital required by law or the charter of each insurance company or association organized under the laws of the District of Columbia has been actually paid up in cash and is held by its board of directors subject to their control, according to the provisions of its charter, or has been invested in securities valued in the market at not less than the full amount of the capital stock required by its charter; or, if a mutual company, that it has received and is in actual possession of securities, as the case may be, to the full extent of the value required by its charter; and the president and secretary of such company or association shall make a declaration under oath to said superintendent, who is hereby empowered to administer oaths, when required, by this act, that the tangible assets exhibited to him represent bona fide the property of the company or association, which sworn declaration shall be filed and preserved in the office of said superintendent; and any such officer swearing falsely in regard thereto or to any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties for that offense now provided by section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 8. That insurance companies or associations transacting the business of life insurance on the assessment plan, organized under the laws of the District of Columbia or of any State of the United States and doing business in the District of Columbia, shall not be required to comply with the provisions of the last preceding section of this act in regard to its assets; but such assessment companies or associations shall be required, as condition of license to do business in the District of Columbia, to file annually in the month of January with said superintendent a sworn statement setting forth that they are paying, and for twelve months last preceding have paid, the maximum amount named in their policies or certificates of membership, when and as the same became due and payable, and that one assessment upon their members is sufficient to pay the maximum amount for such certificate or policy issued, and such other information as he may require. Such assessment companies or associations shall also furnish said superintendent evidence that they hold an emergency or surplus fund as a guaranty for the payment of future death claims, amounting to not less than $10,000 in cash or approved securities; and any such company or association licensed to do an insurance business refusing or neglecting to furnish such certificate shall have its license to do business in the District of Columbia revoked; but the provision of this section shall apply only to associations transacting life insurance upon the assessment plan.

SEC. 9. That no person, firm, corporation, or association shall act as agent for procuring insurance for any insurance company or association, or act as insurance broker or agent for procuring or placing insurance for commissions, compensation, gain, or profit, without first having obtained a license as an insurance agent or broker from the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia. Every such license shall have printed conspicuously upon its face the words "General insurance license," and for such license the sum of $10 shall be paid annually, in the month of March, to the collector of taxes of said District. All licenses for insurance companies, their agents or solicitors, who may hereafter apply for permission to do business in the District of Columbia shall date from the 1st of the month in which application is made and expire on the 30th day of April following, and payment therefor shall be made in proportion. No person, firm, corporation, or association shall allow or pay any commission, rebate, or compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, to, for, or in behalf of any person, firm, or corporation doing business in the District of Columbia not licensed as herein provided. Any violation of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and on conviction in the police court of said District be subject to the penalties provided in section 4 of this act: Provided, That licenses to firms, corporations, or associations shall be held to extend only to the bona fide copartners, and to the secretary and one assistant secretary of each corporation or association so licensed, any one or more of whom may be held and dealt with on behalf of such firm, corporation, or association for any violation of this act according to its provisions: Provided, That all moneys paid as fines under the provisions of this act shall be turned over to the proper custodian of the relief or pension fund of the fire department of the District of Columbia, to be used and accounted for agreeably to the then existing rules for the use of such relief or pension funds.

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act shall be held to interfere with or abridge the rights of any fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations from operating under the act of Congress entitled "An act regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1897, except that each organization defined in said act shall pay $5 annually to the collector of taxes of said District: Provided, That any insurance company or agent licensed to do business in the District of Columbia may employ solicitors, and the license fee to be paid for each solicitor so employed shall be $1 per year, payable in the month of March, and such license shall have printed on its face the words "Insurance solicitor's license," and shall contain the name of the company or agent for whom such solicitor is employed and no other: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to prevent any life insurance company from carrying on the business commonly known as industrial insurance; and the license fee to be paid for solicitors for such industrial insurance shall be 50 cents for every such solicitor, to be paid in the month of March in each year. Such license certificate shall have conspicuously printed on its face "Industrial insurance license," and also express upon its face the name of the company for which such solicitor is employed; and any certificate of license granted under this section or the last preceding section of this act may be assigned, upon application to the superintendent of insurance, by canceling the old certificate and issuing a new one of like tenor to the assignee for the unexpired term, for which assignment a fee of 25 cents shall be paid to the collector of taxes; and any person who shall act as solicitor for any such insurance company or agent without first having procured such license therefor, or shall solicit for any company or agent other than the one named in such license, or make any rebate or allowance thereon, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in the police court of said District, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50, and in default of payment of such fine by imprisonment in the jail of said District for a term of not less than ten days nor more than thirty days, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to prevent any life insurance company, organized in the District of Columbia under special act of Congress, but which has discontinued writing new insurance, from collecting premiums or dues upon any undetermined policies under which such company has liabilities, provided such company has sufficient assets and reserves to safely meet such liabilities.

SEC. 11. That in order to enable the Commissioners to carry out the provisions of this act a sum of money sufficient to pay the salary hereinbefore mentioned, together with the sum of $600 for the purchase of books, stationery, and for contingent expenses up to and including the year ending June 30, 1901, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half to be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia, the same to be immediately available; and the Commissioners of said District shall hereafter, in their annual estimates, include all necessary items to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 12. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 13. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the last day of the next succeeding month after its passage, pending which it shall be published once a week for two weeks in one of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, were read:

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I desire to yield to my colleague [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to make the suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that probably this bill——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, yields to his colleague [Mr. JENKINS] to control the bill, as the Chair understands. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. JENKINS. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to suggest that there is an appropriation in this bill, and probably it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Which section contains the appropriation?

Mr. JENKINS. Section 11. Mr. Speaker, in case it is found that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not tenacious about this at all, only I wanted——

The SPEAKER. The point of the gentleman from Iowa is well taken. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, if he desires to ask a question for information.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wanted to ask, referring to section 6 of the bill, what change is made by this bill in the taxation of local companies?

Mr. JENKINS. I will answer the gentleman by saying that all insurance companies doing business in the District of Columbia will be placed upon the same footing. They will all be taxed alike.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the gentleman correct in that? Is it not true that the foreign insurance company, by the local laws of the State of its organization, or where its property is located, is taxed just as the local insurance company in the city of Washington is taxed to-day, while this bill proposes a tax of 1½ per cent in lieu of all other taxes?

M. JENKINS. I will simply answer the gentleman's question by stating that the same conditions apply to the local companies here. They pay taxes on their property.

Mr. HEPBURN. Not under the terms of this bill. Under the terms of this bill they only pay upon real estate, and they do not pay upon their capital, because 1½ per cent on gross receipts of the company is received in lieu of all taxes.

Mr. JENKINS. We do not know at present anything about the laws of the several States, but the object is to place them all on the same footing, and not to give a foreign company an advantage over the local companies here. Now, I will say, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. JENKINS. I will make a statement with reference to this matter, and if I do not answer in my statement all the questions that gentleman desires to ask, I shall be very glad to yield for the purpose of asking any question that may be asked with reference to it.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I simply wanted to inquire if the committee heard the insurance companies of the country generally?

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to my friend that all the companies which he has the honor to represent were heard by this committee on every question which is involved in this bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Did they appear by counsel? Were they represented by counsel?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; they were represented by able lawyers, as well as by their local agents.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Did they consent to the rate of taxation provided in section 6?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, they never have dissented, except so far as our attention has been called to it this morning. Now I will make the statement that I intended to make.

Mr. Speaker, some time ago the board of underwriters of the city of Washington came before the Committee on the District of Columbia and asked that a department of insurance be created in the District of Columbia for the purpose of governing all the companies doing an insurance business in this District.

We were then advised, and I now assert, that every single insurance company doing business in the District of Columbia was represented at that meeting, and again this morning we were informed by the gentleman who has charge of the insurance business in the District of Columbia that every single company was represented at the hearing, and that not a company or a gentleman representing a company dissented from any of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Did they not dissent from the rate of taxation?

Mr. JENKINS. No, sir.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Were there no protests made?

Mr. JENKINS. No, sir; not one; not until their agents or employees came here this morning and made some comments upon it; and I said to the gentleman then, as I say now, that no one need have any fears about these great corporations, and especially the insurance corporations, of this country. They always have friends everywhere except in heaven. Somebody is always to be found standing ready to defend their interests, whether they ask for it or not.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. In the opinion of the gentleman, do they not have any friends in heaven?

Mr. JENKINS. I do not think they ought to, if they do have. Now, as long as the gentleman has seen fit to interrupt me, I will ask him what insurance companies he represents?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Well, later on, if the gentleman will give me three or five minutes, I will answer that question.

Mr. JENKINS. What I want to get at is to satisfy the gentleman that there is no harm done to these great corporations. That seems to be the fear expressed by the gentlemen who have been interrupting me and by gentlemen who have sought information this morning with reference to this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after the District Committee had given two full days to the hearings with reference to this matter, there appeared to be a substantial difference between the committee and some of the companies with reference to two of the provisions in the bill. One was with reference to what tax the companies should pay, and the other was with reference to who should have charge of this business.

Heretofore all the insurance business in the District of Columbia has been done under the direction of the assessor of the District; and the committee thought they might just as well save the District as much money as possible, and they amended the bill by wiping out the provision for a commissioner of insurance and compelling the assessor of the District to supervise it with the assistance of one clerk.

In the original bill it was provided that the clerk should have an annual salary of $1,500. The committee were of the opinion that if they eliminated from the bill the provision for a commissioner that it would be only just and proper to give the clerk who should have charge of this important work a salary of $2,000, so that they could obtain the services of a competent person to look after the work. Now, in order that substantial justice should be done these great corporations outside of the District of Columbia, the committee unanimously requested the Commissioners of the District to take the bill in charge again and to give public hearings, and information in that regard was given to the people of the District through all of the papers in the District; and the bill was placed in charge of Mr. Darneille, the assessor of the District, who now looks after insurance in the District, and that gentleman sat patiently for over two weeks listening to everybody who desired to be heard with reference to the bill.

In addition thereto every member received written communications or had personal interviews with gentlemen with reference to it, and all of the same were referred to the assessor of the District, and that gentleman assured the committee that everyone who desired to be heard upon the bill was given a patient hearing, even to the extent, as he said, of giving them an audience on Sunday. The bill as amended, in the meantime, came back to the committee again, and then public announcement was made of the fact that the committee would again hear any gentlemen who desired to be heard, and a very patient hearing was given to everybody who appeared. Some ladies of the District appeared, because they were interested in some beneficiary company, and after the hearings were closed this bill was reported back to this House.

Now, I want to assert that up until last Saturday morning not a single objection came to the committee or to those members who had the immediate charge of the bill, and as far as I am able to learn from every member of the committee, up until Saturday morning not an objection was made.

The assessor of the District said this morning, in the presence of the clerk of this committee, who now sits by my side, that every single insurance company doing business in the District of Columbia had, through its agent, given approval to this bill and was satisfied with its provisions.

Now, the bill as presented created a department of insurance under the direction of the assessor, who is made ex officio superintendent of insurance, and, as I said, by the terms of the bill is allowed one insurance clerk, who shall be an expert on insurance and who shall devote all of his time and energy to the insurance business.

Heretofore there has been no law governing the insurance business in the District, no supervision whatever except that said companies are required to make 1 per cent returns on their gross receipts; and to the public mind the insurance business has been in a chaotic condition; whereas the bill presented requires said companies to make sworn returns of the business transacted in the District, to file copies of their charters or articles of incorporation with the superintendent of insurance, who shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to insurance, insurance companies, and beneficial orders and associations. The superintendent shall see that all laws of the United States relating to all classes of insurance companies are faithfully executed.

The superintendent of insurance shall act as attorney for companies whose principal office is located outside of said District, for the purpose of having some one designated, who is accessible, upon whom legal process can be served.

The bill, although not intended as a revenue bill, does increase the District revenues somewhat. It provides rules and regulations for the protection of good, reliable companies, and shuts out irresponsible or what are known as "wild-cat" companies, whose existence is on paper only, and thereby is a great source of protection to all classes, more especially the ignorant, who are more susceptible to being defrauded.

The adoption in this bill of the "New York Standard Policy" in itself is of manifold benefit to the insured, as well as to the reliable insurance companies, by protecting poor, ignorant people who have been known to pay out money for insurance which they believed to be good, but which would contain conditions that would invalidate the contract on a mere technicality, and this bill will remove such companies from the community and enable the reliable companies to do the business and thus be a benefit all around.

The office of the assessor of the District is flooded with inquiries about certain companies doing business in the community and from the lack of supervision can not intelligently answer.

This bill also provides that the superintendent of insurance shall revoke the license of any company failing to comply with the terms or requirements of this act; also provides for a small license fee for solicitors and brokers, so as to have them registered and under the supervision of the superintendent, thus insuring the public from being imposed upon by unscrupulous persons, as every solicitor must show his license before he can receive his fee or commission, which license states plainly across its face the name of the solicitor and the name of the company he represents.

This bill has been scrutinized by the officers of some of the largest States in the Union and approved. It meets with the approval of all parties interested in the business of insurance, and is also recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the assessor, who is ex officio superintendent of insurance by the provisions of this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the insurance companies during the last year paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia the sum of $22,587.72. It is estimated that the present bill will increase the payment some $15,000.

As stated heretofore, the foreign companies have been paying 1 per cent on their gross receipts. At present, under the general law, the local or domestic companies, or those companies organized in the District of Columbia, have been paying 1½ per cent and an additional one-half per cent tax on the capital stock, besides paying on real estate, while the foreign companies, or the companies whose home office is outside of the District, have been paying 1 per cent on gross receipts. Now, I made that statement a short time ago to one gentleman who appears to be opposed to this bill, and he denied the accuracy of that statement. I hastily telephoned to a gentleman in the office of the District of Columbia and I have received this reply, which I desire the Clerk to read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ASSESSOR, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 2, 1900.

DEAR JUDGE: In reply to your inquiry, I would state that the rate charged for fire insurance by some of the insurance companies in the District of Columbia is in excess of the amount charged by the same companies in other cities. The companies claim that the conditions in each city govern the rate, and that very few cities have the same rate, and I am of the opinion that we can not at this time suggest any regulation tending to govern these conditions. Life insurance companies, as far as I am able to learn, have the same rate for insurance in every State. The law at present requires home companies or companies organized in the District of Columbia to pay 1½ per cent personal tax and an additional one-half per cent license tax on their capital stock, besides paying on their real estate, while foreign companies or companies with their home offices situated outside of the District of Columbia only pay 1 per cent on their premium receipts.

Very respectfully, yours,
H. H. DARNEILLE,
Assessor District of Columbia.

Hon. JOHN J. JENKINS,
Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives United States.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment here increasing the amount that shall be paid by foreign companies has not been introduced here by the committee for the purpose of discriminating against foreign companies and in favor of local companies. That question was not presented to the committee by the local companies; but for years the attention of the District Committee has been called to the gross inequality in the amount paid by those companies, and this is the first opportunity that the committee has had to take the matter up and present it to the House. Now, then, bear in mind that up to this time the foreign companies have never paid but 1 per cent upon their gross receipts, and that the local companies up to this time have steadily paid 1½ per cent as against 1 per cent paid by the foreign companies, and in addition thereto the local companies have paid, as stated in the letter just read, one-half of 1 per cent license on capital stock, besides paying a tax on all their real estate.

Now, I find by an examination this morning that four States in the Union assess foreign companies [illegible] amount upon the premiums paid, and that all the remaining [illegible] to the penalties by three, charge 1½ per cent. I can not see why any foreign company should be permitted to come in here and do business upon less terms than the local companies. I have no fears and no sympathy for those companies, and I do not propose to stand here and advocate a doctrine that they should be permitted to come here and do business upon less terms than local companies.

In addition thereto we are credibly informed by a gentleman who understands the business throughout the country, one of the best insurance experts in the country, who said this morning, in the presence of the clerk sitting by my side, that all foreign companies that are seeking to come in here by paying 1 per cent are charging less for insurance in their respective States than they charge the people of the District of Columbia.

Now, I do not propose to make any attack upon these companies, and a single word would not have been said if it had not been for the fact that so many gentlemen, apparently interested in these great corporations, have been asking if it is not an outrage to charge these great companies the small increase of one-half per cent that have got so much money now that they do notk now what to do with it. In addition thereto, let me say to the gentlemen who seem so solicitous about them that you need not fear for them; they are not paying two-thirds as much tax outside of the District of Columbia as they ought to pay. I guarantee that none of them is paying 33 per cent, against the laboring man and the poor man who has only a little house and perhaps a horse, who pays fully 100 per cent.

I do not want to shed any tears over these great companies who ask to come in here and do business in competition with local companies by paying less. They ought to be all used alike. One gentleman went so far as to say just now that if this House or this Congress insisted upon making this a law and compelling these great companies to pay 1½ per cent upon their premiums they would not come here. I simply said to him, as everybody has had to say upon occasions of this kind, Let them stay out; we shall not shed any tears if they do not want to stay here and do business. If these great institutions can not come here and compete with little struggling companies, they had better stay out. And I assured him that there was not the slightest danger that they would be driven from this field.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. If the gentleman will allow me, how many local insurance companies are there doing business in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JENKINS. I do not know the number.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Can not the gentleman state roughly?

Mr. JENKINS. I would not like to say. I will now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. My colleague [Mr. RUSSELL] has an amendment to offer, I believe.

Mr. JENKINS. That would not be in order now.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin if he proposes to allow any time for those who have criticisms on the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. I will allow the gentleman in charge of the bill to answer that question, because time has only been yielded to me. As far as I am personally concerned, if any gentleman desires to defend these great corporations, I should say give them all the time they wanted.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that there are corporations in the city of Washington as well as in Connecticut or New York.

Mr. JENKINS. I yielded to the gentleman for a question; and if he does not desire to ask the question, I will yield back my time.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The gentleman from Wisconsin has seen fit in his speech to attack the great insurance institutions of the country. He has been pleased to say that there is no place in heaven for insurance managers. [Laughter.] If we have any great beneficent, humane interests in this country, they are the life and fire insurance companies.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman had heard what I said, he would know that I made no reference to insurance companies; I spoke of the great corporations in general.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The only corporations we have under discussion here are the insurance corporations. They are the great corporations, and are second only in importance as beneficent and humane institutions to the great educational interests of the country.

Now, the gentleman asked me what companies I represent. I represent companies located in the city of Hartford—the Connecticut Mutual Life, the Ætna Life, the Phœnix Life, and the Hartford Life insurance companies; the Ætna, the Hartford, the Phœnix, the National, and the Orient fire insurance companies; the Hartford Steam Boiler Insurance Company; the Ætna Indemnity Company. These companies have an aggregate capital and assets of more than $200,000,000.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not remember the names of all these companies. I simply asked my question for the purpose of discovering, if possible, whether all the companies appeared.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I wish it understood that I am not the agent or stockholder in these companies. Hartford insurance companies not only have a national reputation, but they are known and do business in Spanish America and in Europe. As has been suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, they are abundantly able to take care of themselves. The gentleman intimates that in doing business in the District of Columbia they have an advantage over the local companies. I venture to say that if the insurance companies of Hartford should be shut out of the District of Columbia, there would be a petition coming up to this committee asking for their readmission. They get the cream of this business all over the country. Speaking of our fire insurance companies, the question is how little business they shall do rather than how much. They might easily double the amount of their business in the large cities of the country—in New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, and others.

Regarding the question of taxation, these companies all pay heavy local taxes. The insurance companies of Connecticut pay nearly one-fourth of our State taxes. They are taxed by the State to the amount of over one-half a million dollars annually. In addition to this, they pay local taxes upon their real estate and upon the market value of their stock. The taxes paid in the State of Connecticut by our State insurance companies amount to millions of dollars in the aggregate. In the District of Columbia the companies pay, under the somewhat burlesque system of taxation which prevails here, taxing only real estate and that but a nominal tax, less than in any State of the Union.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to correct the gentleman, if he will permit me.

Mr. SPERRY. Will not my colleague [Mr. HENRY of Connecticut] inform the House what the rates of taxation in Connecticut are upon foreign companies doing business in that State?

Mr. JENKINS. I was going to say that perhaps the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] overlooks the statement which has been made here, that the local companies have heretofore been paying 1½ per cent and the foreign companies 1 per cent. And in addition to the 1½ per cent paid by the domestic companies they pay one-half per cent license tax on their capital stock. And there is no possible way in which they can avoid it. Admitting that some people here in the District have escaped taxation upon their personal property (which is entirely wrong), these local companies have not been escaping their taxation, but have paid in full, because the amount of their stock was very easily ascertained. So that the gentleman's criticism, so far as that is concerned, is not well founded.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Connecticut is one of the three States which the gentleman excepted.

Mr. SPERRY. Has not my colleague a statement of the rates charged in our State?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Our rate is very much less.

Mr. SPERRY. About one-fourth of 1 per cent.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. About one-fourth of 1 per cent. This bill is all right in most respects. I can readily understand that it is a bill satisfactory to the insurance companies. It provides for an insurance department in the District of Columbia similar to the departments established in most of our States. It provides for a standard policy, and the only criticism that I have to make with respect to it is as to the rate of taxation. It is burdensome. It will simply compel the policy holders in the District of Columbia to pay higher rates of insurance than they now do. This tax does not come out of the insurance company except indirectly. This increased taxation means higher rates of insurance for the property owners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman will pardon me a moment. I very seldom disagree with the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to any proposition that has been brought in after mature deliberation by a subcommittee. But on this proposition I did not agree with the subcommittee or the committee. I voted against this proposition for taxation at the rate of 1½ per cent because I thought it was too low. I thought the rate ought to be 4 per cent, as upon other corporations in the District of Columbia. My colleagues thought that the rate now fixed in the bill was wise; yet I have not heard any argument satisfactory to me in favor of imposing a taxation of only 1½ per cent.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. With all due respect to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], chairman of the committee, I think in making that statement he acknowledges his ignorance (if he will permit me to use that word in a mild sense) of the insurance business. Such a rate would simply increase insurance rates or would certainly drive the best class of fire insurance companies out of the District of Columbia. That would be all it would amount to, and it would be only the cheaper and weaker companies that would do business here. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take up further time, but I certainly hope the committee will consent to the amendment that my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL] intends to present, as I understand, and I hope and trust the House will approve of a change of rate to 1 per cent.

Mr. SPERRY. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin propose to press this to a vote now?

Mr. JENKINS. No, sir; we will give you all the time you want.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish the gentleman would recognize me for a few minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly; but I want to say to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] before I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, that I think he is laboring under the impression that the local companies brought some influence to bear to make this taxation equal, and therefore increase the burden of the foreign companies. I want to say to him again, as I said to the House generally, that the local companies never exerted a particle of influence or said a word in reference to this subject, but that when it was brought up and disposed of, it was acquiesced in by everybody, and it was asked at the hearing if all the companies doing business in the city of Washington were represented there, and it was said over and over again that every company doing business was represented there.

And again I want to say that, as the assessor of the District said this morning, the bill had the absolute and unqualified approval of every man in the District representing a foreign company, and it is only recently that this question arose.

Now, this question had to be settled. If taxation is burdensome, it is just as burdensome here. It is no great hardship, because if these companies do not want to do business here by paying 1½ per cent, they need not do so; but in my State of Wisconsin they are paying 2 per cent.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Then your policy holders are paying extra premiums.

Mr. JENKINS. No; they are not paying extra premiums; not at all; but if so, it certainly does not hurt the companies.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The point I make is this——

Mr. JENKINS. Why did not the policy holders, or the parties who are seeking insurance, come here and make complaints?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I beg to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while the outside companies, the Hartford companies, are paying large State and local taxes, the companies in Washington are exempt from that taxation.

Mr. JENKINS. No; they pay a tax on their real estate here.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Such as they have.

Mr. JENKINS. They can not pay on anything more than they have.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Their stock is not taxed.

Mr. JENKINS. It will not be under this bill. It is now.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Then, this is a bill for the relief, as I understand it, of the local companies.

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Every Connecticut company pays a tax to the State and every stockholder pays a local tax upon the assessed value of his stock. Here the stockholder is exempt from any taxation. I can invest every dollar I have in fire-insurance stock in the District of Columbia, and pay no tax whatever, except indirectly, unless the company happens to own some real estate.

Mr. JENKINS. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa want?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think ten minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in his fiery zeal concerning every measure that comes before his committee——

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment? I should like to know how much time has been consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] has twenty-one minutes remaining.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, if the gentleman desires to take the floor against the bill, that he be recognized in his own time. I think there are some other gentlemen who would like to speak.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin reserve his time?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, Mr. Speaker, if I may be recognized in my own right——

The SPEAKER. If there is no one on the committee opposing the bill, the gentleman from Iowa will be recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has entirely mistaken my purpose. I have no complaint to make with regard to the rate of taxation on the outside companies. I do not believe it is enough. I think that the companies doing business in this city could afford to pay 50 per cent on all of their premiums; and I say that advisedly, because I have reason to know that the rate charged here is 100 per cent greater than the rates charged by these same companies in other cities.

If you go to get insurance written here, you have to pay 80 cents on the hundred dollars for a three-year policy. You go to the city of Philadelphia and on the same kind of policy you will have that insurance written for 35 cents, or at the most 40 cents; and I was informed by a gentleman that one of the local companies here that charges 80 cents on the hundred dollars recently had written a policy in Philadelphia for 35 cents.

Mr. RAY of New York. In view of the statement that the gentleman has just made——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman if he knows that the situation and character of the property was the same in the cases he has cited to show inequality of rates?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I do not know that.

Mr. RAY of New York. In the two instances.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know anything about that. I am speaking of the usual rates.

Mr. RAY of New York. Rates charged in different places vary largely because of the character and the location of the property.

Mr. HEPBURN. But I take it, Mr. Speaker, that in the city of Washington, with its wide streets, with the character of its buildings, with its almost perfect fire department, insurance rates ought to be as low here as anywhere in the world.

I am not the advocate of any insurance company, I want my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] to understand. On the contrary, I have been a complainant all my life against what I believe to be the frauds and wrongs that insurance companies perpetrate against the people. In almost every insurance policy you will find following the contract of insurance exemptions in favor of the companies printed in small type, a great mass that will require a man an hour to read.

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill seeks to correct that very thing.

Mr. HEPBURN. Conditions that an unlearned man can not understand or know anything about, and I find in this bill 10 pages of exemptions from liability to the contract that the insurance company has made. There are in this bill 28 pages, and 10 of them are in the interest of the company, exempting them from the liabilities they have undertaken in the contract of insurance.

I do not wonder that, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] says, all of the companies were content with this bill; that all of them wanted this bill. Here you propose to write into the law all of these objectionable features that the public have been complaining against for years and years. It now is to become a matter of law that if a man inadvertently, without thought of his policy, puts an additional gas light into his house, a single jet, increasing to that extent the liability of loss, his policy under this law that you here intend to pass and which you say the companies entirely approve, becomes void. I do not want any such injustice as that to be written into the laws of the United States. And there are scores of instances that are as ridiculous as that to be found here. And incumbrance, the foreclosure of a mortgage, any movement toward a sale under a deed of trust, avoids the policy. You propose to write that into the law. I do not believe that that is justice. What I complain about in this matter——

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman have time enough to submit to an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes; not a speech.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, this is the first this bill has come to my attention. I am not an attorney for an insurance company, but as a lawyer I desire to ask the gentleman if he thinks it would be exactly just to have an insurance policy stand valid without the consent of the company with a suit going on over the property, considering the dangers to the property that might grow out of the litigation by reason of anger, etc.? Should it not be the law that the company shall be informed of the pendency of a suit, when commenced after the policy is issued, and permitted to continue the risk or not, as deemed wise?

Mr. HEPBURN. Let us look at it. Here is a man who has a home. He thinks it is safe to him from all contingencies because he has an insurance policy upon it. Somebody commences an action against him whereby a lien is sought to be established—an attachment, if you please. Now, is he to be at the mercy of an insurance company because some one, in malice, perhaps, has brought this action against him?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; not for that alone.

Mr. HEPBURN. And yet under the terms of this bill that may be the case, and the insurance company evades its liability.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I make another suggestion?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. I see you do not.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not against your will.

Mr. HEPBURN. You know how utterly impossible it is to decline when the gentleman is so persistent.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, you know this frequently occurs—that a man with a mortgage on his property can get insurance because the company is perfectly willing to carry the insurance so long as the interest is kept paid on the mortgage, and so long as no litigation is commenced the company feels perfectly safe; but the moment that a foreclosure suit is started, if the amount of the mortgage equals the value of the property, the owner of the property may lose all interest in the mortgaged property in protecting it from fire. He may abandon it; he may be as willing to have it burned up as to be preserved; and it seems to me the gentleman is a little bit unfair when he criticises this clause of the proposed policy of insurance.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would say that negligence or anything that would tend to produce the loss ought to be a defensive matter in a suit against the insurance company. But I do not believe that when a calamity comes upon a man, they should have the right to increase his calamities by destroying his rights under his policy that he has paid for. I do not believe it to be right. I want to say here that with reference to the machinery for keeping out improper companies and all this machinery, I approve of it; I believe that it is all right; but my attention was first called to the bill because of the provision of the sixth section. It was said to me by the gentleman who informed me that it was in the interest of the local companies. Section 6 is the one.

Now, I insist that under that section the local company avoids taxation upon every species of property except real estate. The foreign company has no real estate here. The proposition now is to tax all companies alike, 1½ per cent; and that is to be in lieu of all taxation. You could not get a proposition of that kind through the legislature of any of the States. In the States every company is required to be taxed as natural persons are and, in addition, required to pay, in very many instances with which I am familiar, some such tax as provided in this bill; and that applies to the local and foreign company alike.

Now, here you see 1½ per cent is paid by the local company and the same amount paid by the foreign company that has paid its taxation at its home, and that it shall be in lieu of all taxes. In that way you discriminate largely in favor of the local companies. The gentleman talks of them as infant companies—these poor little companies here! Why, I am told there are some of them with $300,000 of paid-up capital. They are rich. You look at their list of stockholders. They are the rich and influential gentlemen about this city who are thus trying to escape from their share of just taxation. Now, I want to again disabuse the mind of my caloric friend from Wisconsin and assure him that I have no opposition to any provision of his bill that is just.

I am only trying to point out to him that in his zeal to do something he has overlooked the fact that he is legislating here in favor of a class of men that need, I will suggest to him, none of his voluntary care; that they can take care of themselves; and I do not want him to pass this peculiar and significant legislation in their interest by holloing at me or somebody, "Oh, you are in favor of corporations!" I think that a man with the experience of my friend ought to be ashamed of an effort to defend a bill by that kind of—I had almost said demagogical—appeal. I am not here as the advocate of any insurance corporation. There is not one from my State doing business here. I am simply trying to point out the fact that there is a probable injustice being done in the ten pages of exemptions I am calling attention to, and in this sixth section, that makes such unjust discrimination between rivals doing business in this city.

I reserve the balance of my time, and yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that there is a general opposition to this bill as a whole. Until the rather savage attack of the gentleman from Wisconsin upon anyone in the House who had seen fit to make any inquiry or pass any criticism upon any of the provisions of this bill, it was not my intention to make any remarks. I do think that the gentleman did us all injustice in representing that anybody who criticised the work and reputation of the corporations of the city of Washington was the particular representative of corporations.

Now, this bill, as I understand it, is particularly objectionable in section 6, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. It seems to me, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has not removed that doubt, that section 6 is clearly in the interest of local companies. He proposes to make it further in their interest by an amendment which excepts mutual companies and mutual fire-insurance companies. I do not understand, unless it be that the insurance companies of the city of Washington are fire-insurance companies and are, in their influence and importance, largely mutual fire-insurance companies, why he proposes to put in that amendment. I do not understand, either, why there is equity or justice in charging a foreign insurance company, fire or life or casualty, or any other form that comes in here to do business under the provisions of this section, the same per cent on its gross receipts that you charge the local companies.

There is in every State in the Union, in some form or other, as far as my information goes, some discrimination in matters of insurance between the local company and the foreign company, in the contribution for revenue which these respective companies give to the State. I do not know why the same discrimination should not be made in the city of Washington, as it has been all along. I am not now making any reference to the amount of the per cent, whether it be 1, or 1½, or 4 per cent, as the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin, seems to favor. But there should be some discrimination between the revenue received from the gross business of the insurance companies in Washington, between the foreign and the local companies, for the plain and simple reason that the heaviest and chief burden of taxation upon any corporation, especially upon insurance corporations, rests in the home State, in the place where the company is incorporated and located and does its business.

The chief burden of the Washington insurance companies, as far as taxation is concerned, is here in the city of Washington, and when they go out and do business elsewhere, they are not supposed in equity and justice to bear the same burden of taxation that the local companies bear, into whose territory they come. This is a self-evident proposition which has been recognized by all State legislatures, and recognized by insurance men everywhere. I do not propose to criticise or question the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin of the favor which has been given——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. RUSSELL. I can not now; I only have a short time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well, and I will now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Does the gentleman think it is right to discriminate in favor of a foreign corporation because it happens to be taxed at home?

Mr. RUSSELL. I certainly do as to the provisions of this section, as far as the gross tax on business is concerned.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Do you think the District Committee would be justified in advocating such a plan as that, to let the people of another State collect taxes that were due upon business done here? It seemed to us that that would be an injustice to the city of Washington. We did not want to discriminate against one company in favor of another, but whatever tax is to be paid, as we looked at it, on business that is done here should be paid here. Now, if we tax them all alike, it would seem that there could be no injustice in it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that I quite understand the gentleman. That is what I believe in. So far as you can make the taxation upon insurance companies doing business in any one locality equitable, I am in favor of. The point I make is this: That the chief taxation, the chief burden of taxation, on any insurance company rests in their home locality. They must pay a large per cent of their burdens to that home locality for its revenue. Now, your insurance companies in the District of Columbia are called upon to do it here. Insurance companies in the State of New York are called upon to do it in the State of New York.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I would like to make just one suggestion more. Suppose an English company is taxed in England 1½ per cent, the same as this bill provides; are we going to let them do business here at a less rate than our local companies?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am a protectionist, and I am looking out for the home company and not the companies of England. I want the home companies to have the same privilege whether their home is in New York or the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Apply the same principle. If the business is done in the District of Columbia, do you not think the District of Columbia ought to be the one to collect the taxation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly, to a certain extent; but I do not think a company whose chief burden of taxation is off in some other State should be called upon in the way of taxation to pay the same revenue for the District of Columbia that the District of Columbia company pays, whose whole burden is right here. That is my point.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me a question? If I understand, he wants us to frame a tax law for the District of Columbia based on gross receipts, regulated by the burdens of the respective companies in their localities, their States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not at all. I want you to continue your taxation on foreign insurance companies in just the same way that it has always been carried on here, the discrimination being made in the same way in which it has generally been made all through the country.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman speaks of the chief burden being at home. Now, suppose the percentage in New York is one thing, in Connecticut another, in New Jersey another, and in Pennsylvania another; could we possibly place a tax upon gross receipts here and make it uniform if we are to have regard to the different taxation of different States?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course we are to make some discrimination. If we do not want to make a difference of 1 per cent, let it be a fourth of 1 per cent. If you want to increase the rate to 4 per cent, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], then let the foreign companies pay 3 or 3½ per cent, or something of that sort.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to ask the gentleman whether, when we speak of a tax of 1½ per cent on the receipts of these companies, he understood it to include receipts of companies outside the District?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly not.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask the question because a gentleman sitting near me labored under the impression from the gentleman's remarks that we were seeking to impose a tax of 1½ per cent upon all earnings.

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly not.

Mr. JENKINS. I wanted further to say to the gentleman that his criticisms on the mutual fire insurance companies are on their face fair; but the gentleman has made his remarks without knowledge of the facts that the committee had before them when disposing of this question. In the first place, there are only a few mutual fire insurance companies here, and they do a very small business. It was reported to us by one of these associations of this District that they do not take any risk exceeding $300. Their business is done mostly with the poorer classes of people. They have no property, and, as I say, they do but a small amount of business.

Therefore it was deemed wise and it seemed only a matter of simple justice to relieve them from the payment of any taxes such as are imposed on other companies. They pay $25, as other companies do, for filing their papers and obtaining the necessary license.

Mr. RUSSELL. If I understand the gentleman, the object of the amendment which he proposes is to exempt mutual fire-insurance companies; it is for the benefit and protection especially of the mutual fire-insurance companies of this District. I am inclined to think that such is the object of this whole section. I do not find fault with it, if that is the purpose of the District Committee.

Nor do I wish to criticise particularly or to question the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], and also of the chairman of the committee [Mr. BABCOCK], as I understood him, that the provisions of the bill now under consideration have the approval of representatives—I suppose they would have us infer authoritative representatives—of all the insurance companies—life, fire, and other forms—doing business in Washington. I have no doubt the gentlemen are sincere in making that statement; but my information is not the same.

Mr. JENKINS. Will you state the name of a single company that has notified you that they did not have an agent at the hearings?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I can not state that. I have here a publication of the city of Washington which came into my hands last week. It was not sent me with any reference to the bill under consideration or with reference to any matters of insurance in the District of Columbia. It was sent to me with a marked article relating to an entirely different subject pending before a committee of Congress. This publication is called Views. It is devoted to the interests of life, fire, and accident insurance. I am not particularly acquainted with the paper, but it has all the appearances of a respectable publication. It is in the twelfth year of its publication. It is devoted, as it states and as its articles indicate, entirely to insurance matters.

I do not undertake to vouch particularly for this publication or for the article which I am about to read, except so far as to say that the publication has all the appearances of respectability and credit. I want to read some extracts from a front-page article of this publication. The article is headed "Should be defeated." Understand, I am reading from a publication devoted to the general interests of insurance—life, fire, and accident. It says:

The House District Committee last month reported favorably on H. R. bill 9283, "to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia." In his report to the House, which embraced some fifteen important amendments, Hon. JOHN J. JENKINS, of Wisconsin, a member of the subcommittee, makes the statement that "this bill, although not intended as a revenue bill, does increase the District revenues somewhat."

Now, if it be the purpose of the Committee on the District of Columbia to increase the revenues of the District, and if it be their deliberate and unanimous decision that those increased revenues must be taken from the foreign insurance companies of the United States, well and good. I simply want to know their purpose. If it is decided that this is the proper way to increase the revenues of the District of Columbia instead of adopting some other form of taxation, I will consent to it. This article goes on and says:

The printed report also concludes with the remarkable statement that "this bill as amended has received the written approval of Mr. John B. Wight, Mr. John W. Ross, and Capt. L. H. Beach, Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and, after general publicity, not a single objection has come to the knowledge of your committee."

We refrain from any uncharitable criticism as to the first statement, which thus places the responsibility for the many sins of omission and commission in this bill at the door of the District Commissioners, or from again inviting attention to the many objectionable features therein, which, to our knowledge, were pointed out by several insurance men in attendance at a former hearing, and in previous issues of Views.

So it appears from that statement that the objections to this bill not only have been pointed out in hearings, but also have been published in prior issues of this insurance journal.

Neither do we repeat the argument, previously presented in its columns, that there exists no reason or necessity for the increased taxation proposed in this bill (an additional tax of one-half per cent on gross premium receipts having evidently been substituted for the $50 license fees for agencies specified in the former bill).

I do not know what is referred to by "the former bill," but I judge from the article that this bill is a substitute for an insurance bill which had been prepared and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Reference, however, should be made to a marked defect in bill 9283, namely, the clause which makes the assessor, under the direction of the District Commissioners, the ex officio superintendent of insurance, and designates the officer who of necessity will have to exercise the functions of that office "one insurance clerk to devote his time exclusively to the business of insurance."

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to the gentleman, in the first place—and I speak for the committee in their hearing, and they can answer for themselves or contradict me if I state wrongfully—that the gentleman who wrote that article does not know what he is talking about, for there is not a single provision in this bill that was criticised by any gentleman at the hearings; and I interrupt the gentleman where I do for the purpose of calling his attention to the fact that this morning, in the presence of the clerk of the committee, who sits by me, the assessor of the District made to us this statement, that the writer of that article came down to his office and called attention to the fact that the original bill should be changed so as to place this under the direction of the assessor, and therefore make it unnecessary to have the extra office created. And yet he comes in here now and criticises this one recommendation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope the gentleman will not make too long a speech.

Mr. JENKINS. I only want to make the statement to the gentleman, so he can see how much dependence can be placed on an article of that kind.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have simply stated the facts as I found them, the representative journal of the insurance interests stating here that not only in this issue but in former issues it had called attention to the defects, omissions, and errors in the bill.

I put that forward, Mr. Speaker, not exactly in opposition, but for the prayerful attention of the gentleman who thinks perhaps now there is something more in this measure than the mere whim of people who happen to live in a State where there are corporations. I was not aware that there were not any corporations in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman kindly point out to this House one single criticism that the writer of that article refers to in this bill, except this one, that it is placed under the assessor of the District of Columbia, where it has always been? What other criticism does the gentleman make?

Mr. RUSSELL. Why, it seems to me that it is the criticism that he made at the beginning that this bill was for the purpose of providing revenue for the District of Columbia. He plainly states that there is no necessity for this increased taxation except it be for revenue. He, by inference, at least, maintains the position which we who oppose the provisions of section 6 claim, that there should be some discrimination in the rate of taxation upon gross receipts between the foreign and the home companies. It is usual.

Now, not to carry that subject further, the gentleman no doubt is correct in saying that everybody who was present at his hearing approved the bill or, at least, made no criticism of it. I do not know who was there. I do not know how much they represented the home offices, but I do know that I am in receipt of telegrams of the home offices of Connecticut insurance companies who generally approve of this bill, but who make some criticisms of it, exactly in the line of this article in this publication, Views, and their criticisms were made before this publication. Now, it seems to me——

Mr. JENKINS. That is, they criticise the amount of the tax.

Mr. RUSSELL. They criticise the amount of the tax.

Mr. JENKINS. Were any other criticisms made?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is a general criticism upon the executive features of this bill, but that is not serious.

They approve, generally, as I understand it, the provisions of the bill establishing a standard policy. I rather think that is in the interest of insured and insurance companies alike. It is becoming general in all our States. But they do make serious opposition, and, as I believe, on good ground, to this increase of tax which puts them, as you claim, on an equality with the local insurance companies, but which, in fact, puts them to great disadvantage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask if the opposition to the bill desire any more time?

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like a little time, if nobody else does.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that he has practically all the time remaining and we have only a few minutes, and if there is anything further to be said, that that side should go on.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. There are thirty-three minutes remaining in the hour on that side.

Mr. RUSSELL. The time which I occupied was yielded to me by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The SPEAKER. That is the time that is being computed.

Mr. MCRAE. I should like to use some time, if I can get it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will yield some time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. How much time does the gentleman from Arkansas want?

Mr. MCRAE. Not a great deal; not over five minutes, I think.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I agree to the objections made by the gentleman from Iowa to this bill, but I do not think the most important objection to it has yet been adverted to. If insurance companies are to be permitted to organize and do business in the District of Columbia under this, or even under existing laws, we ought to protect the people from the exorbitant rates charged by those companies, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and as known to every man who has made inquiry about it.

As soon as an opportunity presents itself, I shall move this amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read. It is a prohibition against any agreement on the part of insurance companies that do business within the District of Columbia to maintain what is commonly known as "board rates"—in other words, to abolish the insurance trust in the District of Columbia.

I offer the following, which the Clerk will please read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any insurance company organized under the laws of Congress in the District of Columbia or under the laws of any State or country and transacting or conducting any kind of business in the District of Columbia, or any partnership or individual or other associations or persons whatsoever who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any agreement, combination, confederation, or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual, or any other person or association of persons to regulate or fix the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, tornado, or storm in the District of Columbia, or to maintain said price in the District of Columbia when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or a party to any trust, pool, agreement, contract, combination, association, or confederation to fix the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire lightning, storm, cyclone, tornado, or any other kind of policy issued by any corporation, partnership, individual, or association of persons aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and on conviction shall be fined not less than one nor more than five thousand dollars and imprisonment not more than three years.

Mr. McRAE. The purpose of that amendment is to prevent combinations on the part of the insurance companies to maintain exorbitant rates. It has been adopted in a great many States, and in all the States where it has been adopted it has proved a benefit to the people who seek insurance and who have to have it. There is another amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman if that is a copy of some State law?

Mr. McRAE. It is a substantial copy of the law existing in several States, initiated, I believe, by the State of Missouri, adopted later by Arkansas, Texas, and perhaps others.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to reserve the point of order upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is too late.

Mr. McRAE. It is too late, and, besides, the amendment is germane. There is one other amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand. Has the gentleman offered this for the information of the House?

Mr. McRAE. I have offered this to be voted upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has offered it, then, on yielded time. The bill is not being read yet for amendments.

Mr. McRAE. I offered it for the purpose of having it voted upon or considered as pending. The gentleman yielded to me without conditions.

The SPEAKER. If it is offered as an amendment, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I submit that it is offered as an amendment now. I have the floor for that purpose, if I understood the gentleman who yielded me the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that amendments can not be offered until the bill is read for amendments.

Mr. McRAE. The Chair has already put the question on half a dozen amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; the committee amendments have not been voted upon.

The SPEAKER. We are in general debate in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McRAE. If I am mistaken as to the committee amendments, then, of course, I am mistaken as to this being the proper time to offer mine. As a matter of information, then, I want to call the attention of the House to another amendment, and that is this: I do not find anywhere in this bill any requirement that insurance companies doing business here shall give information as to their place of business, the exact place for the transaction of their business.

Now, there is doing business in the district which I have the honor to represent here a company that claims as its domicile the District of Columbia, and for two months, on reference of a letter by one of my constituents to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, I have been unable to locate that company, and yet it states that its headquarters is in the city of Washington, D. C. Now, there ought not to be any such fraud.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will state to the gentleman that it is the intention of this bill to correct all abuses of that kind.

Mr. McRAE. If that is your purpose, you did not mention it in this bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. The very provisions of the bill will prevent it.

Mr. McRAE. I have a provision which I will ask the Clerk to read, and I will offer it when we come to the last part of the bill, which will correct that part of it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

That each and every insurance company, beneficial order, or association, whether joint stock company, mutual, industrial, fraternal, or any other kind of company or association, shall, in addition to the other requirements of this act, furnish the assessor of the District of Columbia a reference to its place of business by giving the street and number thereof; and it shall furnish the said assessor this information whenever and as often as there is a change in its place of business.

Mr. McRAE. Whatever remains of the time yielded to me I yield back to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas, in opposition to the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I am thankful even for five minutes in opposition to this bill. I wish to call attention of the members of this House to the fact that it is probably more specifically our duty to be careful of the interests of the patrons of the insurance companies than of the interests of the companies themselves, or at least as much so, and therefore I would emphasize, if possible, especially the objections offered against this bill by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. By the terms of this bill we are to enact into law a long code of conditions which we too often find is a part of our insurance policies, enjoining all kinds of obligations upon the insured; and it will be impossible for anyone to go into court if you pass this bill and plead that any of these conditions are unjust or unfair. The companies will simply set up that it is the law and we are compelled to abide by it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. RIDGELY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BABCOCK. Does not the gentleman understand that the provisions there and the ten pages referred to are simply the New York standard policy that has been adopted by almost every State in the Union? There is the policy that must be filled up by the party, and when it is written the companies must comply with these conditions. It has met with the approval of every legislature and every insurance department in the Union.

Mr. RIDGELY. I have no doubt the gentleman is correct in stating it has met the approval of the insurance companies.

Mr. BABCOCK. I did not say the insurance companies, but the insurance departments—the State departments of insurance.

Mr. RIDGELY. And these departments are largely influenced in their actions by the companies that are to be the beneficiaries of such technical conditions as are by this bill forced into these policies. In my judgment, we will do wrong, as the legislature for the District of Columbia, to force all these conditions into insurance policies. These conditions are all against the people and in favor of the companies, and I insist that it is the duty of the members here to see to it that every one of these conditions shall be stricken out of this bill.

And, further, while I have a little time left, I will call attention to another proposition in the interest of the people who must insure their property in order to protect themselves. I believe the time is coming soon, and public sentiment is already awake to the necessity of providing public insurance. I think we had better by far be legislating here to provide ways and means by which public insurance can be afforded to property owners in the District of Columbia by which the property owner may elect whether he shall pay an additional tax that will entitle him to insurance under carefully devised statute that will make the public safe as well as the insured. Wherever this has been introduced the cost of insurance has been reduced more than one-half, while the safety has been increased and the expenses of litigation abolished. I think we had better refuse to enact this law and take up the matter of providing public insurance for the property owners in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LLOYD. Does not the gentleman think this bill improves the condition of affairs in the city of Washington?

Mr. RIDGELY. If it does, the Lord pity the conditions of the District of Columbia, and pity the committee that can not devise a better bill in the interest of the people. It may be all right in the interest of the insurance companies, and it may be all right in the interest of local companies against outside companies.

Mr. LLOYD. I am asking for information. Is it not a fact that this bill does, in a measure, protect and benefit the people and the interests of the people of the District of Columbia?

Mr. RIDGELY. In a very slight degree.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that at present the people have no protection whatever against insurance companies?

Mr. RIDGELY. Well, if that be true, let us give them a better bill than the committee has brought in. This bill makes no restrictions on the charges for insurance and makes no provision against trusts.

Mr. LLOYD. Can not this be remedied by amending this bill?

Mr. RIDGELY. That is what I am talking to. I say let us vote down this bill, or let us amend it in behalf of the people.

Mr. LLOYD. For the interests of the people of the District would it not be better to amend the bill so as to protect them than to leave them wholly unprotected?

Mr. RIDGELY. I think it is better to vote to recommit it to the committee with instructions to bring in a bill providing public insurance at actual cost.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DENNY].

Mr. DENNY. Mr. Speaker, while I think there is great necessity for a general law covering insurance in the District of Columbia, there are so many objections to the form in which it is presented here in this bill that I think it very desirable that what is called the "New York standard policy" should be omitted or amended. If this is the New York standard policy, I am opposed to the New York standard. You will find on page 5, section 6, this entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, without reference to the statement of whether it is an intentional misrepresentation. This declaration says if there has been a misstatement, fraudulently or otherwise, then the rights of the insurer are so absolutely protected they could defeat any claim on the part of the insured.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I think not. I think it has been decided that unless that statement of misrepresentation or concealment is something that was intentional and material to the risk, that it is no defense.

Mr. DENNY. I want to say that that is the law, but there is no room here to take advantage of that, for you say this policy is framed in accordance with the law, and the facts correspond with the policy. In the courts of a State these things are discussed and considered, and there is room for questions of fact to be submitted to the jury.

Let me call your attention to one more point, Mr. Speaker, in this bill, where it is provided that if the insured property stands on leased ground, the policy shall be void unless inserted in the body of the policy. There is a great deal of property in the city of Washington to-day that stands on leased ground where there is a nominal rent of 1 cent, according to the old system of the adjoining State of Maryland.

I tried a case in the court of appeals in which the company proposed to take advantage of that fact, because in the policy it had not been stated that the building stood on leased ground. The court of appeals said it was not a material issue; that while there was much property situated on leased ground, the company could not take advantage of that fact. But if we enact this into a law, put in a provision that unless the fact that it is situated on leased ground is put into the policy, the policy shall be void, then the courts have no jurisdiction in the matter, because it has been enacted into statute law, and you take from the courts the large amount of discretion which they have.

Again, on page 12, it is provided that the loss shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss. The company can demand that all these specific acts shall be completed before the insured has a right to demand his insurance. Why should such a provision as that be inserted? Let the company make their own contracts to suit themselves, and then let the courts construe the contracts with a view to the laws that govern contracts between the insured and the insurer. In the form in which this bill is presented I can not support this measure.

Mr. JENKINS. Permit me to inform the gentleman that this provision was put in here at the instance and request of people of Washington, who employed a lawyer to present the question to the committee for them. One of the gentlemen stated by way of explanation that he had a while ago eleven different policies; that it took a Philadelphia lawyer to determine what one of those policies meant, and, when he got through, that interpretation did not aid him in learning what was the proper construction of the remaining ten policies. This provision, I repeat, was put in here in the interest of people of this District, and if the gentleman from Maryland had observed what the gentleman from Connecticut said, he would have learned that one of the criticisms which the insurance companies are making is that the standard policy is forced upon them.

Mr. DENNY. Then I hope the standard policy will not be forced upon them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Did I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] to say that I had stated that one of the criticisms——

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, no, sir; what I meant to say was that in the document read by the gentleman that fact appears.

Mr. DENNY. Take another instance of this standard policy, which gentlemen say is desired by people of this District. If gentlemen will refer to page 13, line 1, of this bill——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DENNY] has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire at the proper time to offer an amendment, which I desire to have read now in my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sends to the desk an amendment which, for the information of the House, will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "one," in line 12, page 17, strike out the words "and one-half."

Mr. RUSSELL. This amendment proposes to leave the tax on the amount of premiums of foreign insurance companies in this District the same as it now is. I desire to have that amendment considered as pending.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but I do wish to say a few words in regard to this standard policy proposed for all parties insured in the District of Columbia. Every person must understand the wisdom and the necessity of having some uniformity in contracts of insurance. Uniformity protects both the individual and the insurance company. If each insurance company doing business has a particular form of policy, with a variety of conditions, an individual who has his property insured in three or four different companies will discover that there is no uniformity of liability on the part of these companies or of right of action on his own part in case of loss.

In the great State of New York this subject was considered for many years. We have many large cities in that State where insurance companies are located. The interests of the people, not of the insurance companies, were specially consulted by the insurance department of that State, and finally this form of insurance policy for the State and for all companies doing business in the State was adopted as one which would be wise and just. It is written in the statutes of the State and is so well understood that every person desiring insurance may know in advance just what his insurance contract is to be. And it has led to uniformity of decision, so that the law to-day is understood by everyone. This form of policy was framed and adopted in the interest of the people, of the insured, and not in the interest of the insurer.

Of course it is competent for any person, when he takes out a policy of insurance, if he has a special reason, or if he desires to provide for special conditions, to have a special clause attached to his policy, which then becomes binding upon all the parties. The adoption of this standard policy for all companies and all people at all times doing business in the District of Columbia will be a guaranty to the people that unless they seek and obtain some special conditions (which they may do), their contract will be in the standard form and well understood by themselves, by their attorneys, and the courts. If this form of insurance policy be written in the statutes of the District of Columbia, every person residing in the District and desiring insurance will know exactly what his contract is.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that by special agreement a provision or contract can be entered into different from that prescribed in this bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. And in violation of all these provisions?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly. That can be arranged when the policy is taken out. I do that in all my insurance business at home. We have there this same form of policy, but we can make and insert special conditions.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then how are the people of the District to escape all this multiplicity of contract which has been spoken of?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will tell you how. No man need have any special provision in his policy of insurance unless he seeks it. If I want to insure my property (if I had any) here in the District of Columbia and want some policy at variance with this form—want some special conditions inserted—that is a matter of my own seeking, is it not?

Mr. RIDGELY. Or if the companies themselves should require it?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; if they require it. But in that case it is optional with the owner of the property whether he will accept that condition or not; in other words, whether he will enter into a special contract.

Mr. RIDGELY. If these companies make a combination to the effect that they will not insure unless the insured will consent to a change in the ordinary policy, then the insured is powerless, and you have nothing in this bill to prevent such a combination.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, I think any combination of that kind can be reached by the courts, because——

Mr. RIDGELY. Does your bill reach it?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, my friend, you need not repeat in a bill of this kind what is already written upon the statute books. I do not think you can compel a company to write a policy, but they can not violate the law against conspiracies when they do write one.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like about a minute more.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to call attention to page 13:

This policy is made and accepted subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions, together with such other provisions, agreements, or conditions as may be indorsed hereon or added hereto.

And it has been held that it is competent for the parties by agreement to vary the other conditions. It is wise, economical, and highly proper to have one kind of policy in use by all companies. I repeat what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, that it has met the approval of the insurance departments of all the States where the question has been up, and has met the approval of the insured everywhere, and the approval of the courts as well.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word in reference to the criticism made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. We all have a very high opinion of anything he says, but I was sorry to see that immediately after that remarkable speech of his he left the House and has just returned. Now, he called the attention of the House to ten pages of exceptions that were going to oppress the people, ten pages where the insurance companies were going to be allowed to rob the insured.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not every one of those exceptions in the interest of the insurance companies and not one of them in the interest of the insured?

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman just contain himself in peace for a moment. The gentleman fairly alarmed me when I heard his statements. I said to myself, "I thought I understood this bill, but I guess I do not." So I went off quietly in a seat all alone, not willing to admit the truth of that horrible statement, and I found that he had been criticising the New York standard policy and nothing else.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is it.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is the standard policy that has been adopted by almost every State in the Union—the policy that I had the honor to introduce in the Wisconsin legislature, and which became the Wisconsin law more than ten years ago; a policy that every insurance department in almost every State in the Union has indorsed, and which is the very foundation of legitimate insurance to-day; and, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] said, is in the interest and for the protection of the insured.

Now, when this standard policy is adopted in the District of Columbia, if a man has half a dozen policies on his property they must all be written in this exact form, without the change of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" except by his written consent. I wanted to explain to the House fully what these dreadful ten pages were.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this matter is pretty thoroughly understood. I will ask for the previous question on the pending amendments and the bill to its final passage, and, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendments that have been read for the information of the House may be considered as offered and pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks for the previous question on the bill and amendments, the term "amendments" to include all offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. JENKINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. There are a few verbal corrections that should be made. Can they be offered later, or should they be offered and considered as pending?

The SPEAKER. The previous question will shut off any new amendments, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JENKINS. Then I will ask that these amendments, which have been prepared to make a few verbal corrections, be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withhold his demand for the previous question?

Mr. BABCOCK. I have no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. I may say that these amendments have been submitted to the Democratic members of our committee, who have no objection to them.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 8, page 19, after the words "of the," the word "last" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Insert, in line 8, page 19, after the word "section," the letter "s;" so that it will read "sections."

Strike out, in line 9, page 19, after the word "to," the word "its" and insert in lieu thereof the words "taxes and."

Insert, in line 11, page 19, after the words "District of Columbia," the following: "to pay $100 annually to the collector of taxes and."

On page 20, strike out the last word in line 22 and the first word in line 23 "(doing business)."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] asks for the previous question on the bill and amendments, the term "amendments" to include all that have been read from the Clerk's desk and also the committee amendments.

Mr. MCRAE. The two sections which I propose might be inserted between sections 11 and 12, instead of where I suggested before. It would require less changing of numbers.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion has been noted.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of these amendments?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; I ask for a separate vote on one of them.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendments will first be passed upon. The Chair understands that the committee amendments include those sent up by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS]?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. They come by authority of the committee?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE]. Is a separate vote demanded on these two amendments?

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to have them reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 23, to be numbered as a new section, the following:

"SEC. 13. That any insurance company organized under the laws of Congress in the District of Columbia, or under the laws of any State or county and transacting or conducting any kind of business in the District of Columbia, or any partnership or individual or other associations or persons whatsoever, who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any agreement, combination, confederation, or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual, or any other person or association of persons to regulate or fix the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, tornado, or storm in the District of Columbia, or to maintain said price in the District of Columbia when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, agreement, contract, combination, association, or confederation to fix the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, storm, cyclone, tornado, or any other kind of policy issued by any corporation, partnership, individual, or association of persons aforesaid, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and on conviction shall be fined not less than one nor more than five thousand dollars, and imprisonment not more than three years."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to hear the other amendment reported?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. 13. That each and every insurance company, beneficial order, or association, whether joint-stock company, mutual, industrial, fraternal, or any other kind of company or association, shall, in addition to the other requirements of this act, furnish the assessor of the District of Columbia a reference to its place of business by giving the street and number thereof; and it shall furnish the said assessor this information whenever and as often as there is a change in its place of business."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on these two amendments? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 12, page 17, after the word "one," the words "and one-half."

Mr. BABCOCK. That is not very clear, but I understand that it reduces the taxation from 1½ per cent to 1 per cent. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. RUSSELL. It leaves it simply as it is now.

Mr. BABCOCK. I beg your pardon; it is 1½ on the local companies now.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. RUSSELL; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUSSELL) there were—ayes 6, noes 26.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL—VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that the minority of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads may have five days in which to file their views on some portions of the appropriation bill. I neglected to make this request this morning after having stated that I would do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads be granted five days within which to file the views of the minority on the Post-Office appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JOHN A. NARJES.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill H. R. 7479, on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7479) for the relief of John A. Narjes, of Washington, D. C.

Whereas the petitioner is about 38 years of age; he purchased property in the city of Washington, D. C., before he was a naturalized citizen; he has been a resident of the United States for the past seventeen years, and is now a naturalized and reputable citizen of the District of Columbia, and prays for Congressional relief: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased and conveyed to John A. Narjes, of said District, prior to the passage of this act be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887, and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act are in respect of such real estate hereby remitted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill may be reported again. I have not been able to hear a word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be again reported, as it was impossible to hear while it was being read. The House must come to order before business is proceeded with. Gentlemen will please cease conversation.

The bill was again reported.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill just read be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] to relieve the beneficiary, Narjes, of a loss that befell him on account of the particular facts in this case. The beneficiary was born outside the limits of the United States and came to the city of Washington some fifteen years ago. The proof shows that he was an honest and industrious man, and by the saving of his earnings he bought the property in question. At that time he was an alien, and the property became forfeited to the United States. He is now a citizen of the United States, has paid all the taxes on the property, and asks to be relieved; and this bill restores to him his property. If there be no objection, I will ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the gentleman to say that this gentleman is no longer an alien, but a citizen of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS. The understanding of the gentleman from Georgia is correct; he is a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did we not pass a bill the other day to reach cases of that character?

Mr. JENKINS. Not to reach a case of this kind, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BABCOCK. It was for those who had not become citizens.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TITLE TO LOT 1, SQUARE 1113, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill H. R. 5140.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5140) to confirm title to lot 1, square 1113, in Washington, D. C.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to release and quitclaim to Johanna C. Block, her heirs, and assigns forever all the right, title, and interest, whether legal or equitable, of the United States of America in and to all that lot or parcel of ground situated in the city of Washington, D. C., and known on the ground plan of said city as lot No. 1, in square 1113, upon the payment by the said Johanna C. Block of such a sum as the said Secretary of the Interior shall deem just and equitable: Provided, That the said Johanna C. Block pay to the proper officer of the District of Columbia all taxes heretofore assessed against said property, both general and special, now unpaid and standing against said property.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill (H. R. 5140) may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill just read may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to my colleague [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar to one that passed this House about two or three weeks ago, and disposes of the remaining part of the lot that was then disposed of. It seems that in the disposition of the property a great many years ago it was impossible to tell where the legal title to this one lot was, and since 1836 the beneficiary and her grantors have been paying taxes on this piece of land to the United States.

Upon looking up the title, within the past two years, the United States asserted title to this lot, and the beneficiary comes to Congress and asks relief. The Committee on the District of Columbia, in the other case, referring to the other part of the lot, made a report that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to quitclaim all interests of the United States to the beneficiary, and that bill provided that the beneficiary would pay all outstanding taxes and at the same time pay such sum as the Secretary of the Interior considered just. We find the same difficulty in this case as in the other one to ascertain the actual value of the property; and we thought the safest way would be to recommend that the Secretary of the Interior quitclaim to this party upon payment of all outstanding taxes and any sum that the Secretary of the Interior thought on the ascertainment of the facts should be paid.

In the examination of the other bill we found it almost impossible to tell accurately just where the legal title is, but we think the legal title is in the United States. It would be a great hardship now to take this property away from this woman, inasmuch as she and her grantors have paid the taxes since 1836, and inasmuch as this property has been sold for taxes and tax deeded. If there is no objection, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not there are any adverse claimants; whether it has been sold for taxes and there are now any adverse claimants to the lot?

Mr. JENKINS. No; there is no adverse claimant.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman inform us how much the property is worth?

Mr. JENKINS. That was left by the bill to the Secretary of the Interior. It was impossible to ascertain its value, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to ascertain the value.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, and to divide the same into two districts and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, unless some one requests it, I ask unanimous consent that the full reading of the bill be dispensed with. It was read the other day, and the objections have been withdrawn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 541 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"The State of New York is divided into four districts, which shall be called the western, northern, eastern, and southern districts of New York. The western district includes the counties of Allegany, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Chemung, Erie, Genesee, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Ontario, Orleans, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, and Yates, with the waters thereof. The northern district includes the counties of Albany, Broome, Cayuga, Chenango, Clinton, Cortland, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Hamilton, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Madison, Montgomery, Oneida, Onondaga, Oswego, Otsego, Rensselaer, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Tioga, Tompkins, Warren, and Washington, with the waters thereof. The eastern district includes the counties of Richmond, Kings, Queens, Nassau, and Suffolk, with the waters thereof. The southern district includes the residue of said State, with the waters thereof."

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge for the western district of New York, who shall keep his chambers in the city of Buffalo and who shall succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said western district as are now possessed and performed by the district judge for the northern district of New York.

SEC. 3. That that part of section 572 of the Revised Statutes declaring the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York be, and is hereby, repealed, and that said section be, and is hereby, amended by inserting in place of the part so repealed the following two paragraphs:

"In the northern district of New York, at Albany, on the third Tuesday of September; at Utica, on the third Tuesday of January; at Binghamton, on the second Tuesday of June; at Auburn, on the second Tuesday of November; at Syracuse, on the last Tuesday of April, and, in the discretion of the judge of the court, one term annually at such time and place within the counties of Saratoga, Onondaga, St. Lawrence, Clinton, Jefferson, Oswego, and Franklin as he may from time to time appoint. Such appointment shall be made by notice of at least twenty days published in a newspaper published at the place where said court is to be held.

"In the western district of New York, at the city of Elmira, on the second Tuesday of January; at the city of Buffalo, on the second Tuesdays of March and November; at the city of Rochester, on the second Tuesday of May; at the city of Jamestown, on the second Tuesday of July; at the city of Lockport, on the second Tuesday of October."

SEC. 4. That that part of section 658 of the Revised Statutes declaring the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the circuit court in the northern district of New York be, and is hereby, repealed, and that said section be, and is hereby, amended by inserting in place of the part so repealed the following two paragraphs:

"In the northern district of New York, at Utica, on the third Tuesday of January; at Syracuse, on the last Tuesday of April; at Albany, on the third Tuesday of September.

"In the western district of New York, at Rochester, on the second Tuesday of May; at Canandaigua, on the second Tuesday in September; at Buffalo, on the second Tuesday of November."

SEC. 5. That regular sessions of the district court for the western district of New York, for the hearing of motions and for proceedings in bankruptcy and the trial of causes in admiralty, shall be held at the city of Buffalo in each month of the year except August. The times for holding the same, and such other special sessions as the court shall deem necessary, shall be fixed by rules of the court. All process in admiralty causes and proceedings in the western district of New York shall be made returnable at Buffalo.

SEC. 6. That the district judge of the northern district of New York in office at the time this act takes effect shall continue to be the district judge for the northern district of New York as constituted by this act. That the clerk of the circuit court for the northern district of New York in office at the time this act takes effect shall continue to be clerk of the circuit court of the northern district as constituted by this act until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, and said clerk or his successor shall likewise be clerk of the district court of that district.

SEC. 7. That the present clerk of the district court for the northern district of New York shall be clerk of the circuit and district courts of the western district of New York until a clerk of said circuit court shall be appointed and qualified, and such clerk shall also be and perform the duties of clerk of the said district court.

SEC. 8. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of said districts shall be cognizable within the district in which committed.

SEC. 9. That all other officers who have been heretofore appointed for the northern district of New York who shall be in office at the time of the taking effect of this act shall continue in office as officers of the district of their residence until the expiration of their respective terms, or until their successors are appointed and qualified, and shall perform the same duties and receive the same salary and compensation as officers of the western district of New York as hereby constituted that they now perform and receive as officers of the northern district of New York as now constituted, but shall not exercise any functions outside of the district of their residence after this act takes effect. Any vacancies thus created and not filled by officers remaining in office or continued in office as herein provided shall be filled in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 10. That all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the northern district of New York as now constituted, whereof the courts of the western district of New York, as hereby constituted, would have had jurisdiction if said district and the courts thereof had been constituted when said causes or proceedings were instituted, shall be, and are hereby, transferred to, and same shall be proceeded with in, the western district of New York, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said western district, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or affect the jurisdiction of the district court of the northern district of New York, as herein constituted, in any case, civil or criminal, pending therein as heretofore constituted at the time of the passage of this act or returnable thereto and not transferred to said western district, but the same shall be proceeded in to final disposition as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That all motions and causes submitted, and all causes and proceedings, both civil and criminal, including proceedings in bankruptcy, now pending in said northern district of New York as now constituted, in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part, or which have been so far proceeded with as to be ready for argument and submission, shall be retained, proceeded with, and disposed of in said northern district of New York as constituted by this act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a second.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAY of New York. Does the gentleman desire any discussion, or does he simply want an explanation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like some explanation of the bill and of the amendments. It has been impossible to follow the amendments, and I would like to know the effect of them.

Mr. RAY of New York. The State of New York has 6,000,000 inhabitants. It is divided into three districts; the eastern district embraces the city of Brooklyn, Long Island, and Staten Island. The City of New York and three or four adjoining counties constitute the southern district. All the rest of the State, forty counties or more, and 3,000,000 people, constitute the northern district of New York. The northern district, as now constituted, takes in the entire northern border of the State on the St. Lawrence River, Lake Ontario, and Lake Erie, the city of Buffalo, and a half a dozen other large cities. Most of the amendments relate to the times and places of holding courts; some to retention of jurisdiction in certain cases.

It is proposed to divide this northern district into two districts, which will give a million and a half people to each district. It is absolutely necessary because of the large increase of business in the western part of the State, in the neighborhood of Buffalo and adjoining territory. I will say that petitions signed by judges, lawyers, and many of the people interested in litigation have come to us from Cleveland, from Detroit, and all those cities in Ohio and Michigan who do business on those lakes and the connecting waters.

This bill passed the Senate unanimously. It came here some time ago. It meets with the approval of the New York delegation. It is approved everywhere. It is reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. It is not a bill that I am personally interested in; it creates a new district outside and a new judge who will reside outside my Congressional district, or the judicial district in which my home is. It will give a new judge, but it will give no other new offices, except some minor court officers, because we provide in the bill, by amendment, that the present clerk of the northern district shall continue to act as clerk, and the deputy clerk, who lives in the western district, is to be clerk there. We also provide in the bill that in both districts the clerk of the district court shall also be clerk of the circuit court.

As it is now constituted, this district extends for some 400 miles east and west and over 200 miles north and south. There are some Indian reservations in the western part of the State, and being remote—a long distance from where court is held—defendants and witnesses are often taken clear across the State to Albany, and the result is that thousands of dollars are paid unnecessarily every year in witness fees. It is stated in the report, and is a fact, that the United States will save money by making this division.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. This bill does not interfere with the present southern district of New York?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not at all; it is intended to afford additional help to the gentleman's district, which is very much needed.

Mr. DALY of New Jersey. Does the gentleman know who is to be appointed judge?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; no man in the New York delegation is a candidate.

Mr. DALY of New Jersey. You might take a man from New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, the Representatives from that State are all learned and intelligent gentlemen. If we have no candidates in New York, we will come to New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was on the subcommittee that reported this bill to the full Committee of the Judiciary, and I simply wish to state the reasons why I came to the conclusion that the bill ought to be favorably reported. In the investigation of the question before the subcommittee we found business greatly congested in that district. The admiralty business which should have been conducted at Buffalo was being carried to Albany at great cost and to the inconvenience of litigants, and to such an extent as to interfere with commerce. The bill meets the approval of both members from Buffalo, one being on this side and the other on that side of the Chamber. It meets with the unanimous approval of the bar, and is petitioned for by almost the entire commercial interests of that section. I think there is a great congestion in the business of these courts, and relief ought to be granted, and this is the only way in which I see that relief can be had; and for that reason I support the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with amendments reported.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF FORT HALL RESERVATION.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and to pass the bill (S. 255) which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to ratify an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in Idaho, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect.

Whereas Benjamin F. Barge, James H. McNeely, and Charles G. Hoyt, acting for the United States, did, on the 5th day of February, A. D. 1898, make and conclude the following agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation, in Idaho; and

Whereas Benjamin F. Barge, James H. McNeely, and Charles G. Hoyt, being duly appointed and acting commissioners on behalf of the United States for such purposes, have concluded an agreement with the headmen and a majority of the male adults of the Bannock and Shoshone tribes of Indians upon the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, which said agreement is as follows:

Whereas the aforesaid commissioners were appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, under and by virtue of an act of Congress, approved June 10, 1896 (29 U. S. Stat. L., page 341), entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes," and by said act were authorized to negotiate with the Bannock and Shoshone Indians, in the State of Idaho, for the cession of part of their surplus lands; and

Whereas the Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation are willing to dispose of part of their surplus lands in the State of Idaho, reserved as a home for them by a treaty concluded at Fort Bridger July 3, 1868, and ratified by the United States Senate on the 16th day of February, 1869, and also by Executive order:

Now, therefore, this agreement, made and entered into by and between the aforesaid commissioners on behalf of the United States of America, and by the headmen and a majority of the male adults of the Bannock and Shoshone tribes of Indians, located on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho. Witnesseth:

ARTICLE I.

That the said Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation do hereby cede, grant, and relinquish to the United States all right, title, and interest which they have to the following-described land, the same being a part of the land obtained through the treaty of Fort Bridger on the 3d day of July, 1868, and ratified by the United States Senate on the 16th day of February, 1869:

All that portion of the said reservation embraced within and lying east and south of the following-described lines: Commencing at a point in the south boundary of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, being the southwest corner of township 9 south, range 34 east of the Boise meridian, thence running due north on the range line between townships 33 and 34 east to a point 2 miles north of the township line between townships 5 and 6 south, thence due east to the range line between ranges 35 and 36 east, thence south on said range line 4 miles, thence due east to the east boundary line of the reservation; from this point the east and south boundaries of the said reservation as it now exists to the point of beginning, namely, the southwest corner of township 9 south, range 34 east, being the remainder of the description and metes and bounds of the said tract of land herein proposed to be ceded.

ARTICLE II.

That in consideration of the lands ceded, granted, and relinquished, as aforesaid, the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to and expend for the Indians of the said reservation, $600,000 in the following manner, to wit:

Seventy-five thousand dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the erection of a modern school plant for the Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation at a point near the present agency, said point or site to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and the surplus remaining, if any, of the above $75,000 may be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for the educational needs of said Indians.

One hundred thousand dollars shall be paid in cash pro rata, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging to and actually residing on said reservation, within three months after the ratification of this treaty by the Congress of the United States. The remainder of said sum total shall be paid pro rata in like manner, as follows:

Fifty thousand dollars one year after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars two years after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars three years after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars four years after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars five years after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars six years after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars seven years after the first payment.
Fifty thousand dollars eight years after the first payment.
Twenty-five thousand dollars nine years after the first payment.

The deferred payments shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, said interest to be placed annually to the credit of said Indians, and shall be expended for their benefit by the Secretary of the Interior at such times and in such manner as he may direct.

Provided, That none of the money due to said Indians under this agreement shall be subject to the payment of any claims, judgments, or demands against said Indians for damages or depredations claimed to have been committed prior to the signing of this agreement.

ARTICLE III.

Where any Indians have taken lands and made homes on the reservation and are now occupying and cultivating the same, under the sixth section of the Fort Bridger treaty hereinbefore referred to, they shall not be removed therefrom without their consent, and they may receive allotments on the land they now occupy; but in case they prefer to remove they may select land elsewhere on that portion of said reservation not hereby ceded, granted, and relinquished and not occupied by any other Indians; and should they decide not to move their improvements, then the same shall be appraised under direction of the Secretary of the Interior and sold for their benefit, at a sum not less than such appraisal, and the cash proceeds of such sale shall be paid to the Indian or Indians whose improvements shall be so sold.

ARTICLE IV.

So long as any of the lands ceded, granted, and relinquished under this treaty remain part of the public domain, Indians belonging to the above-mentioned tribes, and living on the reduced reservation, shall have the right, without any charge therefor, to cut timber for their own use, but not for sale, and to pasture their live stock on said public lands, and to hunt thereon and to fish in the streams thereof.

ARTICLE V.

That for the purpose of segregating the ceded lands from the diminished reservation, the new boundary lines described in Article I of this agreement shall be properly surveyed and permanently marked in a plain and substantial manner by prominent and durable monuments, the cost of said survey to be paid by the United States.

ARTICLE VI.

The existing provisions of all former treaties with the Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation, not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement, are hereby continued in force and effect; and all provisions thereof inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

ARTICLE VII.

The existing main traveled roads leading from McCammon to Blackfoot and from McCammon to American Falls are declared public highways, and the proper use of such is hereby granted to the general public.

ARTICLE VIII.

The water from streams on that portion of the reservation now sold which is necessary for irrigating on land actually cultivated and in use shall be reserved for the Indians now using the same, so long as said Indians remain where they now live.

ARTICLE IX.

This agreement shall take effect and be in force when signed by the commissioners and by a majority of the male Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation over 18 years of age, and ratified by the Congress of the United States.

Signed on the part of the United States Government by the commissioners aforesaid, and by the following Indians of the Bannock and Shoshone tribes, residing and having rights on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation.

BENJAMIN F. BARGE,
Commissioner.
JAMES H. McNEELY,
Commissioner.
CHARLES G. HOYT,
Commissioner.

FORT HALL AGENCY, IDAHO, February 5, 1898.

I hereby certify that 227 Indians constitute a majority of male adult Indians on or belonging on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho.

F. G. IRWIN, Jr.,
First Lieutenant, Second Cavalry, Acting Indian Agent.

Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of making the first cash payment stipulated for in Article II of the foregoing agreement, and for the purpose of a new school plant, as provided in the same article, the sum of $175,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of surveying, establishing, and properly marking the western and northern boundaries of the tract ceded by the foregoing agreement, as required by Article V thereof, and for field examination and necessary office work in connection therewith, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That before any of the lands by this agreement ceded are opened to settlement or entry the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause allotments to be made of such of said lands as are occupied and cultivated by any Indians, as set forth in Article III of said agreement, who may desire to have the same alloted to them; and in cases where such Indian occupants prefer to remove to lands within the limits of the reduced reservation he shall cause to be prepared a schedule of the lands to be abandoned, with a description of the improvements thereon and the name of the Indian occupant, a duplicate of which shall be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Before entry shall be allowed, as hereinafter provided, of any tract of land occupied and cultivated as above and included in the schedule aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the improvements on said tract to be appraised and sold to the highest bidder. No sale of such improvements shall be for less than the appraised value. The purchaser of such improvements shall have thirty days after such purchase for preference right of entry, under the provisions of this act, of the lands upon which the improvements purchased by him are situated, not to exceed 160 acres: Provided, That the proceeds of the sale of such improvements shall be paid to the Indians owning the same.

Any Indian electing to abandon the land occupied by him as aforesaid shall have reasonable time, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, within which to remove the improvements situated upon the land occupied by him.

SEC. 5. That on the completion of the allotments and the preparation of the schedule provided for in the preceding section, and the classification of the lands as provided for herein, the residue of said ceded lands shall be opened to settlement by the proclamation of the President, and shall be subject to disposal under the homestead, town-site, stone and timber, and mining laws of the United States only, excepting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each Congressional township, which shall be reserved for common-school purposes and be subject to the laws of Idaho: Provided, That all claimants for lands lying under the canal of the Idaho Canal Company, and which are susceptible of irrigation from the water from said canal, shall pay for the same at the rate of $10 per acre; all agricultural lands not under said canal shall be paid for at the rate of $2.50 per acre, and grazing lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre, one-fifth of the respective sums to be paid at time of original entry, and four-fifths thereof at the time of making final proof; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be abridged, except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid.

The classification as to agricultural and grazing lands shall be made by an employee of the General Land Office under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

No lands in sections 16 and 36 now occupied, as set forth in Article III of the agreement herein ratified, shall be reserved for school purposes, but the State of Idaho shall be entitled to indemnity for any lands so occupied: Provided, That none of said lands shall be disposed of under the town-site laws for less than $10 per acre: And provided further, That all of said lands within 5 miles of the town of Pocatello shall be sold at public auction, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for not less than $10 per acre.

SEC. 6. Whereas David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States, did, on the 6th day of October, 1892, conclude an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, formerly a part of the Indian Territory, which said agreement is in the words and figures as follows:

"Articles of agreement made and entered into at Fort Sill, in the Indian Territory, on the 21st day of October, 1892, by and between David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, commissioners on the part of the United States, and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory.

"ARTICLE I.

"Subject to the allotment of land, in severalty to the individual members of the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, as hereinafter provided for, and subject to the conditions hereinafter imposed, and for the considerations hereinafter mentioned, the said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache Indians hereby cede, convey, transfer, relinquish, and surrender, forever and absolutely, without any reservation whatever, express or implied, all their claim, title, and interest of any kind and character, in and to the lands embraced in the following-described tract of country in the Indian Territory, to wit: Commencing at a point where the Washita River crosses the ninety-eighth meridian west from Greenwich; thence up the Washita River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to a point 30 miles, by river, west of Fort Cobb, as now established; thence due west to the north fork of Red River, provided said line strikes said river east of the one-hundredth meridian of west longitude; if not, then only to said meridian line, and thence due south, on said meridian line, to the said north fork of Red River; thence down said north fork, in the middle of the main channel thereof, from the point where it may be first intersected by the lines above described, to the main Red River; thence down said Red River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to its intersection with the ninety-eighth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north, on said meridian line, to the place of beginning.

"ARTICLE II.

"Out of the lands ceded, conveyed, transferred, relinquished, and surrendered by Article I hereof, and in part consideration for the cession thereof, it is agreed by the United States that each member of said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians over the age of 18 years shall have the right to select for himself or herself 160 acres of land to be held and owned in severalty, to conform to the legal surveys in boundary; and that the father, or, if he be dead, the mother, if members of either of said tribe of Indians, shall have the right to select a like amount of land for each of his or her children under the age of 18 years; and that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or some one by him appointed for the purpose, shall select a like amount of land for each orphan child belonging to either of said tribes under the age of 18 years.

"ARTICLE III.

"It is further agreed that the land in said reservation shall be classed as grain-growing and grazing land; and in making selection of lands to be allotted in severalty as aforesaid each and every Indian herein provided for shall be required to take at least one-half in area of his or her allotments of grazing land. It is hereby further expressly agreed that no person shall have the right to make his or her selection of land in any part of said reservation that is now used or occupied for military, agency, school, school-farm, religious, or other public uses, or in sections 16 and 36 in each Congressional township, except in cases where any Comanche, Kiowa, or Apache Indian has heretofore made improvements upon and now uses and occupies a part of said sections 16 and 36, such Indian may make his or her selection within the boundaries so prescribed so as to include his or her improvements. It is further agreed that wherever in said reservation any Indian, entitled to take lands in severalty hereunder, has made improvements, and now uses and occupies the land embracing such improvements, such Indian shall have the undisputed right to make his or her selection within the area above provided for allotments so as to include his or her said improvements.

"It is further agreed that said sections 16 and 36 in each Congressional township in said reservation shall not become subject to homestead entry, but shall be held by the United States and finally sold for public school purposes. It is hereby further agreed that wherever in said reservation any religious society or other organization is now occupying any portion of said reservation for religious or educational work among the Indians, the land so occupied may be allotted and confirmed to such society or organization, not, however, to exceed 160 acres of land to any one society or organization so long as the same shall be so occupied and used; and such land shall not be subject to homestead entry.

"ARTICLE IV.

"All allotments hereunder shall be selected within twelve months from the ratification of this agreement by the Congress of the United States: Provided, The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may extend the time for making such selection; and should any Indian entitled to allotments hereunder fail or refuse to make his or her selection of land in that time, then the allotting agent in charge of the work of making such allotments shall within the next thirty days after said time make allotments to such Indians, which shall have the same force and effect as if the selection were made by the Indian.

"ARTICLE V.

"When said allotments of land shall have been selected and taken as aforesaid, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the titles thereto shall be held in trust for the allottees, respectively, for the period of twenty-five years, in the time and manner and to the extent provided for in the act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes,' approved February 8, 1887, and an act amendatory thereof, approved February 28, 1891.

"And at the expiration of the said period of twenty-five years the title thereto shall be conveyed in fee simple to the allottees or their heirs, free from all incumbrances.

"ARTICLE VI.

"As a further and only additional consideration for the cession of territory and relinquishment of title, claim, and interest in and to lands as aforesaid, the United States agrees to pay to the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, in the Indian Territory, the sum of $2,000,000.

"To be paid as follows: As fast as the lands opened for settlement under this act are sold, the money received from such sales shall be covered into the Treasury and placed to the credit of the said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians: Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid to said Indians until the question of title to the said lands is fully settled between said tribes and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes by a suit in the Court of Claims, as hereinafter provided; and said court shall by its decree direct the payment of said $2,000,000 to the tribes entitled to the same.

"Nothing herein contained shall be held to affect in any way any annuities due said Indians under existing laws, agreements, or treaties.

"ARTICLE VIII.

"It is further agreed that wherever in said reservation any member of any of the tribes of said Indians has, in pursuance of any laws or under any rules or regulations of the Interior Department, taken an allotment, such allotment, at the option of the allottee, shall be confirmed and governed by all the conditions attached to allotments taken under this agreement.

"ARTICLE IX.

"It is further agreed that any and all leases made in pursuance of the laws of the United States of any part of said reservation which may be in force at the time of the ratification by Congress of this agreement shall remain in force the same as if this agreement had not been made.

"ARTICLE X.

"It is further agreed that the following-named persons, not members by blood of either of said tribes, but who have married into one of the tribes, to wit, Mabel R. Given, Thomas F. Woodward, William Wyatt, Kiowa Dutch, John Nestill, James N. Jones, Christian Ke oh tah, Edward L. Clark, George Conover, William Deitrick, Ben Roach, Lewis Bants, Abilene, James Gardloupe, John Sanchez, the wife of Boone Chandler, whose given name is unknown, Emmit Cox, and Horace P. Jones, shall each be entitled to all the benefits of land and money conferred by this agreement, the same as if members by blood of one of said tribes.

"ARTICLE XI.

"This agreement shall be effective only when ratified by the Congress of the United States."

Said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as herein amended.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause the allotments of said lands, provided for in said treaty among said Indians, to be made by any Indian inspector or special agent.

That all allotments of said land shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to said Indians within one year from the passage of this act, subject to the exceptions contained in Article IV of said treaty.

That the lands acquired by this agreement shall be opened to settlement by proclamation of the President within six months after allotments are made, and be disposed of under the general provisions of the homestead and town-site laws of the United States: Provided, That in addition to the land-office fees prescribed by statute for such entries the entryman shall pay $1.25 per acre for the land entered at the time of submitting his final proof: And provided further, That in all homestead entries where the entryman has resided upon and improved the land entered in good faith for the period of fourteen months he may commute his entry to cash upon the payment of $1.25 per acre: And provided further, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes shall not be abridged: And provided further, That any person who, having attempted to but for any cause failed to secure a title in fee to a homestead under existing laws, or who made entry under what is known as the commuted provision of the homestead law, shall be qualified to make a homestead entry upon said lands: And provided further, That any qualified entryman having lands adjoining the lands herein ceded, whose original entry embraced less than 160 acres in all, shall have the right to enter so much of the lands by this agreement ceded lying contiguous to his said entry as shall, with the land already entered, make in the aggregate 160 acres, said land to be taken upon the same conditions as are required of other entrymen: And provided further, That the settlers who located on that part of said lands called and known as the "neutral strip" shall have preference right for thirty days on the lands upon which they have located and improved.

That sections 16 and 36, 13 and 33, of the lands hereby acquired in each township shall not be subject to entry, but shall be reserved, sections 16 and 36 for the use of the common schools, and sections 13 and 33 for university, agricultural colleges, normal schools, and public buildings of the Territory and future State of Oklahoma; and in case either of said sections, or parts thereof, is lost to said Territory by reason of allotment under this act or otherwise, the governor thereof is hereby authorized to locate other lands not occupied in quantity equal to the loss.

That the payment for said lands shall be made to the Indian tribes entitled to receive the same under the provisions of this act as fast as the lands opened for settlement under this act are sold. The money received from such sale shall be covered into the Treasury and placed to the credit of the said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians: Provided, That no part of said money shall be be paid to said Indians until the question of title to said lands is fully settled between said tribes and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes by a suit in the Court of Claims as hereinafter provided for. And said court shall direct the payment thereof to the tribes that they may find entitled thereto.

That none of the money or interest thereon which is, by the terms of the said agreement, to be paid to said Indians shall be applied to the payment of any judgment that has been or may hereafter be rendered under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations."

That should any of said lands allotted to said Indians, or opened to settlement under this act, contain valuable mineral deposits, such mineral deposits shall be open to location and entry, under the existing mining laws of the United States, upon the passage of this act, and the mineral laws of the United States are hereby extended over said lands.

That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty as soon as the same are abandoned by said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, and to render a judgment thereon, it being the intention of this act to allow said Court of Claims jurisdiction, so that the rights, legal and equitable, of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in the premises shall be fully considered and determined, and to try and determine all questions that may arise on behalf of either party in the hearing of said claim; and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the Government of the United States; and either of the parties to said action shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That such appeal shall be taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment objected to, and that the said courts shall give such causes precedence: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be accepted or construed as a confession that the United States admit that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have any claim to or interest in said lands or any part thereof.

That said action shall be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim title to said lands; and said petition may be verified by the authorized delegates, agents, or attorneys of said Indians upon their information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statement or verification shall be necessary: Provided, That if said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations do not bring their action within ninety days from the approval of this act, or should they dismiss said suit, and the same shall not be reinstated, their claims shall be forever barred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a second.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, on the 5th of February, 1898, the treaty with the Fort Hall Indians was entered into, by which they ceded to the United States 418,560 acres of land. The price agreed to be paid for the land was $523,000, and $75,000 additional as a reparation for the right of these Indians to hunt in Wyoming. The right to hunt was given them by the Fort Bridger treaty of 1889, and was taken away from them in 1896.

The first payment to be made under this treaty is $100,000 within three months after the ratification of this treaty and the further sum of $75,000 to be expended in the erection of a modern school plant for the Indians. The remainder of the money is to be paid in amounts of $50,000 a year. After the allotments are made the lands are to be classified and then to be opened for settlement by the proclamation of the President. The land lying near the canal and susceptible of irrigation is to be sold at $10 an acre, and will bring about $450,000. The other agricultural land is to be sold at $2.50 an acre and the grazing land at $1.25 an acre. The town sites are to be sold at $10 an acre.

In the center of this reservation is the town of Pocatello; and the bill provides that the land within 5 miles of that town shall be sold at not less than $10 an acre. The mineral lands are to be disposed of under the mineral laws. The House committee attached to this bill as an amendment the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache agreement, which opens up 2,500,000 acres in the Territory of Oklahoma.

The bill to ratify the Kiowa treaty has passed this body upon two different occasions. It has never passed the Senate. The Fort Hall bill has passed the Senate twice, but has never passed the House. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported this bill unanimously. This, I believe, is all there is to say about this bill. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas rose.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman speaks on the same side on which I have spoken. I yield to him so much of my time as he may desire.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This bill has a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The only change made by the committee in the Senate bill is this: The bill as passed by the Senate provided a general price of $2.50 per acre for the Indian lands in the Fort Hall Reservation.

The House committee thought it best to make a discrimination as to the different kinds of land on that reservation. Some of it, which is under a ditch, we placed at $10 an acre. A good deal of it is above the ditch and is classed as grazing land. That we propose shall be placed on the market at $1.25 per acre. The land, if sold as we propose, will easily average $2.50 per acre. For land located within 5 miles of Pocatello we fix a different price from that placed upon lands on the reservation. These are the only changes that the committee has made.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CURTIS to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

MILITARY POST IN WYOMING.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill No. 1475, which is identical with House bill No. 2965.

The SPEAKER. Are there amendments by the House committee to the Senate bill?

Mr. MONDELL. There are none.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1475) to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, and making appropriation therefor.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, at the site heretofore selected by the Major-General Commanding the Army and approved by the Secretary of War. The said post shall contain not less than 1,280 acres, and the selection shall be from lands heretofore withdrawn from settlement for this purpose belonging to the United States and a part of the public domain.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in continuing the work of constructing the necessary buildings, quarters, barracks, and stables for the post established under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to complete the establishment of Fort MacKenzie, near Sheridan, Wyo.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, a second has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. It is not the business of the Chair to ask whether a second is demanded. It is the privilege of each member to call for a second. That point is passed; but if the gentleman from Tennessee asks for a second the question will be submitted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has been the practice for the Chair to ask whether a second is demanded.

The SPEAKER. But that is not required by the rule. If no second is demanded, the business goes right on. Does the gentleman demand a second?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a bill to complete the establishment and erection of Fort Mackenzie, at Sheridan, in northeast Wyoming, on the line of the Burlington Railway. The history of the location of this fort is as follows: Formerly there were two posts in this region, Fort McKinney, 40 miles southwest, and Fort Custer, 70 miles northeast. Several years ago Fort McKinney was abandoned, owing to the fact that most of the buildings were old and it was 35 miles from a railroad, and in 1897 the buildings at Fort Custer being in a condition of dilapidation which required a complete new building of the post, it was decided by the War Department that on account of the unsanitary condition of the surroundings it would not be advisable to maintain a permanent post there, and its abandonment was ordered.

This action was not taken with the idea that troops could be permanently withdrawn from the region, for the War Department immediately took steps to select a suitable point to locate troops, and after careful investigation by the commanding general of the Department of the Colorado the site of Fort Mackenzie was determined upon and the location indorsed by the Secretary of War and the general commanding the Army, and by order of the President a tract of over 5,500 acres was reserved as a military reservation.

Subsequently the State of Wyoming deeded to the United States the title to and jurisdiction over a tract of nearly 500 acres, making a reservation of nearly 6,000 acres. On this tract was erected, by order of the Secretary of War, temporary barracks and quarters for two troops of cavalry, and permanent water supply provided, at a total cost of nearly $34,000. The bill provides for making permanent improvements at the post. That this be done is the recommendation of the Secretary of War, the Commanding General of the Army, the general commanding the Department of the Colorado, and the Military Committee of the House.

Fort MacKenzie is located in the midst of Indian reservations and is 300 miles by rail from the nearest military post. Twenty miles north is the great Crow Reservation, containing 2,100 Indians; 45 miles distant are over 1,300 Cheyennes, the most warlike and untamed of American Indians, while southwest are the Shoshones and Arapahoes, numbering 1,600, and southeast, east, and northeast are the Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Cheyenne River Sioux, making in all over 20,000 Indians within striking distance. It is in the center of the favorite battle ground of these tribes. In this region were fought the only two battles with Indians in all our history from which no survivor came to tell the story of defeat.

The battle of the Piney, 20 miles southwest, in which Colonel Fetterman and every man in his command went down, and 60 miles northwest the historic battle of the Little Horn, where Custer and his gallant band were overwhelmed by the same Sioux who now inhabit these reservations. Almost on this very ground Crook met and defeated the Sioux, and only 6 miles away the gallant Connor fought the fight on Tongue River which drove the Indians back from the mountain passes.

The location of Fort Mackenzie can not be surpassed. At the foot of the Big Horn Range, at an elevation of nearly 4,000 feet, with an abundance of pure mountain water; in a splendid grass country, where supplies of all kinds can be obtained cheaply; where coal can be had at the mine for $1 per ton, and where the Government has a most magnificent tract for the evolution of cavalry, the location is ideal and the region one which should be closely guarded for many years to come.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do you think it is necessary to have this fort established?

Mr. MONDELL. The War Department seem to consider it necessary. The general commanding the Army favors it, and the Military Committee have recommended it unanimously.

Mr RIDGELY. Can you tell us how near this military post will be to the famous military bull pen at Cœur d'Alene, Idaho?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, a good many hundred miles and across two ranges of mountains. We believe with the War Department that we should have protection against possible Indian outbreaks in that country. Not that we are alarmists, not that we expect an Indian uprising in the near future, but less than two years ago the unprovoked murder of two white men by the Cheyennes caused over a hundred settlers to leave their farms and ranches and flee to Sheridan, the point where this post was established. We hope there will be no repetition of former troubles in that region, but we believe the only way to prevent it is by keeping an adequate force at that point. The War Department consider it absolutely necessary that troops be held there and that a permanent garrison be maintained.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the gentleman refer to troubles between the mine operators and the miners, or troubles between the Indians and the settlers?

Mr. MONDELL. I refer to troubles between the Indians and the settlers. There have been no troubles among our citizens, and none are feared or expected.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I should like to ask what expense this will involve?

Mr. MONDELL. The bill carries an appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will it be necessary to make additional appropriations for this post?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know as to that. I do not imagine that the War Department propose to make this a regimental post or that that was their idea. There has never been a regimental post in the vicinity. The present appropriation will meet present needs, and I do not imagine that there will be any other appropriations unless absolutely needed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This involves an immediate appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MERCER. If the gentleman from Wyoming will permit me, I believe the Government has already expended $35,000 there.

Mr. MONDELL. The Government has already expended $35,000 there, largely on a permanent water supply, and partly on temporary buildings.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is there a railroad at this point?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; this is on the transcontinental line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have given this bill some attention. It seems to me that it is exceptional so far as the establishment of a post is concerned in that region of country.

The gentleman has correctly stated that on the abandonment of Fort Custis, on alleged sanitary grounds, which I have no reason to suppose were not the true grounds, the War Department, on its own motion, owing to the proximity of the Indians referred to by the gentleman from Wyoming, utilized the general appropriation for posts and expended $35,000 for a temporary post at Sheridan, which post is now being occupied. The Crows are near by. I do not think anybody apprehends much danger from the Crows. The Cheyennes, the Arapahoes, and the Sioux are Indians with whom we have had trouble heretofore, and probably will have trouble with in the future, if we have trouble with any of the Indians. If I recollect right, it is about 300 miles from this to the nearest Army post.

Mr. MONDELL. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. The nearest Army post that is available, which is at Helena, a very expensive post and a very complete one, either about completed or approaching completion. There is railway connection with Helena. I believe the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road runs through this section, having been completed within the last two or three years. I believe it also runs through Sheridan.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In the event of an Indian war it is quite practicable to send troops from Helena, so far as they have them, and to send them from elsewhere in the United States. We are in much better condition in this part of the country, and, in fact, all over the so-called West, than we were before the days of railroads.

I am inclined to believe, from the best investigation I have been able to give it, that $100,000 would be well expended, and that that sum is fairly within the limit of a legitimate service for a post at Sheridan.

If I had been drawing this bill originally I should have put a limitation upon it. It is a Senate bill; but I express the hope that after the bill shall pass the Department will not expend to exceed a hundred thousand dollars upon the post. I believe that that is sufficient to answer every purpose.

I hope that in the future, in five years or ten years, or a little longer or a little shorter time, this post, together with other posts that were necessary and that are now necessary on account of the proximity of the Indians, can be entirely discontinued.

I did not and do not feel at liberty to vote against the motion of the gentleman to suspend the rules and pass the bill. If I supposed that this $100,000 would be used as a beginning for a post that might cost a million dollars, I would vote against it, but I can not conceive that now or at any time in the future a post of large dimensions will be required at Sheridan.

Believing that I know something of the wants in that section, from the best inquiry I can make, and from the fact that this bill only carries a hundred thousand dollars, and from the fact that the War Department, in establishing this post temporarily, only spent $35,000 on it, I indulge the hope that there will be no further expenditure than the $100,000. It will be occupied, of course, such time as it may be necessary.

Mr. McRAE. I would suggest to my friend from Illinois that we might by unanimous consent withdraw the motion to suspend the rules, and then ask unanimous consent to amend the bill, fixing the limit at $100,000. I do not think there will be any objection over here.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not catch the gentleman's statement.

Mr. McRAE. I say, by unanimous consent the motion to suspend the rules might be withdrawn, and then by unanimous consent the bill could be considered and amended, fixing the limit at $100,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any danger that the War Department will build a larger post than they need. They consider a permanent post at this point necessary, not for five or ten years, but for a much longer period of time. The reservations surrounding this post are all permanent reservations, and in my opinion the War Department will only make such an expenditure as will be absolutely necessary to provide for the troops to police that region.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am familiar with the situation. I have been in the town of Sheridan and know its location. I do not know about the question of the number of dollars that have been spent there, but that it is a post that is in close touch with the Indian tribes there can be no doubt about, and that it is desirable to have a post there I have no doubt about.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is a part of the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is within the United States clearly, according to the Constitution. [Laughter.] Whether the bill is guarded as to the amount I do not know, but it seems to me a wise and proper expenditure of money to allow an expenditure of $100,000 for a post there.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on discharging the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of this bill, and passing the Senate bill under suspension of the rules.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the bill was passed.

PRESERVATION, DISTRIBUTION, INTRODUCTION, AND RESTORATION OF GAME BIRDS AND OTHER WILD BIRDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6634) to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture are hereby enlarged so as to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game birds and other wild birds. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to adopt such measures as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to purchase such game birds and other wild birds as may be required therefor, subject, however, to the laws of the various States and Territories. The object and purpose of this act is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct, and also to regulate the introduction of American or foreign birds or animals in localities where they have not heretofore existed.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time collect and publish useful information as to the propagation, uses, and preservation of such birds.

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and publish all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall expend for said purposes such sums as Congress may appropriate therefor.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to import into the United States any foreign wild animal or bird except under special permit from the United States Department of Agriculture: Provided, That nothing in this section shall restrict the importation of natural history specimens for museums or scientific collections, or the importation of certain cage birds, such as domesticated canaries, parrots, or such other species as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate.

The importation of the mongoose, the so-called "flying-foxes" or fruit bats, the English sparrow, the starling, or such other birds or animals as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time declare injurious to the interest of agriculture or horticulture is hereby prohibited, and such species upon arrival at any of the ports of the United States shall be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to deliver to any common carrier, or for any common carrier to transport from one State or Territory to another State or Territory, or from the District of Columbia or Alaska to any State or Territory, or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia or Alaska, any foreign animals or birds the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds, where such animals or birds have been killed in violation of the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which the same were killed: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the transportation of any dead birds or animals killed during the season when the same may be lawfully captured, and the export of which is not prohibited by law in the State, Territory, or District in which the same are killed.

SEC. 4. That all packages containing such dead animals, birds, or parts thereof, when shipped by interstate commerce, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper and the nature of the contents may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages. For each evasion or violation of this act the shipper shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200; and the consignee knowingly receiving such articles so shipped and transported in violation of this act shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200; and the carrier knowingly carrying or transporting the same shall, upon conviction, pay a fine of not exceeding $200.

SEC. 5. That all dead bodies, or parts thereof, of any foreign game animals, or game or song birds, the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies, or parts thereof, of any wild game animals, or game or song birds transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such animals or birds had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. This act shall not prevent the importation, transportation, or sale of birds or bird plumage manufactured from the feathers of barnyard fowl.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second. The Chair believes the gentleman from Tennessee also demands a second.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. CANNON. No; I believe we had better have a second. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa, if I can be indulged in one remark, that I have read the bill the first time just now, and I am not prepared to say that I will vote against it, but it is too important a bill to be settled without a quorum, and in my judgment to be passed by the House without consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LACEY. Well, the bill was presented on Saturday, Mr. Speaker, and nearly read through, and the same suggestion was made then as to the importance of the bill. My friend did not happen to be here at that time.

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. LACEY. The question of whether there are enough here to pass the bill or not of course will be decided further on. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and tellers reported—ayes 24, noes 11.

Mr. CANNON. Evidently not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Who makes that point?

Mr. CANNON. I do, sir. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-seven gentlemen present; not a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair submits the following personal requests of members.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FITZPATRICK, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, for ten days, on account of important business.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution submitting an estimate of appropriation for the National Zoological Park—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of investigation of the feasibility and propriety of filtering the water supply of the city of Washington, together with detailed estimate of the cost of the work required—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. AMENDMENTS TO PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. LINDSAY. Some days since I offered an amendment to House bill 8245. Since that time the framework of the bill has been so changed that I desire to change the character of the amendment, and I will now offer it, to lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table without being printed.

Mr. LINDSAY I ask that it be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 3. Also strike out all of section 2 down to the words "foreign countries," in line 15, and insert:

"SEC. 2. That on and after the date when this act shall take effect there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries into Porto Rico, which is hereby constituted a customs collection district, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of an act entitled 'An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States,' approved July 24, 1897."

Also strike out all of section 2 after the word "notwithstanding," in line 18, and insert:

"And on and after the passage of this act trade between the customs collection district hereby established for the island of Porto Rico and the customs collection districts of the United States now in existence, or which may hereafter be established, shall be free from all import or tariff duties, and all laws or parts of laws now or heretofore requiring or authorizing the collection of import or tariff duties on articles of commerce between any of the customs collection districts herein named are to that extent hereby repealed."

Mr. BACON. I present an amendment to be proposed at the proper time to House bill 8245. I ask that it be read for information, as there will be no opportunity to have it printed.

The amendment was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Amendment to be proposed by Mr. BACON to H. R. 8245.

SEC. —. Each of the officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, authorized by this act shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 5140) to confirm title to lot 1, square 1113, in Washington, D. C.;

A bill (H. R. 7179) for the relief of John A. Narjes, of Washington, D. C.; and

A bill (H. R. 9283) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I will say at the outset that I have no objection to any interruption any Senator desires to make. I only hope that I may be able to finish within time, so that others who desire to speak this afternoon may have that opportunity. It is justice to myself to say that I did not give notice of the time for speaking until after all those who had asked for time, as I understood it, had been satisfied.

Mr. President, "with malice toward none, with charity for all," and asking only for myself the same liberty of thought and speech which I yield to you, I shall speak to-day in favor of the resolution offered by the senior Senator of Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], which offers ultimate independence to the Philippine Islands, and against the resolution offered by the junior Senator from Indiana and the senior Senator from Wisconsin, both of which resolutions are opposed to independence in the Philippine Islands, and as a legitimate part of that discussion I shall speak in opposition to the bill proposing a tariff between Porto Rico and the rest of the United States.

For more than a year I have waited, withholding remarks on the Philippine question and hoping against hope that something might happen that would relieve us from our terrible situation in the Philippine Islands. For more than a year I have been denounced by the ignorant as a traitor to my party and my country, simply because I have had convictions and have not hesitated to state them.

I can not hope for much better treatment to-morrow than I had a year and two months ago. I do not expect in the same quarter to be even credited with acting from a sense of duty. I do not expect to escape that class of men who would assassinate character to make more sure official salary and make more easy the pickings from the pot of patronage.

I do, however, indulge in the hope that in view of the present situation some of my friends and constituents who have failed to see before will see now why I am opposed to the annexation and permanent government of the Philippine Islands. I am opposed to it, first, because under the law of nations we have not title and never can have complete title except by conquest of the inhabitants. I am opposed, and will show by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that we have no power to make a war of conquest, and that by the law of nations we can not perfect our title of sovereignty without the consent of the people—the inhabitants of the island.

When Lincoln and Douglas were in their great debate, Douglas, in the heat and excitement of debate, asked Lincoln if he wanted a black woman for a wife. Lincoln arose and, without addressing the chairman, flashed back the famous answer, "I do not wish her for my wife, neither do I wish her for my slave." So, as I said before to you a year ago, I do not wish the 9,000,000 Filipinos for citizens; I do not wish them for slaves. If we govern them, they must either be citizen or serf. Whether they labor as our citizens and equals before the law or whether they labor as our political slaves, their labor competes with the labor of our country, and I am opposed to that.

I am for expansion. I do not even contend that in taking territory we are bound by latitude and longitude. I voted for the annexation of Hawaii, but would never have sent 65,000 men there to compel them to accept our flag. In other words, I am against taking any territory by conquest against a friendly people, and against taking any territory that brings a cheap class of labor in free and open competition with the class of men and women who do the labor in this country.

It needs no discussion nor legal quibbles to state what the Supreme Court has decided if we become sovereign in the Philippine Islands. You can not protect the labor of this country against the inhabitants there, any more than you can put a tariff between there and Washington or between California and New York, unless you get the Supreme Court to change its former ruling or amend the Constitution of the United States.

Many people are of this opinion now who were not of this opinion a year ago. Many of the papers, laboring men, and statesmen who six months ago were shouting so loud for expansion, with a string to it, are willing now to let go of the string and say a kind word to the men they called traitors a few months since, and even from the grand old Commonwealth of Connecticut, that drank so deep from the inspiring spring of expansion, her Senators, who spoke so eloquently "of government by consent of some of the governed," now speak of expansion in a more mellow tone and notify us that they are still willing to do God's service and carry out our high destiny if it does not interfere with the Connecticut wrapper.

One word to the Senators who have told us in this Chamber what the Republican policy is. The convention has not yet convened. Our party is to meet in the city where it was born. It was born out of the inspiration of freedom and the equality before the law. Who dare here and now speak for the delegates? Who dare here and now say we will declare in favor of conquest? Who dare here and now say that we are in favor of annexing the Philippine Islands and making 9,000,000 citizens or serfs out of the inhabitants?

Who dare here and now say that the Republican party in Philadelphia will declare in favor of violating the constitutional provision "that all duties and imposts must be uniform?" Who dare write down in advance, here and now, that the party of Lincoln will declare in its convention that some men are good enough to govern others without their consent? And right here let me ask the two Senators who have spoken on this subject and who have talked about the flag and patriotism—let me ask them who gave them a monopoly on patriotism?

How dare you discredit the patriotism of a man who disagrees with you about the best way to proceed for this country? Have you formed a trust on patriotism, and have the junior Senators from Massachusetts and Indiana been elected to the board of that trust? If we had taken the advice of the senior Senators of Massachusetts and Maine we would not be in the terrible situation we are in to-day.

When I spoke here from my place for independence for Cuba and answered the charges of the press from Germany that we were seeking territory, I said that the American people did not want to make a market for their goods at the point of a bayonet, and that we never wanted to put our beautiful flag above the people of Cuba or the weakest island of the sea without the consent of the people. The people and the press approve that sentiment, but cursed it when it was applied to the Philippine Islands.

I do not question the patriotism or the motives of the gentlemen who disagree with me, but I protest against anyone charging me with the lack of patriotism. I honor every soldier who fights under the flag, as much in Manila as in Santiago; there is no aid or comfort that I have refused them with my voice or vote. They are obeying orders. I honor them for it. But I never was in favor of the order that sent our Army out to destroy the lives and homes of the men who had been our friends. I allow no man to question my love for the flag.

My ancestors fought to set it in the sky, and my elder brothers fought to keep it there. The public schools that are protected by the flag gave to me and are giving to my children the opportunities of life. There is no sacrifice I would not make for it, and I resent as cowardly and dishonest any reflection as to my love for that flag simply because I want it to be right and never put by force over an unhappy and an unwilling people. If to repeat the language of Lincoln when he says that "No man is good enough to govern any other without his consent" is treason, then I am guilty.

If opposing a war of conquest, a war of conquest made without the sanction of Congress, which is the constitutional power, is treason, then I am guilty. If the desire to stop the enormous burden of taxation to carry on this war is treason, then I am guilty. If to wish for other struggling people the blessings of self-government that our fathers fought for is treason, then I am guilty. If it is treason to seek to protect the laboring men and women of this country from competition of the degraded labor in the Philippine Islands, then I am guilty. If to make an honorable settlement with the people in the Philippine Islands is treason, then I am guilty. The ships are coming back loaded with our boys—sick, insane, hundreds of them dead. If it is treason to want to stop that, then I am guilty.

For one hundred years as a republic we have outstripped the world under the republican form of government. We have stood by the Declaration of Independence. We have kept close to the people by a representative form of government. If a wish to avoid the mistakes of England, France, and Spain is treason, then I am guilty. I may be guilty of treason to the empire, but if I know my own heart I am loyal to the Republic.

Mr. President, I have not time now to answer the argument of the learned junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the effect that the retention of the Philippine Islands is the same as the expansion we have before indulged in when we took Louisiana, California, Florida, and Alaska, but only say in passing that we never before the Philippine war attempted conquest, and never before Porto Rico have we attempted to put a tariff between different parts of the United States.

Mr. President, I desire now, as briefly as I can consistently with my duty, to explain why I am opposed to the permanent annexation of the Philippines from the point of view of sound political action. I am a Republican of that school of Republicanism that believes in a protective tariff. I believe, and think I can satisfy you, that when the Congress begins to legislate for the Philippine Islands it is limited in its power by the Constitution of the United States.

There is no doubt about the power of Congress to legislate for the territory, organized or unorganized, but the instrument that gives us the power to legislate limits our power of legislation. We are, as legislators, creatures of the Constitution. We have no power that is not given us by the Constitution. To say that we may violate the letter and spirit of the Constitution in matters of legislation is to say that the creature is greater than the creator.

I do not say that in matters of legislation we may not pass rules, regulations, or laws which are not specifically mentioned in the Constitution, but I do say that under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States we have no power to pass a law here in violation of the restrictions laid down in our Constitution. Applying this law to Porto Rico, I say, first, that when the treaty between Spain and the United States was ratified and the people accepted us as sovereign, Porto Rico became a part of the United States of America in the manner which I shall designate or read from the Supreme Court decisions.

Second. That until it is organized, as we propose to do with Hawaii, we have the power in Congress to make laws and to govern the people there; that that power to govern did not need any treaty agreement with Spain. That is, Spain could neither add to nor detract from the powers of this Congress to legislate for the Territories.

Third. We can not make an unconstitutional law there. If the law goes there, who makes it? We do. Whether the Constitution is in Porto Rico or not, under our oaths of office the Constitution is here.

Fourth. The Constitution of the United States provides that "all duties, imposts and excises must be uniform throughout the United States." It will be observed that this limitation of power is a part of the very sentence which provides that Congress may levy duties, imposts, etc.

This limitation is not even separated by a period from the grant of power to us. The limitation does not apply to taxes, but the word "taxes" is omitted in the limitation, and it is provided that Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States; so while it might be possible to have a different plan of taxation in Porto Rico and Alaska, yet when the Government goes into the realm of collecting impost duties, those duties must be uniform throughout the United States.

If Porto Rico is not a part of the United States, we ought to cover her with the protecting arm of the Monroe doctrine and let her people fix their own schedule and we protect ourselves with the regular tariff or treaties of reciprocity. If Porto Rico is a part of the United States, as I believe the Supreme Court of the United States has decided it is, then we have no more right to put an impost duty between Porto Rico and the United States than we have to put a duty between Washington and New York.

I desire one moment now as to whether we can make unconstitutional laws for the Territories—a startling proposition that we have heard in this Chamber within the past twenty-four hours—that is, a law which fixes a duty which is not uniform throughout the United States. It is not necessary for the purposes of this proposition to say that the Constitution extends itself by its own vigor into annexed territory; but I do say that when we attempt to govern by laws made here, the laws must be constitutional statutes. It may be—and, as I said before, it is not necessary to discuss that here—that the annexation of territory does not bind the United States to protect every inhabitant from having his life or property taken without due process of law; but when we attempt to legislate how life and property may be taken, we are bound by the directions and limitations of the Constitution.

It may be possible that in legislating for that Territory we can fix the qualifications of electors, but we can not pass a law on that subject that will stand the test of the Supreme Court if we should apply the test of color or previous condition of servitude. It may be that we could provide a plan to levy taxes upon the people there; but when we attempt to levy import duties—that is, a tax upon imported goods, and that is the duty I, as a Republican, am interested in; that is the duty that protects the labor of this country—and when you attempt to levy an impost duty, the Constitution says all impost duties must be uniform. We are bound by the Constitution, which says that they shall be uniform, and when we take any government anywhere it is a legislative government that is beyond the Union of the States, but it must be a constitutional legislative government.

You may draw your finespun theories as to whether the Constitution follows the flag, or whether the Constitution expands by its own force and vigor and extends into all newly acquired territory, but this fact remains undisputed, that when you attempt to govern, the Constitution goes with the government, and when you attempt to pass a specific law, that statute carries with it the life and power given by the Constitution, and also the limitation fixed by that same great instrument.

I call your attention, briefly, to the case of Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton), and I will be just as brief as I can on that. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] admitted the force of the argument; he said it was the law. Of course he questioned it somewhat, and he said that some of it was obiter; that it was outside of the pending issues.

The opinion is written by Chief Justice Marshall. This ought to be authority enough. It may be claimed by some that some parts of that great opinion are obiter dictum—that some of that opinion was not called for by issues joined. But the fact remains that Congress had passed a law levying a direct tax, and under the Constitution apportioned it between the States, Territories, and District of Columbia. It was claimed by those who opposed the tax that the Constitution provided that the tax should be apportioned between the States that were in the Union and that the District of Columbia and the Territories were not subject to the taxation.

The case, though briefly stated, you will observe involved the whole power of taxation, and the further important question, so far as this discussion is concerned, it involved the territorial limits within which Congress could levy the tax, and I think after a careful reading of the case you will not find ten words by Chief Justice Marshall which were not wholly applicable to a full discussion to the then pending case. I quote from Chief Justice Marshall. He cites the eighth section of the first article, which gives us, the Congress, the power to collect duties, to pay debts, and provide for the common defense, etc., and then uses this language:

> This grant is general—
>
> What grant? The grant to levy import duties or taxes—
> without limitation as to place; it consequently extends to all places over which the Government extends.

Remember that I am not contending that the Constitution follows the flag in the same way some gentlemen contend for, but I say that while we can legislate for the Territories, we must legislate as if for a State, at least to this extent, that there shall be no direct violation of the limitations of the Constitution. Chief Justice Marshall says this power to tax extends to what? To every place where the Government extends. Is not our Government extending to Porto Rico? Is this not a bill to give the people of that island a civil government?

It will be observed that the grant extends not only to States, Territories, and districts, but it extends, according to Chief Justice Marshall, to "all places over which the Government extends." I read further:

If this could be doubted, the doubt is removed by the subsequent words, which modify the grant. These words are: "But all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

It will be observed that Chief Justice Marshall used the words to "modify the grant of power," and within four lines of that he again speaks of these words "modifying" the grant.

Some writers speak of it as a limitation upon the grant. It means the same thing. The modifying or limitation of the grant is a part of the grant itself. We get our right and power to legislate from this grant; and when we write a law for the people of the United States, whether in State, district, or Territory, we carry with that statute the law of the United States. If we find a man in Porto Rico whose life or property is about to be taken from him without due process of law, our first legislation on that subject must tender to him his constitutional rights. I am not, for the purposes of destroying this bill, arguing that the Constitution by its own vigor extends into the district, but I am insisting that you can not carry a statute enacted by the Congress of the United States, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall, any place under God's sun without carrying with it the limitations of this great charter—the Constitution. If he is debarred from citizenship by reason of race, color, or condition of servitude, we must tender back to him his citizenship.

If he is a slave, we must unbind him hand and foot: and if we would tax him by way of impost duties, they must be uniform. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] the other day, in the course of a running debate here when he was asked whether a man could be hanged without due process of law, answered that they did do it once in a while; but of course the Senator knows that does not answer the question, and it is hardly a fair begging of the question. It is not a question whether you can hang a man without due process of law, but it is a question whether you can pass a bill by the United States Congress that will stand the test of the Supreme Court revision that it carries with it the inherent force and right to take a man's life without due process of law.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator must have misunderstood my statement, Mr. President.

Mr. MASON. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. TELLER. I made no statement of the kind the Senator has suggested. I said, independent of any constitution, in a free government no man could be convicted and executed without a trial. That is all I said on that point. I said whatever the Constitution said or did not say did not determine that question, which is an underlying principle of a free people and a free government.

Mr. MASON. And I say, in answer to that, that this Congress has no power that is not delegated by the States, and that the reports of the Supreme Court from the days of Marshall to the days of Fuller are full of opinions to that effect written, and not contradicted, either in majority or minority opinions. Even in the Dred Scott case, where there was a difference of opinion about the extension of slavery into the Territories, both the majority and the minority opinions said no law could be passed by Congress which exceeded the power granted by the Constitution or which went beyond the limitations of the Constitution.

We took the oath at this desk to support this Constitution. As I had occasion to remark the other day, there seems to be a rule against mentioning that document more than once after you are elected a United States Senator. You swear to support it; but if you ever dare mention it again, you are called either a crank or a traitor. It is the very sun of our political existence. It gives life and power to this legislative body. State legislatures, while reserving power for its own government, surrendered their power to make any law conflicting with its provisions. The executive life depends upon it, and the great judiciary system, by its consent, holds the life, property, and destiny of the people in its hands. It gives power to the Government, yet protects the governed. It empowers majorities and protects minorities. The weakest citizen who seeks life and the pursuit of happiness is safe.

And among other provisions that it has within its sacred lines, which we swear to support and protect, it says when you levy an impost duty, that duty which the fathers were afraid of, that duty which they went to war about, that duty which invited the Boston tea party—it says when you levy that sort of a duty you must make it uniform throughout the United States. You ask me here to-day to vote for one rate of duty between here and Cuba and another rate of duty between here and Porto Rico, but I have sworn to support this instrument, and therefore I can not cast such a vote.

Here is the language of Chief Justice Marshall. He is defining what "the United States" means when it is mentioned. That was at the time not very far from the hour of its birth, when they had a fair conception of what "the United States" meant. The Chief Justice says:

It is the name of our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia and the Territories west of the Missouri—

This was written in 1820, as I remember it.

And the Territories west of the Missouri—

An unoccupied empire, almost unexplored, unknown; yet Chief Justice Marshall said:

The Territories west of the Missouri are not less within the United States than Pennsylvania or Maryland; and it is not less necessary—

Notwithstanding the opinion of the learned senior Senator from Wisconsin, Chief Justice Marshall says:

It is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts and duties should be observed in the one than in the other.

The Senator says that that is the law, and yet he votes for a 15 per cent duty between Porto Rico and the United States and a 100 per cent duty between the United States and the rest of the world.

Mr. President, I had intended to discuss briefly the question of a treaty, the ability and the power of a treaty of the United States; but there seems to be a general consensus of opinion here that a treaty can rank no higher than an act of Congress; that we can get no power from a treaty that will violate the Constitution of the United States. Let me read you what Cooley says upon that subject:

The Constitution never yields to treaty or enactment. It neither changes with time, nor does it, in theory, bend to the force of circumstances. It may be amended according to its own permission; but while it stands it is "a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times and under all circumstances." Its principles can not therefore be set aside in order to meet the supposed necessities of great crises. "No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government."

"A treaty can not bind the United States to do what their Constitution forbids them to do," Tucker says.

Again a line from Cooley. Speaking of treaties, he says:

It is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution.

Justice Story says, "It," a treaty, "must be considered in subordination of" the Constitution. It is claimed that we have the double power to legislate as a Congress of the nation and in the Territories to legislate as if we were the legislature of the State. True; but can the State legislature pass an unconstitutional act? Can a State levy an impost duty? Certainly not. Congress may make rules and laws to govern Territories, but when it levies an impost duty it does it as the Congress. That power was delegated to us as the Congress. If we levy the duty as State or Territorial lawmakers, under our Supreme Court decision it would be void. If we levy it as the Congress, it must be uniform.

I know there is a class of cases decided by the Supreme Court that permits the legislature of one State to regulate a certain class of business from other States. In the Paul and Virginia case, cited from 8 Wallace, the State of Virginia compelled by statute a deposit by insurance companies before licensing the companies to do business. It was contended that it was a violation of the Constitution, which gives to the citizen of each State equal privileges, etc., and that it conflicted with another clause in the Constitution, which declares that the Constitution shall regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States. The Supreme Court held that the statute required the deposit and did not conflict with either clause of the Constitution for the reason that the issuing of an insurance policy was not commerce.

In the case of the Ferry Company vs. Pennsylvania (114 U. S.), which has been cited, was where the Ferry Company corporation of New Jersey ran a ferry from Gloucester to Philadelphia. Its business was pure interstate commerce. The State of Pennsylvania attempted by statute to place a tax upon its capital stock. The supreme court of Pennsylvania sustained it. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed it and set aside the tax on the ground that it was void, using this language as to the State:

However great her power to legislate on her part, she can not impose a tax on that portion of interstate commerce which is involved in transportation of persons and freight, whatever be the instrumentality by which it is carried.

I fail to see the reason for citing this case, for if it settles anything at all it settles this: That as a matter of law the Congress is just as impotent when legislating for a Territory to interfere with interstate commerce as it is to levy impost duties without uniformity while legislating as the Congress. If the present proposition—15 per cent duties between Porto Rico and the rest of the United States—is to be considered as a regulation of interstate commerce as contemplated by the Constitution, then it must fail under the case cited. And if it is an impost duty, it fails for want of uniformity.

I have been waiting to hear from some of the distinguished lawyers on this floor to cite one case which even hints at a possibility of the Congress making an impost-duty law and not be bound by the limitation which says it must be uniform or that in any way suggests the possibility that we may exercise the grant of power as to impost taxation in violation of the limitation of that power simply because we have power to legislate for the territory. I beg to be pardoned if I repeat my proposition. I am not at this time insisting that the Constitution goes with the flag. It is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that when we enter the realm of Territorial legislation and proceed to the enactment of a law levying impost duties we are limited by the power delegated by the Constitution, and I am confident no such statute can stand which is in violation of the affirmative prohibition of the Constitution, which says, "but all such duties must be uniform," etc.

Mr. President, I ask, in the name of common sense, if the practice of a century of this Government is not a fair interpretation of law. I challenge anyone to show where, in all these territorial expansions, from the Louisiana purchase to Alaska, there has ever been an attempt of the lawmakers of the United States to levy an impost duty between the United States and the newly acquired territory. It is true that when we acquired California, while we were in military possession, we levied, through the military arm of the Government, different rates from the statutory rates then in force, but they were levied against aliens and strangers. There was no duty between California and the United States when we were in military possession or after the signing of the treaty. It was the settled practice of the Government to follow in its departments the plain ruling of the Constitution. Let me read you the order of Mr. Buchanan when he was Secretary of State under Mr. Polk. I am not insisting that precedent makes law or that practice makes law. If it did, God help the future laws that are to be passed in this country and if this is to establish a precedent to pass laws which lack uniformity, because we are making laws for territory under our flag. Mr. Buchanan said when he instructed, I think it was, Colonel Mason, the military commander in California:

> This de facto government will, of course, exercise no power inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the land. For this reason no import duties can be levied in California on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, as no such duties can be imposed in any other part of our Union on the productions of California, nor can new duties be charged in California upon such foreign productions as have already paid duties in any of our ports of entry, for the obvious reason that California is within the territory of the United States.

I propose to show you that the Supreme Court, as a matter of law, sustained that ruling of the Secretary of State; and if the present Administration desires to give free trade or protection while he is yet Executive under the military arm of the Government, the power is there, the principle is established; the habit of the Government was made under Polk when he was President, and the Supreme Court of the United States said it was the proper construction of the constitutional power.

We read the message for free trade. We shook hands on it around here and said, "That is right; that is right; Porto Rico surrendered without a struggle; her people are our people, and her God is our God." We said, "Twice three is six" louder and louder, until there came a whisper from some other place, "Wait a moment; perhaps twice three is seven; let us hold a caucus." [Laughter.] I am not wedded to mathematics. I might not hesitate to join my party in saying "Twice three is seven" if it involved no abandonment of my oath of office; but what assurance would I have in shouting "Twice three is seven" to-day if tomorrow some other kind of snuff would be taken, and the sneezers along the line might say, "We have have got back to the doctrine that twice three is six?" [Laughter.]

"Plain duty." We congratulated ourselves. All of us said, "Oh, yes; plain duty." How happy we were to rush into print to the effect that we were with the Administration—"plain duty." Yet the whispering came along the line that we did not want to make it too plain; that there might be 15 per cent trimming on the plain duty—scallops and embroidery, 15 per cent.

I have called attention to the California case, where the Supreme Court said we had a right to levy a duty against all comers under the military arm of the Government. The Supreme Court sustained the ruling. The moment the treaty of peace was signed the Supreme Court said the laws of the United States, so far as impost duties are concerned, must be uniform and extend to the newly acquired territory.

Mr. President, I called attention to the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall to the effect that the Constitution extends to every place where the Government extends; and in support of this proposition I present the case of the Capital Traction Company vs. Hoff. This opinion was written by Chief Justice Gray.

I will say to my colleagues that I have selected with some care, out of sixty cases, these leading cases, where the majority opinion was written by leading constitutional lawyers upon the bench, as I will show you before I finish.

This case is known as the Capital Traction Company case, where that company attempted to avoid a case being tried by a jury. The Supreme Court held that the Congress of the United States would have power from the Constitution to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, but that power is limited by the constitutional limitation. That is the language.

In the case of McAllister vs. The United States, McAllister was appointed by President Arthur, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. His commission empowered him for four years. The Supreme Court in the case cited held that it was a court created "in virtue of that clause which enables Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory belonging to the United States." But the court held that although the judge of that court was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, yet the court was not such a court "in which the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the Federal Government could be deposited."

They were incapable of receiving it, as the tenure of the incumbent was but for four years. Neither were they organized by Congress under the Constitution, as they were invested with powers and jurisdiction which that body were incapable of conferring upon a court within the limits of a State.

Justice Harlan, in making this decision, quotes from The Mormon Church vs. United States (136 U. S., page 1):

> Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments.

I have quoted many cases in which Mr. Justice Harlan concurred. I quote that as one of the cases in which he wrote the opinion himself.

Before I call attention to the next case, I repeat again that no justice of the Supreme Court in writing the majority or minority opinion has ever even hinted at the possibility of the Congress making a law, under the grant of the Constitution, in violation of the grant itself.

In the case of Romney vs. United States (136 U. S., page 1) it was held that Congress had full power to direct the winding up the affairs of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints as a defunct corporation.

A careful reading of the opinion of a majority, and also the opinion of the minority, which included Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Lamar, shows that in the opinion of the court Congress is limited by the limitations of the Constitution. "The legislative power of Congress is delegate and not inherent, and is therefore limited." The minority opinion does not disagree with the majority opinion. Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Field and Justice Lamar agree in their dissenting opinion, so far as my present contention is concerned; and both assenting and dissenting opinions agree with the proposition I make, that Congress in making laws is bound by the limitations of the Constitution.

This new doctrine, that we as the Congress have the same inherent power—that is, the power of any government or any monarchy—is a false doctrine, as I shall show by every opinion of the Supreme Court that I shall present to you. We have inherent powers, but they are limited by the constitutional limitations which gave us the original grant of power. The doctrine that we can do what any other government can do is absurd. England can create titles of nobility; we can not. Russia can take life without due process of law; we can not. As the Supreme Court says again and again, the power of legislation is a delegated power and not an inherent power.

Mind you, Mr. President, I say that even in every written opinion where there is a minority they emphasize the doctrine that when any legislation is made here, whether it was for Utah before it was a State or Illinois after it was a State, we have no power to make a law that conflicts with the terms of the Constitution.

I call attention again to the statement of Justice Matthews to the effect that Congress is subject to the restrictions expressed in the Constitution, the unanimous opinion of the court at a time when Waite was Chief Justice and when Miller, Field, Bradley, Harlan, Woods, Gray, and Blatchford were his associates. And again I challenge any lawyer here to deny my proposition. I do not insist that the Constitution is in Porto Rico. I believe it is. It is not necessary for this argument to insist upon it.

I do insist, under the decisions I have cited, that whether the Constitution is there or not, I know it is here and that we can make no law beyond its limitations.

I have repeated it three or four times, and am likely to again.

I am anxious that my colleagues shall understand my position. I should like to be fairly represented once, at least among my own associates and by my constituents.

I call attention to Chief Justice Taney's opinion in the Dred Scott case. It is so familiar that it is hardly worth while to read it. Many of you remember its almost every word at the time it was written, but I call your attention to this fact, that no opinion of the Supreme Court before or since the Dred Scott decision has ever suggested the possibility of Congress making a law for a Territory, organized or unorganized, where it is not bound and restricted by the limitations of the Constitution.

Gentlemen have called attention to the fact that in our first great Republican platform we denied the doctrine that the Constitution extended to the Territories. The slave owners contended that it did; that they might take their slaves with them to the Territories. The wish was father to the thought. The abolitionists, the school in which I was brought up, contended it did not. The wish was father to the thought. I can remember the time very well. My father disputed with the pulpit and quarreled with his church. He was an abolitionist. He would have parted with his bread before he would have parted with his idea of liberty; and if one of the Ten Commandments had said, "There shall be slaves," he would have torn out that commandment and struggled along with nine. That is not the question under discussion here. The gentlemen who seek for new theories and doctrine of the Constitution should not attempt to excite the passion and the prejudice of partisanship by talking about slavery.

You must amend the Constitution to levy this tariff and pass this bill, or you must get the Supreme Court of the United States to stultify itself and reverse its decisions. You must take the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall and all the writers upon the bench and off the bench who have followed it since 1820 and strike out the word "not" wherever it occurs, and say that the Constitution shall not regulate, abridge, or restrain the powers of Congress, simply because that power is to be extended over a Territory and not over States.

Do you think that the fever of imperial expansion has so overtaken the people that we will abandon the doctrine of American protection that we may put the flag over an unwilling and an unhappy people; or do you dream that the Supreme Court is so tainted with partisanship that it will descend from its upper atmosphere of a pure jurisprudence to carry out the dictates of a party caucus?

Oh, Mr. President, if you look in either direction for such relief, I fear you will reckon without your host. If I know the courts and if I know the people, the doctrine of protection is forever fixed in the hearts of the people. And the judicial determination is irrevocable and the legislative power of Congress is given and limited by the Constitution of the United States.

I can understand why gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber are for free trade with Porto Rico. They are for free trade everywhere. They have not the least idea of the almost divine doctrine of protection that has made this country great; but I am a partisan and a protectionist. We have said, from one ocean to the other ocean, that no American and no man under the flag should shove a jack plane or drive a nail or make a boot or shoe in equal competition with the cheap, underpaid labor of any country in the world; and so I want to protect the people against 9,000,000 underpaid laborers in the Philippine Islands. I stand here to-day to say, if the people in Porto Rico are not our people, give us what my cigar makers in Chicago want—100 per cent of the Dingley rate—and I will vote for it; but if they are our people, turn back to the sheet anchor, which says when you go into the field of impost duties that the fathers fought against they must be uniform and fall equally and justly upon all citizens alike.

I do not say that you can not change the decisions of the court by changing the Constitution. We changed the Constitution in order to meet the opinion in the Dred Scott case. You know how much it cost. A nation never makes a mistake and then receives vicarious atonement. I do not care what your religious faith is, the mistakes of a nation receive no vicarious forgiveness. We said this was "the land of the free and the home of the brave" for a hundred years, and sold women and children to the highest bidder for cash. It was not the fault of one part of the country. It was our fault. We settled. We tore down the slave pen and the whipping post, but we did not have materials enough to make headboards for our graves. But they went first to the arbitrament of war and then to the people of the States, and we amended the Constitution, which says that you shall have no slave in any place. That is what Chief Justice Marshall says—you shall levy no duties in any place that are not uniform as provided by the Constitution.

The people of this country and of my State are not willing to put the cigar makers and the laborers of the country in competition with 9,000,000 of Filipinos, that we may flaunt ourselves like a bully before the world and say we have reduced the producers and laborers of our country to an equality with the Japanese, Tagalos, and Chinese in Asia: that we may boast that our flag floats over more land this year than it did last.

Let no Senator say to me that I speak and vote this simply because I differed with you in this war of conquest in the Philippine Islands.

More than fourteen months ago I gave you notice on this floor. I tried to be as considerate then as I hope I am considerate now. I begged you for liberty and humanity's sake, and then I begged you for the sake of a protective tariff that has lifted the labor of this country above the labor of any country of the world. While I plead for liberty in the Philippines, I told you that I cared more for the dignity of labor here. It can be put in few words.

You must abandon the permanent ownership and annexation and the permanent government of the Philippine Islands, or you must abandon the doctrine of protection unless you can amend your Constitution or reverse the decisions of the Supreme Court.

I have shown you that this pioneer case says that any Territory is as much the United States as Maryland or Pennsylvania. It also says that the constitutional power and constitutional limitation "extends to all places over which this Government extends." Following it I have shown you unanimous opinions written by Taney, Waite, Fuller, Curtis, Miller, Bradley, Harlan, Matthews, and Gray. I challenge anyone within or without this body to show a change by any decision of the Supreme Court. These great jurists construe the Constitution exactly as it reads—"but all imposts, duties, etc., shall be uniform."

I question neither the judgment nor honesty of any of my colleagues, and, with the plain reading of the Constitution interpreted by our great court, in opinions written by eight or ten of the leading jurists from the days of Marshall to the days of Fuller, I shall permit no one to question my sincerity when I say that under my oath as a United States Senator I can not vote for an impost duty that is not uniform. I can not say to Europe, that is wholly foreign and alien, "You may deliver the product of your labor here upon the payment of 100 per cent of the present duty," and then say to the Porto Rican, "You are 85 per cent American and 15 per cent alien, and you must pay your pro rata share of an impost duty."

This is the land of the free and the home of the brave—85 per cent free and 15 per cent brave. There is no such thing as an 85 per cent annexation. The people of Porto Rico are either our people 100 per cent or they are 100 per cent not our people. Her God is our God 100 per cent or nothing. If she is not our people, let her pay the Dingley rates; and if she is our people, she must pay nothing to trade with us.

Mr. President, I intended at this time to discuss the fair, ethical question whether even if we had the power we ought to break our agreement. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has covered that matter fully, and I will skip at least a large share that I intended to present upon that branch of the case.

I merely call attention to the fact—and I ask Senators here before they vote to remember—where we were when we made this promise to the Porto Ricans. Read again the promise of General Miles. His promise was our promise. Even if he did not have the power to make it, we ratified it in the pulpit, in the press, and on the rostrum, and 70,000,000 said the word of Miles shall be kept.

I insert here the message of the President of the United States in regard to your plain duty:

"PLAIN DUTY" TO PORTO RICO.

[From President McKinley's message to Congress.]

Since the cession, Porto Rico has been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed, and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty. The markets of Spain are closed to her products except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without customs duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports.

She has, therefore, lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba, without any compensating benefits in this market. Her coffee was little known and not in use by our people, and therefore there was no demand here for this one of her chief products. The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Porto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

"UNDER ONE FLAG."

Our flag does not mean one thing here and another thing in Cuba or Porto Rico.—President McKinley to 20,000 Methodists at Ocean Grove on August 17, 1899.

How dare you, Republican Senators, violate the instructions of the leader of your party when he calls upon you to do your plain duty? The leader of the Republican party, which does not especially interest the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] at this moment——

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator from Illinois would name the leader.

Mr. MASON. The President of the United States. I am surprised that you gentlemen, professing to be Republicans, should vote for a duty against Porto Rico with his directions staring you in the face that it is your plain duty to vote for free trade. How dare you break away and become insurgents?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Illinois invited interruption, and I am going to interrupt him just to this extent, to ask whether or not he knows what the attitude of the President is in reference to the passage of this bill; and, furthermore, to inquire if it is worse for other Republican Senators to differ with the President on this question than it is for him to differ with the President in reference to the matter of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MASON. I thought I was indulging in a beautiful spurt of sarcasm. It seems the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has taken it for real. [Laughter.] Oh, no; the Senator knows me too well.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Illinois will have to label his wit.

Mr. MASON. My joke went by freight. I expect that every Senator, when he swears to support the Constitution, has a right to use some of the gray matter that God Almighty put into the upper end of his anatomy for thinking purposes. I only hope if you are insurgents to-day that you may not be denounced as traitors, from ocean to ocean, because you dared to stand up and vote on the question with the best light that God has given you. I hope you will be protected from that assault, if you indulge in a little independence, free speech, and Americanism.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I would not in any way detract from the humorous quality of his speech or ask any question that might indicate that I did not appreciate his jokes. We all appreciate the jokes of the Senator from Illinois. The Senator has arraigned the Republican party for abandoning the policy of protection in this legislation. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is one Senator who did not abandon that policy, and if he will kindly at some time read the dissenting views that I submitted on this bill, he will find that I have always stood by the policy of protection.

Mr. MASON. Yes, I know that. I remember the history of the distinguished Senator very well when we were colleagues in the House of Representatives. If I ever had the doctrine of protection ground into me, body and soul, it was when the distinguished gentleman made an argument in the House of Representatives that cleared the atmosphere and made me so much an American that I have never since worn a piece of imported cloth, and I do not smoke imported cigars unless some Democrat buys them for me. He made me the best protectionist in the world, and I practice what I preach. If a hundred per cent protects the people of Illinois against the cigar makers of Cuba, 15 per cent will not protect them against the cigar makers of Porto Rico. I am for the tariff, 100 per cent, American Dingley tariff as against aliens and strangers, and an open hand and plain duty to the people under our flag.

I also insert here, with the consent of my colleagues, quotations from the Secretary of War, ex-Speaker Reed, Senator DAVIS, General Miles, the opinion of ex-President Harrison, and ex-Senator Edmunds:

THE SECRETARY OF WAR'S VIEWS.

The highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Porto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States. We should treat the interests of this people as our own. I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Porto Rico and the United States be removed.—Secretary of War Root in his annual report.

SENATOR HOAR.

A duty on exports is forbidden by the Constitution, and the proposed duty of 15 per cent on goods from the United States and Porto Rico would be a violation of that prohibition.—Senator George Frisbie Hoar.

EX-SPEAKER REED.

The attempt to make three-quarter citizens out of the Porto Ricans is certainly original.—Ex-Speaker Reed.

SENATOR DAVIS.

What is the reason that this tariff rate, anomalous, unheard of, unprecedented, and temporary, should be applied to Porto Rico, while the other day a bill was passed in the other House appropriating $2,000,000 for Porto Rico from the Treasury?—Senator Cushman K. Davis.

GENERAL MILES'S PROMISE TO PORTO RICO.

Porto Rico under the American flag will enjoy the same privileges and the same immunities as the citizens of the United States and Territories of the Union.—From General Miles's proclamation on invading the island.

OPINION OF EX-PRESIDENT HARRISON.

I regard the bill (the Porto Rican tariff) as a most serious departure from the right principles.

EX-SENATOR EDMUNDS SPEAKS.

I believe that the Porto Rican tariff bill is clearly unconstitutional and violates all our agreements with and pledges to the Porto Ricans. If I were in the Senate I should certainly vote against it.—Ex-Senator Edmunds.

Of course no one contends that the bill is uniform. Therefore it is not necessary to show its lack of uniformity. If I, as an American citizen, want a box of cigars from Cuba, say I pay $2; from Porto Rico, 30 cents. It is not uniform as applied to us. No one claims that it is.

Section 3 provides that all merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico and going into Porto Rico from the United States shall pay 15 per cent of the present rate. I had intended to reply to a little of the sophistry of the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], in which he said that because Porto Rico is territory on this continent you can not make a discriminating duty. When it comes to the Philippine Islands you can make another kind of duty. There is some spot in the Atlantic or Pacific Ocean somewhere where ethics and morals change and constitutional construction moves backward and forward, as you move the hands of a clock.

There is but one way in my judgment, and it is the best judgment I have, to keep safely in power the party which represents these two great principles—equal and fair money, one kind of money, and the party that brings good wages and prosperity to this country. I have a right to my opinion, and I have a right to express it. Whether wisely or unwisely, we have completed our title to Porto Rico the same as to Hawaii. We got title from the sovereign; we got the consent of the people, and if it were necessary we could say we went by conquest. There is no blot or stain upon the title. It is not so in the Philippine Islands. You have not even got possession of your property. You bought it from Spain and paid $20,000,000 in gold, and promised to pay more than that much more to pay the Spanish debt to American citizens. You never even sent your money C. O. D. She took the money and you have not got your real estate.

It is an elementary principle of international law that you can not complete the title without the consent of the people. It must be done by conquest. I am not discussing that question. But the title is not yet complete.

Disguise it as we may, those that are not in open arms against us are in sympathy with those who are in open arms against us. Lincoln was not above consulting and hearing the plans and propositions of peace commissioners when our own brothers were in rebellion against their own sovereign. We must not be above listening to and considering the proposition of the weakest people in the world, and our general is the only man in history, at least in our history, who has refused to receive communications and report them through his superiors to the war-making power of the United States.

This body is a part of the war-making power of the United States. This body has no information as to what they are willing to do. We can end the war in forty-eight hours by not insisting upon our demand for absolute and perpetual sovereignty and promising to give them, ultimately, independence as soon as they are ready to satisfy this Government that life and property are safe.

Under such arrangement commercial treaties could be made that would not destroy the doctrine of protection; agreements for naval and coaling stations could be had; the doctrine of protection could be pledged anew to those who toil upon this continent, and the fact that the pledges of prosperity have been kept would retain in power the party that stands for uniform currency and good wages.

What can we say to the laboring men if this revenue tariff goes through, even though the Supreme Court should sustain it? They are not for this bill.

The petitions that I have presented in this forum from the laboring men of Illinois have asked for a hundred per cent Dingley rate. I have presented resolutions from all sorts of clubs, social and political, asking for absolute free trade. No one organization from my State has appealed for this compromise with protection, this 15 per cent duty. Tell me it is to be a precedent, about which I can talk to the workingmen of my State! Oh, no. I do not want any tariff-for-revenue precedent for the people in Illinois. I want the old straight up and down orthodox 100 per cent protection if they are aliens. My people want it if they are aliens. If they are not aliens and not strangers, the people there are fair enough to ask for unrestrained commerce between us all.

Gentlemen upon the other side who speak for them will point to the revenue tariff against Porto Rico and the fixed and unchangeable rule of the Supreme Court of the United States, which prohibits us from putting up a tariff between us and other people of whom we are sovereign. Porto Rico is small, her people are few, she is near our shore, and in less than six months it will probably be developed that she helps us as a customer more than she hurts us a competitor. Not so with the Philippine Islands. She has millions of people. I am told—I do not vouch for the figures—that there are 80,000 cigar makers in the archipelago.

If we complete our title of sovereignty by a successful war of conquest, whether they are voters or not, whether they have representation or not, we will tax them and govern them, and there is no way under our form of government to govern them and tax them and at the same time keep either them or their goods out of this country. No one denies this, and there are mighty few men belonging to the organized labor of this country but who understand it just as well as we do.

I call your attention to the fact that two years ago the labor men of this country, in their national convention, almost without a dissenting voice, representing the great organizations from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf, in their national convention in Kansas City, gave notice to the men who seek power that they must not annex the Philippine Islands and put their labor in competition with ours.

We have to go and frankly and honestly abandon the doctrine of assimilation. Assimilation means equalization. If you put two pieces of iron together, one hot and one cold, they do not both get hot and they do not both get cold, but they assimilate. The hot one gets a little colder and the cold one gets a little hotter; and when you put the cigar makers of Illinois in competition with 80,000 in the Philippine Islands, the doctrine of assimilation means equalization. Our wages, under our doctrine, will not stay up and theirs will not stay down, but ours will go down halfway to meet them as they ascend the scale.

Then we are told, though, that if we should by any honorable treaty even talk with the men who are in arms against us, as Lincoln did, we would abandon our American manhood; that we would lose prestige for our Army and Navy by listening to the voice of the little brown people in the archipelago and consult with them about what kind of gunpowder or bullets they prefer to be killed with. "What," they say, "humiliate my country of 70,000,000 brave people by consulting and seeking to do justice by a few million struggling people, almost without clothes and certainly without the need of many clothes!" God pity the man whose heart is so shaped that he would feel a national humiliation in doing justice to the weak and poor little brown man. God help the man who indulges in what Gladstone calls "false shame." What is the object of government, Mr. President? Is it the happiness of the governed that we seek, or is it that we may strut from continent to continent with the gewgaws and jingling bells of royalty and say: "See how much land we cover and how many people are unhappy and unwilling subjects to this flag?"

We have an open door to China. Claim what you like for it, the war on the Filipinos did not open the door, and before we ever put foot in the Orient, twelve months before, we had more orders for American goods and the products of American farms than we had ships to carry them in.

You want to find a market for the surplus of your shops, your farms. Give us some legislation that will build the merchant marine of the country. We do not care anything about the glory and the glitter of governing 9,000,000 people without their consent.

I quote from the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]:

> The issue joined in this debate—

The Senator is not in the Chamber. I think no one appreciates more than I his intense interest in this matter, his patriotism, and his ardor and his earnestness.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is absent from the city.

Mr. MASON. I say this of a man for whom I have great respect as a lawyer and a Senator. He says:

> The issue joined in this debate involves the power of Congress over the islands and the peoples which Providence has placed in our keeping, and, therefore, the expediency of retaining them. It involves the power and progress of the Republic throughout all its future. For if Congress has not a free hand to deal with these islands as their different conditions and changing needs demand, it is not only inexpedient but it may be impossible to hold them. To treat Porto Rico as we treat Hawaii, and to deal with the latter as we deal with the Philippines, and to apply to all without delay the same fixed formula of laws which custom and the intention of statehood has prescribed for our Territories, from which our States are formed, is a proposition as mad as it is novel.

I agree with the junior Senator from Indiana. It is decidedly inexpedient to hold them as subjects and we as sovereigns, because we can not have what he is pleased to call a "free hand" in the government of those people. "Free hand" to deal with these islands? Oh, no, sir; Congress has no free hand. There are scores of laws you can not pass. If dealing with civil or religious liberty, the "free hand" strikes the immovable wall of the Constitution, which protects the weakest in religious liberty, at least to the extent of prohibiting Congress from making laws "prohibiting the free exercise of religion."

But we can make any law we like in the colonies, say some to you, regardless of the Constitution, and we can fine a man for going to the Methodist Church in Porto Rico and pay a bounty for going to the Baptist Church and make it a penitentiary offense to go to any other church.

Free hand? Oh, no; the State may enter the field of law of contracts, but when in that field you can not stray beyond its old fence; on every stake and rider is written the prohibition against "impairing the obligation of contracts." You may seek to borrow money for the United States—you have the power, but it must not infringe the constitutional limitation. We have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the States, and the Indian tribes, but every statute that has attempted to exercise this power has been stricken from the statute books unless it was kept within the constitutional limitations.

I appeal to every lawyer who has read Gibbon vs. Ogden (9 Wheaton) to Wilson vs. McNamee (102 U. S. Reports), nearly one hundred years' construction of the Constitution, and over 140 decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

We can establish uniform rules of bankruptcy and naturalization, yet from the early reports of Wheaton to the later reports of Howard, covering more than half a century, our laws have failed when the court found Congress doing things beyond constitutional limitations.

No, sir, I say, not only to the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana, The Congress has no "free hand." The people have a free hand. They can amend the Constitution; Congress can not. We can not even submit the proposition unless we have two-thirds of the Congress, and the people themselves can not amend without three-fourths of the States.

No free hand, Mr. President. We may coin money; we can provide for the punishment of counterfeiting, but that punishment must be a constitutional punishment. No free hand, Mr. President. We may declare war; there are no constitutional restrictions. We may appropriate money for our armies, but we can not make an appropriation for that purpose for a longer term than two years.

In other words, even in sustaining our Army in times of war the Constitution limits the time for which we may appropriate money. We may exercise exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia, but Congress has no free hand to make an unconstitutional law in this District. We may legislate as to habeas corpus, but we can not suspend it but in cases of rebellion, invasion, or for public safety. We may levy a direct tax, but it must be in proportion to the census. We may indulge in general legislation, either as the Congress for all the United States or as rules and regulations for territory, but we can not pass a bill of attainder nor an ex post facto law.

We may levy, as the Congress, an impost duty, if uniform, but we have not the power to levy an export duty. We may make laws to regulate commerce, but that free hand of regulating commerce is paralyzed if it should attempt to give preference to one State over that of another. If we legislate here for any part of our territory, if we attempt to make an impost duty for a State, whatever is raised must go to the Treasury of the United States, and it must be for the use of the Treasury of the United States, whereas this bill provides that not one dollar of this revenue goes to the Treasury of the United States, but goes to the President for the benefit of the Territory.

It has occurred to me in reading this section that the fathers had in mind the hypocrisy of England, which was so vividly set out by the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] in his deadly parallel, which, with his consent, I set out here:

> The bill "imposing duties on certain kinds of merchandise, when imported into the colonies, required the payment of such duties to be made in gold and silver, and ordered them to be paid into the exchequer, where, with the produce of all former parliamentary duties, they were to be set apart as a separate fund, to be applied under the disposition of Parliament for defraying the future charges of protecting, defending, and securing the colonies."
> Under our measures Porto Rico is to be taxed, and the island pays both ways on merchandise which they ship to or receive from this country, and we have provided that the amount heretofore or hereafter so received "shall be placed at the disposal of the President to be used for the government now existing or which may hereafter be established in Porto Rico, for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein," until otherwise provided by law.

I set out with the consent of the distinguished Senator from Vermont the parallel, and I was surprised when the senior Senator from Wisconsin indulged in the serious talk here yesterday toward the distinguished Senator from Vermont. He says we are not King George; that King George when he taxed us without our consent was a monarch; but we are nice people; we are gentle people; we are Christians; we are college professors. The distinguished junior Senator from Indiana picked out the kind of men who are to go abroad and govern those people. Put it down on the platform there. He wears a Prince Albert coat and has an overtop education, with all the honesty that goes with Americanism; and after you have got his picture drawn let me tell you what Lincoln said about him. He said:

> You have an elegant man, but no man is good enough to govern another man without his consent.

So I say to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, when he talks about the Senator from Vermont for protesting against this duty that our fathers fought against, the distinguished Senator from Vermont undoubtedly had in his mind the doctrine of Lincoln, that no man, not even a man from the United States, is good enough to govern any man without his consent.

King George, as will be seen, proposed to make a special fund for the benefit of Porti America, but he was to decide in what way it was to be spent for our benefit, and in the adoption of our Constitution in 1787 our fathers did not fail to provide against the United States Congress indulging in the same hypocrisy that King George indulged in, for the only two places in the Constitution mentioning these duties prevents any such indulgence.

Section 8 of the first article provides that we can—

> Collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises—

For what purpose?

to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and welfare of the United States.

Not to be put in the hands of the President for the benefit of some people of the Territory. And section 10 of the same article, paragraph 2, which is the only other suggestion in the Constitution as to the raising of imports and exports—

Shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States.

It may be that some of the fathers dreamed of government without the consent of the governed.

It may be that some of them dreamed that at the close of this century we would attempt taxation without representation and indulge in colonies or "insular possessions," which rolls more glibly under the tongue and does not have the twinge of royalty, and we can use it better among those from whom we seek suffrage in November. "Insular possessions" with governors to govern them without the consent of the people!

We are not bound by the Constitution when we do it. The Constitution says you can not make a title of nobility, but that only applies to the States, you understand. The distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] can be the Duke of Ponce and not violate the Constitution: the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] the Prince of Porto Rico, and the distinguished lawyer who has sought to defend this bill upon unconstitutional ground can at least demand the title of the Lord High Duke somewhere in the Philippines, who may sit in judgment upon the laws and upon the people. Does the Constitution say that you can not make a title of nobility? Yes. Does it go into the Territory? No. Then you can make titles of nobility there. God help the men in November who preach that doctrine.

I wish to print some remarks here in reply to the argument of the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], and I will say simply in conclusion of that branch of this argument that I will read from his own speech, in which he says Congress can not transgress these limitations or provisions any more than it can pass laws in any other manner except the one marked out in the Constitution.

It may be that some of the fathers dreamed that at the close of this century we would attempt taxation without representation and indulge in colonies or "insular possessions," as some of us like to call them, but they made up their mind to one thing when they framed this Constitution, that if we ever so far forgot the genius of Americanism as to tax colonies as King George taxed us, that we should be shorn, at least of the hypocrisy of the King, for they limited our power to levy impost taxes to uniformity throughout the United States and provided that every dollar of profit so made should go to the Treasury of the United States, and I challenge any man upon this floor, or elsewhere, to show any power in our hands to levy impost duties except in the manner I have stated.

The junior Senator from Indiana is a good lawyer; he knows as well as the rest of us that "power never limits itself," but that every man who exercises power is limited in the use of that power, and that under the genius of this Government there is no such thing as a free hand.

The citizen is supreme within his grant of powers of citizenship; the justice of the peace is supreme within the scope of his authority; the city council, the board of education, the county board, and the State legislatures are supreme while acting within the limits of their power; yet none of the legislative bodies mentioned could make a rule, regulation, or law conflicting with the constitution, of the State within which they are appointed or elected, nor in violation of the laws of the nation or the Constitution of the United States. Congress is supreme when acting within its limitations, but it has its limitations, as the city council or the justice's court has its limitations; and if there is one limitation that has been settled by one hundred years of constitutional construction it is that you can levy no impost duty that is not uniform, nor can you take one dollar of profit from an impost duty of any kind but it must go to the Treasury of the United States and for the use of the United States.

But the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana admits that even when the Congress of the United States is making "needful rules and regulations" it is bound by constitutional limitations.

I quote from him again what purports to be an exact extract from his speech, published in the Chicago Tribune:

This, the Senator contended, gave Congress practically a free hand in the matter in dispute, stating the limitations on its power to be as follows:

"Of course, Congress must exercise this power in the manner prescribed in the Constitution. The Constitution determines the method of Congressional action in exercising all its powers, and the Constitution fixes certain fundamental general limitations to and absolute general prohibitions on the power of Congress; and when Congress makes 'needful rules and regulations respecting territory and other property belonging to the United States,' it can not transgress these limitations or prohibitions any more than it can pass laws in any other manner except the one marked out in the Constitution."

Surely no other answer need be given to the Senator than his own admission which I have just quoted. But the distinguished Senator, after making this admission, appeals to our "institutional law," and says that—

It is our institutional law which, flowing like the vital blood through the weaker constitution, gives that weaker instrument vitality and power of development.

To what branch of the institutional law does he appeal when he asks for assistance to pass this bill which puts a tariff duty between people of the United States? Is there any better expression of "institutional" law than the Declaration of Independence? Is there a more stern and vigorous protest anywhere in the world against taxation without representation than in that Declaration of Independence?

He can not have forgotten the charges of bad government laid at the door of the King by our fathers. Hear this: "The history of our present King of Great Britain is the history of repeated injury and usurpation. He is guilty of 'cutting off our trade in all parts of the world.' He has 'imposed taxes on us without our consent.'"

Does he dare appeal to institutional law that is written in the Declaration of Independence and in the hearts of the people to induce us to support this bill, which cuts off and regulates the trade of Porto Rico between Porto Rico and the rest of the world and in the same bill taxes the people of Porto Rico "without their consent?"

Is it possible that a man learned in the law, as he is, can appeal to our protest against Great Britain as justification for pursuing the same course against Porto Rico as Great Britain pursued against us?

My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] yesterday said that the Constitution was not a strait-jacket. It is only a strait-jacket applied to those who suffer from the overdeveloped mania of unnatural expansion. It has to be applied sometimes to people and even to Congresses. The other wing of the eagle may flop in perfect harmony with this wing under the directions of a caucus, but there is supposed to be a lodgment where the brain of the eagle sits, about halfway between the two wings; and no law remains written upon the statute books of this country or ever received the sanction of the brain and the heart of the eagle that violated the fundamental doctrines, one of which is that when you levy an impost duty it must be uniform.

The junior Senator from Indiana appeals to the institutional law. It is not written in any special book. He does not give you any reference to any volume and page, but I know what he means. It is the genius of all the conduct of the past. It includes the Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence. How dare he appeal to the Declaration of Independence when he asks me to violate the fundamental doctrine of uniform equality? What is the impost duty? You admit yourself it is a revenue tax, and you ask me to violate the Constitution and pass it regardless of its lack of uniformity, and then appeal to what? The institutional law, the Declaration of Independence. What does that document say? What is the protest of the fathers against King George? "You have quartered soldiers upon us against our will. You have stopped our trade with the rest of the world." You have "imposed taxes on us against our consent." That is the institutional law that we fought for. That is the institutional law you ask me to violate, and I am asked to vote for a law of impost duty that is not uniform!

No, Mr. President, the more you appeal to the institutional law of the land, that eternal law of right and justice which, like the Monroe doctrine, is not written in books, but printed in the hearts and in the brain of the people—I say, sir, the more you appeal to that higher law the more repugnant, impudent, and outrageous the present legislation appears. With our strong giant Republic—strong in arms and strong upon the sea—we may not fear the Boston tea party in the harbor of San Juan, but if this bill becomes a law we deserve to have it. Not an intelligent man in the island of Porto Rico but what demands and expects free commercial intercourse, unless it be some who have been browbeaten and made to understand that they must choose the alternative between 15 per cent and 100 per cent.

I stand here as a Republican, devoted to the cause of protection, to say I will fight a revenue tariff as long as I live, and I am for giving the labor of this country 100 per cent of protection against the people of any foreign country; but if they are our people, I can never vote to levy a restraint or tax upon the commerce between our own people.

The case of Fleming vs. Page has been cited here as justifying this bill. I respectfully submit that it is wholly inapplicable. During the Mexican war we took possession, as an act of war, of the port of Tampico, in the Mexican State of Tamaulipas. We held it as a war measure, to embarrass our enemy. We never claimed title to it by conquest or by treaty.

It never was, and is not now, a part of our territory. In the language of the syllabus of the case, it did not thereby become a part of the Union. The boundaries of the United States were not extended by the conquest. It was therefore very properly held that it was a foreign port, within the meaning of the act of Congress of the 30th of July, 1846, and the duties were properly levied upon goods imported into the United States from Tampico.

Justice Taney held (I quote from page 615):

The country from which these goods were imported was invaded and subdued and occupied as the territory of a foreign hostile nation, as a portion of Mexico, and was held in possession in order to distress and harass the enemy. While it was occupied by our troops, they were in an enemy's country and not in their own. The inhabitants were still foes and enemies, and owed to the United States nothing more than temporary allegiance.

Is that the case in Porto Rico? Are they our foes? Do we occupy it as a foreign, hostile nation, as a portion of the country of some enemy? Are we not holding it now in possession by treaty? Are we holding it for the purpose of "distressing and harassing an enemy?" Have we not a complete title to sovereignty? And does not this very bill, which proposes to levy a tax upon the people there, attempt to fix for them a civil government?

Had Congress assumed any power at the port in question? It had not at that time, and never has; and Chief Justice Taney, on the same page which I have read from, says that—

The power of the President under which Tampico and the State of Tamaulipas were conquered and held in subjection was simply that of a military commander prosecuting a war waged against a public enemy.

When we pass this bill, a part of which is for revenue tariff levied with a lack of uniformity, and that bill goes to Porto Rico, is it still under military control, and do we hold it as the enemies of Porto Rico and they as ours? Oh, what construction! What devious paths are we driven to when we start on the wrong trail!

Are the Porto Ricans public enemies? Is this bill which we seek to pass here to be an act of Congress or an arbitrary military power of the Executive? Why, Mr. President, in that case, and I read from the opinion of the Chief Justice—

There was no act of Congress establishing a custom-house at Tampico; there was no collector. The person who acted in the character of collector acted as such under the authority of a military commander; and the duties he exacted and the regulations he adopted were not those prescribed by law, but by the President in his character as Commander in Chief.

Do we intend to establish such a custom-house in Porto Rico?

Again, Chief Justice Taney says:

The custom-house was established in an enemy's country as one of the weapons of war.

Is that the object of this bill? He says it was established—as a measure of hostility and as a part of the military operations in Mexico.

Is this bill an act of hostility and so intended?

The Chief Justice says again:

It was a mode of exacting contributions from the enemy to support our Army, and intended also to cripple the resources of Mexico and make it feel the evils and burdens of the war.

Is that the object of the pending legislation?

Is that the object of this bill, to levy tribute upon enemies? If so, the case of Fleming vs. Page can apply, and if not it has no application here.

Again, the Chief Justice says:

The duties required to be paid were regulated with this view and were nothing more than contributions levied upon the enemy.

Are we in this bill seeking to levy contributions upon the enemy?

The Chief Justice says (page 618):

After it was subdued it was uniformly treated as an enemy's country and restored to the possession of the Mexican authorities when peace was concluded—

Whereas in the case of Porto Rico from the day that Miles landed we held it with the consent of the people; and, in the treaty of Paris, Spain, the previous sovereign, ceded its sovereignty to us.

It is a waste of words and a waste of time to reiterate again and again the language of Chief Justice Marshall, that that Territory is as much a part of the United States as Maryland or Pennsylvania and that the same reason exists for uniformity in impost duties there as exists anywhere in the United States.

The case of Brown vs. Houston (114 U. S., page 602) has also been cited. The opinion is by Justice Bradley. The suit was originally brought by plaintiff in error to enjoin Houston, a collector, from selling a lot of coal belonging to the plaintiff, situated in New Orleans. It was to be sold for local taxes. The court held that it did not involve the question of imports or exports at all.

It was coal carried from Pennsylvania to New Orleans, and the court reaffirmed the former opinion, that the imports and exports referred to in section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, which prohibits the States from levying duties, etc., has reference to goods brought from or carried to foreign countries alone, and not to goods transported from one State to another. Surely this will not be cited as an authority for levying impost duties when that question was not involved.

The same is practically true of the case of Woodruff vs. Parham (8 Wallace, page 123). This case was decided in 1870, ten or fifteen years before the case I have just cited, of Brown vs. Houston. Justice Miller delivered the opinion and held to be valid a uniform tax imposed by a State on all sales made in it; and also held that such tax was in no sense an import duty, and was not included in the constitutional limitation which prevented States from levying imposts, etc.

If this case decides anything further, it decides that, "the framers of the Constitution claiming for the General Government, as they did, all the duties on foreign goods imported into the country." Here is a clear statement from Justice Miller which proves true the contention I have been making—that whether these impost duties are to be levied by the United States for the general welfare or to be levied by a State, with the consent of Congress, it must all be levied uniformly and for the direct benefit of the United States; and then there is no power in any clause of the Constitution to levy an impost duty for the benefit of any State or Territory, whether it is an integral part of the United States or not.

The case of Brown vs. Maryland (12 Wheaton, 419), which has been cited by some one, as I understand it, favoring the levying of an impost duty against people in our own territory that is not uniform, was decided in 1827. Marshall was Chief Justice and delivered the opinion of the court. It is the first case decided by the Supreme Court that allows a general discussion of the powers of levying duties.

Brown, an importer, was indicted for failing to take out a license, which license was required by an act of the legislature of Maryland requiring all importers of foreign goods, etc., to pay the sum of $50. The court held that license fee was repugnant to section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, that no State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any impost or duty, etc. He also held that it was repugnant to that part of the Constitution which declares that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, between the States, and with the Indian tribes.

I will not detain the Senate by reading a part of this opinion, which is most interesting and instructive, but must say, in passing, that the reasons of the framers of the Constitution for putting all of the power of levying impost duties in Congress is most thoroughly explained, and the contention that I have been pleading for has been most thoroughly emphasized—that even this power which is delegated to Congress has all of the limitations prescribed by the Constitution.

I defy any man, I challenge any lawyer or any Senator, to find me one case, as I said before, from the days of Marshall to the present hour, where any majority or minority of a court have held that you could make an impost duty between the United States and any Territory owned by the United States and not be bound to make it uniform.

Mr. President, one word in reply to the legal argument of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. No one who knows him doubts either his great ability or his sincerity; we honor him for both, and particularly do I honor him for his tolerant and respectful consideration of the opinions of others. His proposition in substance is, while he admits Loughborough vs. Blake, by Chief Justice Marshall, to be the law, yet, inasmuch as this bill does not levy an impost duty under Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, that therefore it need not be uniform. This is indeed a startling proposition, that we may avoid the limitation of the organic grant of power by violating, in terms, the purposes for which the power is given, or by the violation of the purpose of the law be able to violate the manner in which the law shall operate.

We may levy imposts for "common defense and general welfare," and it must be uniform; but he says if you levy imposts to (as this bill says) "provide revenue for Porto Rico," then the impost need not be uniform. Thus are we to have an unconstitutional object in order to defeat the limitation of the Constitution.

I again desire to emphasize my former statement that this bill is unconstitutional in both its object and the manner of obtaining its object.

First. Congress had no power to levy impost duties until it received that power from the States.

Second. The State has no power to levy impost duties except by consent of Congress; and therefore,

Third. The only power in Congress to levy imposts, or in States, by consent of Congress, to levy imposts, is contained in section 8, Article I, and paragraph 2 of section 10, same article.

Fourth. The States having transferred that power to levy imposts for certain purposes and in a certain manner, there can be no implied grant giving to Congress the power to change either the purposes or manner of levy.

Fifth. The State reserves to itself all powers not granted by the Constitution.

Sixth. The States having yielded a part and reserved a part, both the States and the nation are bound by the limitations.

Seventh. In construing Article I we must construe each section of that article in connection with all other sections.

Reading the two sections of the same article together we find no inconsistency, no limiting or abridgment, of either one by the other. I read them together: Congress may levy imposts for common defense and general welfare of the United States. The States may levy imposts (Supreme Court says that means goods imported from a foreign state) providing Congress consents, for "what is absolutely necessary to carry out its inspection laws, but all impost laws must be uniform, and if levied by States with consent of Congress the net proceeds shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States."

I will endeavor to finish in eight or ten minutes, and I want to call attention again to the startling proposition, the unheard-of proposition, that because you are levying an impost duty for a purpose not mentioned in the Constitution, then that constitutional limitation as to uniformity does not apply. I want to show you how the same doctrine would apply to some other branches of the Constitution. I say that you must read both those articles together.

Compare this bill with the Constitution. The Constitution says:

Congress shall have power to levy imposts to pay debts, etc., of the United States.

This bill proposes to levy imposts to raise revenue for Porto Rico. The Constitution says all imposts shall be uniform. This bill proposes to levy imposts that are not uniform. The Constitution says: The net produce of all imposts shall be to pay the debts of, provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, and shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States.

This bill proposes to levy imposts, not one cent of which shall go to pay the debts of the United States or provide for the common defense or general welfare of the United States, and instead of saying, in the language of the Constitution, that it "shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States," it provides—I quote its exact words:

SEC. 4. All duties collected hereunder "shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but shall be held as a separate fund, and shall be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used"—

For what? To pay debts of the United States? No. To go for the common defense or general welfare of the United States? No. To be held "for the use of the Treasury of the United States?" No. But to be used—for the government and benefit of Porto Rico.

Mr. President, I mean no disrespect to any of my colleagues, but if a commission should be appointed to provide some way to raise money unconstitutionally for an unconstitutional purpose, in some thoroughly unconstitutional method, the bill now before the Senate would be a great labor saver for such a commission.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the people who are voting for this bill to the fact that it is not a constitutional appropriation. I say there is no precedent for it, and it is at least unconstitutional in the manner of the appropriation. We appropriated the other day two million and some odd thousand dollars, but we appropriated the exact amount. When the President was left in charge of the Louisiana purchase, Congress appropriated first a million and a half dollars and then passed another appropriation setting aside so much as might be necessary for the purposes of the President. This bill here has no limit. There is no amount fixed in this bill. It is not an appropriation in contemplation of the Constitution, which says that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but "by appropriations made by law."

No money shall be appropriated or drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of an appropriation made by law. Never before have you established a fund and appropriated it in advance. Never before have you delegated your legislative powers to a President to say how much shall go for one thing and how much for another, unless you had given him a lump sum. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will correct me if I am wrong. If I am wrong I want to be corrected. You can go on with the bill. I simply want to call attention to the fact that under the appropriation bill where we gave $50,000,000 for the war the amount was fixed.

The President disposed of it for the Army and the Navy. I do not raise a question as to the propriety of having the President use it. I simply say that never before has there been a new law of impost duties established and farmed out without fixing the amount of appropriation. This may amount to $200 or it may amount to $2,000,000 or $5,000,000. The President may appropriate every dollar for policemen or every dollar for a schoolhouse. The power of appropriating and fixing the amount for each item is left with the President, and the amount is left for the future and for fate to determine. No such delegation of legislative power has ever been indulged in by the Congress as to say that we will establish a new law.

Why, Mr. President, if you could do that you could pass a bill here to-morrow saying that all internal revenues collected hereafter shall not be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury, but in a special fund, to be used by the President of the United States for New England, New Jersey, or any other particular part of the country. You can say that the revenues collected under the impost duties should be deposited in a special fund to be used for some part of the United States or for the transportation of Bibles to the Timbuctoos. There is no such way for taking money from the Treasury. But gentlemen say it does not go to the Treasury. I say it does. It does not go to the general fund of the Treasury, but it goes into the pockets of Uncle Sam, and you can not take it out until you pass an appropriation by law. That is what this Constitution says. The Constitution also says that a law must be made by Congress. How much are you going to put into his hands. You do not know how much he will use for the Army or for the Navy or how much he will use for schoolhouses; how much for roads, or how much for books. You do not know. Remember, the Constitution says, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law;" and law means an appropriation by Congress. This is a diversion of a fund. It is just as much in the Treasury whether it is put in a special fund or whether it is put in a general fund.

I noticed, Mr. President, the uniformity with which the different members of the committee paid their respects to and caused the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], to blush every time. The members of his committee told him with what patriotism and bravery he had gone through this storm of making a new law; of the perfection of this bill, the child of his brain. Why, Mr. President, when this child was born it was twins. The distinguished Senator from Ohio brought forth a civil-government bill and a free-trade bill. They were Siamese twins. We had just christened one of them "Plain Duty," when it up and died. [Laughter.] We knew who killed him; but there is no official accountability for it. The author of "the heavenly twins" never knew his offspring from that hour. He had to be introduced to it (if you can call twins "it") every day; its hair, eyes, and complexion changed color daily, almost hourly. [Laughter.]

Seven wise men, doctors of harmony, cut the tissue that held the poor dead Duty—just Plain Duty—to the other one, the maternal heart was broken, and the blow "almost killed father." [Laughter.] He has rarely smiled since the House baby was grafted on in the place of Duty—just Plain Duty. In defense of the Senator from Ohio, I hope they will not lay it all to him. It is said that Charles Dickens cried when he wrote the last line of David Copperfield, he so hated to part with the child of his brain and fancy, and that he mourned for weeks over the death of his own Little Nell, but I imagine the junior Senator from Ohio could part with this little doublet without a heart throb or one drop of moisture in his eye. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, since "plain duty" has been severed from the Siamese twins, I can not vote for the bill. "The plain people," that Mr. Lincoln used to talk about—and we are called demagogues now when we talk about them, because all live men are politicians, and never become statesmen until they are dead [laughter]—the plain people will not stand this at all under any circumstances. We are scolded and browbeaten every time we talk about the Constitution, which we have sworn to support. Why, if the contention claimed for is true, let me show you what we could do as a Congress. I have not time to show you half we could do if we started out to do it. First, of course, imposts and duties do not have to be uniform in the Territories. It follows, therefore, that excise duties do not have to be uniform in the Territories. We could put a dollar tax on a gallon of whisky in Iowa, $2 in Porto Rico, and 30 cents in the Philippine Islands; and thus the law of equality or uniformity that the fathers pleaded for is gone like a tale that is told.

When the Virginia legislature first wrote a resolution pleading that we come together, what was their prayer? What was the object of the Constitution? To see how far the trade of the United States should be extended, to consider how far a uniform system in our commercial relations should be necessary to their common interest and their permanent harmony. The first gathering together in the evolution of nations when we had reached a point where we could stand against the world, the first thought of protection was that we should have uniformity; that by our first organic law we would protest against the infamy of kings; that hereafter the tax on tea, if necessary, should be levied under a law applying equally to all.

If this contention is true, then we can establish a uniform rule of naturalization that does not apply to the Territories. We can let a man vote there or not, or we can stop him on account of color or previous condition of servitude. We can coin money, regulate weights and measures, and we can make one weight and measure for Alaska and another for Porto Rico; we can provide for the punishment of counterfeiting, and yet take a man's life without trial by jury if he happens to counterfeit in Porto Rico. You may issue patents—one kind of patents in Illinois and another in the Territories. It says here that you can levy no export duty; and yet we are doing it in this bill. The plain language of the Constitution—which no one has thought to defend who presses this bill upon us as a party measure—the plain imposition of the Constitution that no export duty shall be charged, charges me 15 per cent on what I send from Chicago to Porto Rico and no per cent on what I send anywhere else, because there is no export duty under the Dingley law. We obeyed the Constitution when we made the Dingley law. What is to prevent us from doing it now?

"No preference shall be given in the regulation of commerce or revenue." That does not apply to these poor devils that we are talking about. It says also—and this is what pleases me and makes me feel happy—that "no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States."

I have been looking forward to the time when some imperial titles of nobility would be given to my colleagues. For days and weeks and months they have studied everything from the Spanish language to the pronunciation of "insular possessions." [Laughter.] The fathers said you can give no title of nobility; but this bill says, and the defenders of it—they do not all say it, because there is a difference of opinion even upon that; but the most of them who talk about it say that we have a free hand in legislation in the colonies—oh, I beg your pardon—"in our insular possessions" [laughter]—and we can grant titles of nobility there, though we can not in Iowa or Illinois. Oh, no, Mr. President; that will not do.

I have taken too much time. As I said before, the plain people will not stand it. God help the man who takes to the people in November, and asks for an indorsement or a return to a seat here or at the other end of the Capitol, the proposition that we can make anything but uniform laws; that the Constitution is locked up within the Union of the States, and that we can go to Porto Rico, as we do in this bill, and govern the people there and make them swear to support the Constitution, and then not give them the blessings of the thing they support—that is, they are to have the responsibilities and duties without its glorious advantages. That will not do.

We have gone on until the Filipino pot has turned so black that we dare not even mention the kettle in South Africa, and when we speak of the Constitution or the Declaration of Independence our colleagues and the press announce that there is treason abroad.

Mr. President, I will go back to my constituents with this instrument. It is old-fashioned. Whatever may have been my shortcomings, I have been independent enough to demand liberty for myself, and just enough to hope for it for others. I remember that I took an oath to support this Constitution. I will go back to my constituents and say: "Popular or unpopular, imperial or otherwise, believing in equality before the law, I have never voted for a tax upon the people that is not uniform, and have, with the best light that God has given me, kept the faith, and have not abandoned the precepts of the fathers." [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, speaking in general terms, the bill under consideration provides, among other things, that tariff duties at 15 per cent of those fixed by the Dingley Act shall be levied upon all articles imported into the United States from Porto Rico and upon all articles imported into Porto Rico from the United States. In my judgment these duties are indefensible upon moral, economic, and constitutional grounds; and while my views are well defined and fixed, they will be presented with that respect and deference which the circumstances and the occasion naturally suggest.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] who has charge of this measure has stated several times during this debate, which he has conducted with marked courtesy and ability, that the doctrine that the Constitution extends over the Territories was invented by Mr. Calhoun in 1849-50 in the interest of human slavery. That statement, Mr. President, has been reiterated by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] with something of an appeal to the prejudices and passions of the unhappy days of negro servitude.

It is to be regretted that this vexed question should have been drawn into this controversy, as the tendency will be to prevent dispassionate consideration; but it is such a grave historical misstatement that it must not go unchallenged and unrefuted. The Constitution itself, properly understood and interpreted, is the true origin of the doctrine, and among public men it was first announced in 1805 by Mr. Jefferson, not in the interest of human slavery, to which he was opposed, but in furtherance of religious freedom.

In 1809 it was declared in its true breadth and fullness by Mr. Madison, the author of the Constitution; and in 1820 by the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Chief Justice Marshall, in the celebrated case of Loughborough vs. Blake, 5 Wheaton. Later on, if I have an opportunity, this opinion of the Chief Justice will be adverted to more fully; but it occurs to me to be appropriate at this time to read what Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison said upon the subject.

In the second inaugural address of President Jefferson he used this language, speaking of the inhabitants of the Territory of Louisiana:

> In matters of religion I have considered that its free exercise is placed by the Constitution independent of the powers of the General Government. I have, therefore, undertaken on no occasion to prescribe the religious exercise suited to it, but have left them as the Constitution found them—under the direction and discipline of the church or state authorities acknowledged by the several religious societies.

In 1809, as I have stated, President Madison addressed a letter to the representatives of the Mississippi Territory, in which this language was used:

> The Constitution of the United States is well entitled to the high character you assign to it. It is among the proofs of its merit that it is capable of inspiring with admiration and attachment the most distant members of the comprehensive family over whom its guardianship extends. And it is equally honorable to their enlarged patriotism to cherish those sentiments, whilst the immaturity of their situation suspends a part of the advantages common to their fellow-citizens of the older communities.

In 1847 President Polk, speaking of the Territory of Oregon, which came to us by right of discovery, declared that the Constitution extended over it in this language:

> The attention of Congress was invited at their last and the preceding session to the importance of establishing a Territorial government over our possessions in Oregon, and it is to be regretted that there was no legislation on the subject. Our citizens who inhabit that distant region of country are still left without the protection of our laws, or any regularly organized government.
> Before the question of limits and boundaries of the Territory of Oregon was definitely settled, from the necessity of their condition the inhabitants had established a temporary government of their own. Besides the want of legal authority for continuing such a government, it is wholly inadequate to protect them in their rights of person and property or to secure to them the enjoyment of the privileges of other citizens, to which they are entitled under the Constitution of the United States. They should have the right of suffrage, be represented in a Territorial legislature and by a Delegate in Congress, and possess all the rights and privileges which citizens of other portions of the Territories of the United States have heretofore enjoyed or may now enjoy.

In 1848, in his fourth annual message to Congress, President Polk declared that the Constitution of the United States extended over the Territory of California, saying:

> Upon the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace with Mexico, on the 30th of May last, the temporary governments which had been established over New Mexico and California by our military and naval commanders by virtue of the rights of war ceased to derive any obligatory force from that source of authority, and having been ceded to the United States, all government and control over them under the authority of Mexico had ceased to exist.
> Impressed with the necessity of establishing Territorial governments over them, I recommended the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress in my message communicating the ratified treaty of peace, on the 6th of July last, and invoked their action at that session. Congress adjourned without making any provision for their government. The inhabitants by the transfer of their country had become entitled to the benefit of our laws and Constitution, and yet were left without any regularly organized government. Since that time the very limited power possessed by the Executive has been exercised to preserve and protect them from inevitable consequences of a state of anarchy.

Mr. President, this is not all. This doctrine was not only announced, as I have indicated, by eminent men of the Democratic persuasion, long before the time to which the Senator from Ohio referred, but, sir, every political party established in the United States which advocated the abolition of slavery declared by their platforms that appropriate provisions of the Constitution of the United States extended over the Territories. It was not until this question arose here quite recently that the Republican party assumed a different position upon it.

I beg to call the attention of the Senate to proof of the assertion which I make, that all political parties established in the United States which advocated the abolition of slavery, including the Republican party, announced the doctrine that appropriate provisions of the Constitution extended to the Territories.

In 1844 the Liberty Convention declared—

> That the fundamental truths of the Declaration of Independence, that all men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, was made the fundamental law of our National Government by that amendment of the Constitution which declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.
>
> That the General Government has, under the Constitution, no power to establish or continue slavery anywhere, and therefore that all treaties and acts of Congress establishing, continuing, or favoring slavery in the District of Columbia, in the Territory of Florida, or on the high seas are unconstitutional, and all attempts to hold men as property within the limits of exclusive national jurisdiction ought to be prohibited by law.

In 1848 the Free Soil convention declared:

> That our fathers ordained the Constitution of the United States in order, among other great national objects, to establish justice, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty; but expressly deny to the Federal Government, which they created, a constitutional power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due legal process.
> That in the judgment of this convention Congress has no more power to make a slave than to make a king; no more power to institute or establish slavery than to institute or establish a monarchy; no such power can be found among those specifically conferred by the Constitution or derived by just implication from them.

That it is the duty of the Federal Government to relieve itself from all responsibility for the existence or continuance of slavery wherever the Government possesses constitutional power to legislate on that subject, and it is thus responsible for its existence.

That the true and, in the judgment of this convention, the only safe means of preventing the extension of slavery into territory now free is to prohibit its extension in all such territory by an act of Congress.

In 1852 the Free Soil convention, which nominated Hale and Julian, declared:

That governments deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed are instituted among men to secure to all those inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness with which they are endowed by their Creator, and of which none can be deprived by valid legislation, except for crime.

* * * * * * *

That the Constitution of the United States, ordained to form a more perfect Union, to establish justice, and secure the blessings of liberty, expressly denies to the General Government all power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; and therefore the Government having no more power to make a slave than to make a king, and no more power to establish slavery than to establish a monarchy, should at once proceed to relieve itself from all responsibility for the existence of slavery wherever it possesses constitutional power to legislate for its existence.

That to the persevering and importunate demands of the slave power for more slave States, new slave Territories, and the nationalization of slavery, our distinct and final answer is: No more slave States, no slave Territory, no nationalized slavery, and no national legislation for the extradition of slaves.

On yesterday the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] read, in support of the proposition that the Constitution does not apply to the Territories, one of the planks of the Republican platform adopted in 1856, but, like the argument which has been made on the other side of the Chamber from some of the decisions of the Supreme Court, he fails to read all that was said upon the subject. Another plank of that platform, which he did not read, I beg to call to the attention of the Senate:

Resolved, That, with our republican fathers, we hold it to be a self-evident truth that all men are endowed with the inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that the primary object and ulterior design of our Federal Government were to secure these rights to all persons within its exclusive jurisdiction; that, as our Republican fathers, when they had abolished slavery in all our national territory, ordained that no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, it becomes our duty to maintain this provision of the Constitution against all attempts to violate it for the purpose of establishing slavery in the United States by positive legislation prohibiting its existence or extension therein; that we deny the authority of Congress, of a Territorial legislature, of any individual or association of individuals, to give legal existence to slavery in any Territory of the United States while the present Constitution shall be maintained.

Mr. President, I now come to the Republican platform of 1860, which Mr. Lincoln expressly approved in his letter of acceptance, and I call the attention of the Senate to the explicit declaration that the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States applies to the Territories, and, consequently, that Congress could not establish slavery there.

That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution, "That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed" is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions; and that the Federal Constitution, the rights of the States, and the Union of the States must and shall be preserved.

* * * * * * *

That the new dogma, that the Constitution of its own force carries slavery into any or all of the Territories of the United States, is a dangerous political heresy, at variance with the explicit provisions of that instrument itself, with contemporaneous exposition, and with legislative and judicial precedent; is revolutionary in its tendency and subversive of the peace and harmony of the country.

Bear in mind, now, Mr. President, the eighth declaration of the convention that nominated Mr. Lincoln for President:

That the normal condition of all the territory of the United States is that of freedom; that as our republican fathers, when they had abolished slavery in all our national territory, ordained that "no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," it becomes our duty by legislation, whenever such legislation is necessary, to maintain this provision of the Constitution against all attempts to violate it; and we deny the authority of Congress, of a Territorial legislature, or of any individuals to give legal existence to slavery in any Territory of the United States.

So it seems, as I insisted upon at the outset, that every political party which was organized in the United States in favor of the abolition of slavery declared that the fifth amendment of the Constitution extended of its own force to the Territories and was operative there, and that Congress could not establish slavery in the Territories because of the Constitution. No act of Congress pretended to extend the Constitution to any Territory until 1850.

I do not know whether it is wise in these days to quote from Mr. Lincoln, but I beg to call the attention of the Senate, nevertheless, to his declarations that the Constitution of the United States extended not only to the Territories but to the District of Columbia as well. I read from the first volume of the Speeches, Letters, and State Papers of Abraham Lincoln, compiled by Nicolay and Hay, page 416:

Now, I propose to show, in the teeth of Judge Douglas's ridicule, that such a decision does logically and necessarily follow the Dred Scott decision. In that case the court holds that Congress can legislate for the Territories in some respects, and in others it can not; that it can not prohibit slavery in the Territories, because to do so would infringe the "right of property" guaranteed to the citizens by the fifth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Unquestionably there is such a guaranty in the Constitution, whether or not the court rightfully apply it in this case.

I propose to show, beyond the power of quibble, that that guaranty applies with all the force, if not more, to States that it does to Territories. The answers to two questions fix the whole thing. To whom is this guaranty given, and against whom does it protect those to whom it is given? The guaranty makes no distinction between persons in the States and those in the Territories. It is given to persons in the States certainly as much as, if not more than, to those in the Territories. "No person," under the shadow of the Constitution, "shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Against whom does this guaranty protect the rights of property? Not against Congress alone, but against the world; against State constitutions and laws, as well as against acts of Congress."

Mr. President [after a pause and noting loud talking in rear of the seats on the Republican side of the Chamber], it is well that the new leader of the Republican party declines to listen to the words of Abraham Lincoln.

On February 27 and 28, 1861, after Mr. Lincoln reached Washington, preparatory to his inauguration as President, he delivered two short addresses, one in reply to the mayor and board of aldermen, and the other in response to a serenade. In the first he declared:

I have not now any purpose to withhold from you any of the benefits of the Constitution, under any circumstances, that I would not feel myself constrained to withhold from my own neighbors.

In the second he said:

I hope that if things shall go along as prosperously as I believe we all desire they may, I may have it in my power to remove something of this misunderstanding; that I may be enabled to convince you and the people of your section of the country that we regard you as in all things our equals, and in all things entitled to the same respect and the same treatment that we claim for ourselves; that we are in no wise disposed, if it were in our power, to oppress you, or deprive you of any of your rights under the Constitution of the United States, or even narrowly to split hairs with you in regard to these rights, but are determined to give you, as far as lies in our hands, all your rights under the Constitution—not grudgingly, but fully and fairly. I hope that, by thus dealing with you, we will become better acquainted, and be better friends.

It was not until 1871 that an act of Congress purported to extend the Constitution over the District of Columbia, and it thus appears that ten years prior to this the illustrious leader of the Republican party maintained that it was as effective there as in Illinois.

Attention has been called in this debate to internal taxes levied in Alaska by Congress. When the same question shall be presented respecting Porto Rico, it will be squarely met, and it is sufficient now to say that under the Constitution both direct and indirect taxes may be levied in Alaska without being uniform throughout the United States. The question here is whether import duties shall be uniform; and the record of the Republican party was completed in 1868 in favor of the extension of the Constitution of its own force to the Territories when the Administration declared in the following orders that Alaska was entitled to free trade after the ratification of the treaty with Russia by which it was annexed to the United States:

FURS FROM ALASKA VIA HAWAIIAN ISLANDS IN AMERICAN VESSELS FREE.

Furs brought from the Hawaiian Islands in American vessels, certified by a resident United States consul as products of Alaska, procured by American whaling vessels in Alaska, the landing of which was a mere incident in the transportation to the United States, are admitted to entry free of duty.—Circular to Collectors, March 5, 1868.

SITKA, MERCHANDISE FROM, SHIPPED AFTER RATIFICATION OF THE TREATY ENTITLED TO FREE ENTRY.

Merchandise (oil) shipped from Alaska after the ratification of the treaty with the United States, June 20, 1867, is entitled to entry free of duty.—Letter to Collector at New York, April 6, 1868.

Ah, Mr. President, what a change, what a marvelous, what an ominous change! The Republican party in its youth, dedicated to manhood liberties, and under the leadership of Lincoln, would extend the power of Congress to the Territories accompanied by the Constitution, in order to liberate a race. The Republican party of to-day, dedicated to commercial greed, and under the leadership of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], would carry the power of Congress to the Territories unaccompanied by the Constitution, in order to accomplish the industrial enslavement of a people struggling to be free.

Coming to the bill itself, it would be particularly unfortunate if, at the outset of our relation to this island, in imposing tariff duties, we should, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, the President, and millions of their countrymen, discredit the public faith and violate our plain duty as a people. We engaged in war with Spain upon high grounds of human sympathy and national obligation, and our conduct should not be tarnished by so credible and so grave an accusation. Now that we are to deal directly with a people for whose kindred near by we went to battle, our course should be above suspicion, for it is especially incumbent upon a great nation, in dealing with a weak and dependent country, to place its action upon such generous and magnanimous lines as to disarm criticism and leave no possible stain upon its character or its honor. To impose duties upon the trade between Porto Rico and the United States would also, in my judgment, in an economic sense, be detrimental to the best interests of both countries.

The objection to the imposition of such duties which I desire to urge particularly, however, is that Congress is without authority under the Constitution to impose them. It is not my purpose to discuss the broad question of the power of the United States to acquire territory or the limitations upon that power. Nor do I intend to debate now the full extent of the application of the Constitution to acquired territory previous to statehood.

It has been asserted by some that the Constitution does not of its own force extend over the Territories, and by others that it does extend over them. Very probably, Mr. President, these general assertions in many instances were not intended to express fully the opinions of the speakers; but, however that may be, both propositions are in my opinion inaccurate and unsound. Manifestly there are provisions of the Constitution which do not extend to the Territories—such, for instance, as those relating to the election of members of this body, for the Territories are not entitled to representation here; and there are provisions which do apply—such, for instance, as those which authorize the acquisition, disposition, and government of the Territories, for these involve their very origin and existence.

Some provisions applying and others not, the true inquiry in each case of proposed legislation is whether there are appropriate provisions which are operative. As Porto Rico has been annexed as territory of the United States, whatever may be said of many of the provisions of the Constitution, those unquestionably apply to this bill which relate to taxes, duties, imposts, and excises.

There are three provisions of the Constitution which it is proper to consider in determining this question. First, no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State; second, Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and, third, Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

A majority of the committee which reported this measure take the position that in legislating for the Territories Congress is not governed or restricted by any of the guaranties or prohibitions in the Constitution. Those of us who disagree with that contention believe that when Congress legislates respecting the Territories it is bound to observe the guaranties of personal rights as well as other limitations upon Congressional power contained in the organic law.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the provision of this bill which authorizes the collection of import duties in this country on goods from Porto Rico is drawn under or is germane to the Territorial clause of the Constitution. It is in that guise, but it is, nevertheless, in evasion of the Constitution. The tax is levied by the United States; it is levied for the United States; it is levied and collected in the United States; it is levied upon citizens and importers of the United States, and it is finally paid in whole or in part by consumers in the United States.

The United States are as clearly responsible for the expenses of government in Porto Rico as for the expenses of the Federal Government in any State of the Union, and when a tax is levied upon imports coming from Porto Rico into the United States Congress is proceeding, not under the Territorial clause of the Constitution, but under the taxing clause, to levy taxes to raise revenue to support the Government of the United States. That the duties are to be applied exclusively to the payment of expenditures in Porto Rico is only a remote incident, the primary consideration being that they are for the use of the United States, levied and collected as stated. But admitting, for the sake of argument, that this provision of the pending bill is under the Territorial clause of the Constitution, it is in violation of that instrument, because under such circumstances Congress is limited by the taxing clause, and it is admitted that the duties are not uniform, either geographically or in the sense of equality.

When we turn to an intrinsic consideration of the proposition that the power of Congress over the Territories is unlimited, the first thought is that it is fraught with danger and is contrary to the form and genius of our Government. The Territorial limits, always considerable if not great, now embrace thousands of square miles, countless property values, and probably 15,000,000 of people, far in excess of those of the original thirteen States when the Constitution was formed. To commit these vast interests, pregnant with life and liberty and property to a partisan majority in Congress, unrestrained by constitutional limitations, bound only by convenient and serviceable political platitudes, would in the light of history invite profligacy, corruption, and oppression.

The world, sir, has known many forms of government. There have been despotisms; there have been aristocracies; there have been monarchies, absolute and limited; there have been pure and representative democracies. The marvel of government which we have presented to mankind is not only a representative democracy, but one whose distinguishing characteristic is a written Constitution, with delegated powers, clearly defined and limited. Beyond all other forms of government it has restrained excesses and preserved liberty. This bill is an insidious attack upon it, not only its outward form but its genius and its soul, and if passed will be a dangerous stride toward arbitrary and despotic power.

This, sir, is not the creation of partisan enthusiasm or the specter of an alarmist. It is the logical result of the principles and policies underlying this measure, the certain effect of unbridled legislative power. Already the skirmish line of the imperial forces has been thrown forward. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has qualified the Declaration of Independence with what Lincoln called the argument of kings.

The junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] only a few days ago declared in effect that our Constitution, consecrated by time, by sacrifice, and by blood, was unsuited to the new policies and the new career upon which we are entering, and that the unwritten constitution of the aristocracy of England was preferable to the written constitution of the democracy of France. For myself, leaning upon the sure foundations of freedom, I pray God the time may never come when Congress or any governmental agency will have unlimited power over the life or liberty or property of the humblest man who lives beneath the flag.

A limited government with unlimited powers is a constitutional absurdity. Argument upon a proposition so manifest should not be necessary, but in an another view of the Constitution the contention of unrestricted authority in Congress over the Territories is inherently and radically unsound. The Constitution was intended by the framers, in its conception and by its terms, as an orderly, proportioned, and symmetrical system of Federal government.

The plan contemplated that all of its parts should stand in any given case, and to avoid detail and repetition each of the divisions of government was made harmonious and consonant with all others. The inhibitive provisions leveled at Federal authority extend to its action whatever the occasion or whatever the agency through which it should attempt to exert itself. All of the provisions of the great instrument are interdependent and interwoven as component parts of the same comprehensive and splendid scheme.

The cardinal rule of constitutional interpretation is that, if possible, every clause shall be given effect. But what will be the result if we adopt the logic and the reasoning of the committee? Only the particular clause invoked in any given case will be effective, notwithstanding the manner of its exercise may contravene others, which logically pursued would practically destroy all restraints upon Congressional action and change the Government from one of limited to one of unlimited powers.

It is true there is no limitation upon the authority of Congress to legislate respecting the Territories in that particular section of the Constitution, but the limitation is elsewhere in that instrument, either in methods prescribed for legislating upon subjects which may be included in that in reference to Territories, such as taxation, or in express prohibition upon Federal action in any case, such as the establishment of religion. While Congress is empowered to legislate for the Territories, yet, if in so doing it becomes necessary to enter upon specific subjects of legislation which are regulated or controlled by the Constitution, its provisions must be respected and observed, not only upon grounds already stated, but also because particular provisions control and limit those of a general character.

The power over the Territories is not broader than that over many other subjects. Congress has power to regulate commerce, borrow money, establish post-offices and post-roads, declare and wage war, raise and support armies, provide and maintain a navy, and there is no limitation immediately associated with either of these grants of power. Will it be insisted that in exercising any of these powers the limitations in reference to taxation may be violated?

It can not be contended that the power of Congress "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the District of Columbia is less circumscribed than that over the Territories, and yet eighty years ago it was settled by the Supreme Court of the United States (Loughborough vs. Blake, 5 Wheaton, 317) that the limitations of the taxing power applied to legislation for the District of Columbia, and it is equally well settled by the same authority (Callan vs. Wilson, 127 U. S., 550) that the constitutional guaranties in criminal proceedings are secured to the people of that District.

Both as an original proposition and upon judicial decision the phrase "throughout the United States" in the taxing clause of the Constitution embraces the Territories, and consequently import duties imposed within or respecting them must be uniform with those imposed within or respecting the States. "Throughout the United States" is obviously used in the sense of extent or dominion as contradistinguished from the idea of political entity, and was intended to embrace the area over which the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United States extends.

At the time the Constitution was framed the United States possessed the greater part of the vast territory north of the Ohio River. It was inhabited by an intelligent and sturdy population, jealous of their rights and privileges. In the celebrated ordinance which provided a government for this territory it was declared that—

> The inhabitants and settlers in the said territory shall be subject to pay a part of the Federal debts contracted or to be contracted and a proportional part of the expenses of government, to be apportioned on them by Congress according to the same common rule and measure by which apportionments thereof shall be made on the other States, and the taxes for paying their proportion shall be laid and levied by the authority and direction of the legislatures of the districts or new States as in the original States—> the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, shall be common highways and forever free as well to the inhabitants of the said territory as to the citizens of the United States and those of any other States that may be admitted into the confederacy, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

This ordinance was adopted July 13, 1787, and the Constitution was signed September 17, 1787.

It is a well-known historical fact that the ordinance was brought to the attention of members of the Constitutional Convention during its deliberations, and it is not to be presumed, in view of the great difficulty involved in the adjustment of the ownership and future government of this Territory, that the convention intended to subject it and the inhabitants to a rule of taxation different from the States and at variance with this ordinance. This conclusion is greatly strengthened by the act of Congress approved August 7, 1789, which, making no changes in the ordinance as to taxation, declared that the act was passed so as to adapt the ordinance "to the present Constitution of the United States."

In harmony with this view, Chief Justice Marshall said, in Loughborough vs. Blake (5 Wheaton, 319):

> The power, then, to lay and collect duties, imposts, and excises may be exercised, and must be exercised throughout the United States. Does this term designate the whole or any particular portion of the American empire? Certainly this question can admit of but one answer. It is the name given to our great Republic, which is composed of States and Territories. The District of Columbia or the territory west of the Missouri is not less within the United States than Maryland or Pennsylvania; and it is not less necessary, on the principles of our Constitution, that uniformity in the imposition of imposts, duties, and excises should be observed in the one than in the other.

In another well-known case decided subsequently to the preceding, and which has never been reversed or modified, the Supreme Court of the United States held that import duties must be uniform over the States and Territories. On May 30, 1848, ratifications of the treaty of peace between the United States and Mexico were exchanged, by which California was annexed. On October 7, 1848, James Buchanan, Secretary of State, in written instructions to an agent of the United States in California, said:

> The President congratulates the citizens of California on the annexation of their fine province to the United States. On the 30th May, 1848, the day on which the ratifications of our late treaty with Mexico were exchanged, California finally became an integral part of this great and glorious Republic.
> But, above all, the Constitution of the United States, the safeguard of all our civil rights, was extended over California on the 30th May, 1848, the day on which our late treaty with Mexico was finally consummated. From that day its inhabitants became entitled to all the blessings and benefits resulting from the best form of civil government ever established among men.

On the same day Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury, issued the following instructions to customs officers:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 7, 1848.
> On the 30th of May last, upon the exchange of ratifications of our treaty with Mexico, California became a part of the American Union, in consequence of which various questions have been presented by merchants and collectors for the decision of this Department.
> By the Constitution of the United States it is declared that "all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." By the treaty with Mexico, California is annexed to this Republic, and the Constitution of the United States is extended over that territory and is in full force throughout its limits. Congress also, by several enactments subsequent to the ratification of the treaty, have distinctly recognized California as a part of the Union, and have extended over it, in several important particulars, the laws of the United States.
> Under these circumstances, the following instructions are issued by this Department:
> First. All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of California, shipped therefrom at any time since the 30th May last, are entitled to admission free of duty into all ports of the United States.
>
> Second. All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States are entitled to admission free of duty into California, as are also all foreign goods which are exempt from duty by the laws of Congress, or on which goods the duties prescribed by those laws have been paid to any collector of the United States previous to their introduction into California.
> Third. Although the Constitution of the United States extends to California, and Congress have recognized it by law as a part of the Union, and legislated for it as such, yet it is not brought by law within the limits of any collection district, nor has Congress authorized the appointment of any officers to collect the revenue accruing on the import of foreign dutiable goods into that Territory. Under these circumstances, although this Department may be unable to collect the duties accruing on importations from foreign countries into California, yet, if foreign dutiable goods should be introduced there, and shipped thence to any port or place of the United States, they will be subject to duty, as also to all the penalties prescribed by law when such importation is attempted without the payment of duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas will suspend one moment. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the speeches from 2 o'clock until 4 will be limited to fifteen minutes each. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Texas be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. CULLOM. He can conclude in fifteen minutes, can he not?

Mr. BERRY. He may not be able to conclude in fifteen minutes.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the Senator from Texas be permitted to conclude.

Mr. FORAKER. Let us wait and, when a quarter after 2 is reached, see what the situation is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. CULBERSON. During the progress of the Mexican war President Polk, in 1847, imposed a war tariff in California. On February 3, 1848, the treaty of peace was concluded; May 30, 1848, ratifications were exchanged; August 9, 1848, as soon as he was notified of the exchange of ratifications, the military governor of California substituted the tariff of 1846 for the war tariff; September 3, 1848, Harrison, a civilian, was appointed collector of San Francisco by the governor; March 3, 1849, San Francisco was included in a collection district, and on November 13, 1849, Collier was appointed collector by President Polk. Tariff duties were paid by Cross and others between February 3, 1848, and November 13, 1849, at war rates, until the fall of 1848, and afterwards under the act of 1846. Upon these facts suit was instituted by Cross and others to recover the duties paid by them, and, in finally determining the case, the Supreme Court held:

1. Until the date of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty, the duties were lawfully collected under the war or belligerent power.

2. The imposition of the duties provided by the tariff of 1846, after the exchange of ratifications was lawful and constitutional.

3. By the exchange of ratifications California became a part of the United States and was instantly bound by the tariff laws of the United States.

4. By the exchange of ratifications of the treaty the Constitution was extended over California without Congressional action and the provision of the Constitution as to the uniformity of import duties applied to California.

This case (Cross vs. Harrison, 16 Howard, 164) conclusively settles the question, and consequently efforts have been made to qualify it by insisting in effect that the tariff of 1846 was put in operation by the President under the war power. That President Polk did not so understand it appears from his message, from which I heretofore quoted, in which he said that the temporary governments established by the military commander "by virtue of the rights of war, ceased to derive any obligatory force from that source of authority" after the exchange of ratifications of the treaty, and that his subsequent action was under "the very limited power possessed by the Executive," evidently referring to his authority to see that the civil laws were executed under the embarrassing conditions.

It is too significant to be misunderstood or disregarded that after final ratification of the treaty the civil tariff was put in operation and a civil officer was made collector. This action of the President was declared by the court to be—> a rightful and correct recognition under all the circumstances; and when we say rightful we mean that it was constitutional, although Congress had not passed an act to extend the collection of tonnage and import duties to the ports of California.

That by the exchange of ratifications of the treaty California became a part of the United States, over which the Constitution and laws became instantly operative, without an express act of Congress, is thus pointedly and emphatically decided by the court:

> By the ratifications of the treaty California became a part of the United States. And as there is nothing differently stipulated in the treaty with respect to commerce, it became instantly bound and privileged by the laws which Congress had passed to raise a revenue from duties on imports and tonnage. It was bound by the eighteenth section of the act of 2d of March, 1799. The fair interpretation of the second member of the first sentence of that section is that ships coming from foreign ports into the United States were not to be permitted to land any part of their cargoes in any other than in a port of delivery, confined then to the ports mentioned in the act; afterwards applicable to all other places which might be made ports of entry and delivery, and excluding all right to unlade in any part of the United States which had not been made a collection district, with ports of entry or delivery. The ninety-second section of that act had four objects in view:
> First, to exclude foreign goods subject to the payment of duties from being brought into the United States, except in the localities stated, otherwise than by sea; next, that they were not to be brought by sea in vessels of less than 30 tons burden; and third, to subject to forfeiture any foreign goods which might be landed at any other port or place in the United States than such as were designated by law; fourth, to exclude the allowances of drawback of any duties on foreign goods exported from any district in the United States otherwise than by sea, and in vessels less than 30 tons burden. The sixty-third section also of that act, directing when tonnage duties were to be paid, became as operative in California after its cession to the United States as it was in any collection district.

The acts of the 20th of July, 1790 (1 Stat. L., 130, chapter 30), and that of 2d of March, 1799 (1 Stat. L., 627, chapter 22), were also of force in California without other special legislation declaring them to be so. It can not very well be contended that the words "entered the United States" give an exemption from them on account of the word entered, because a ship has been brought into a port in the United States where an entry can not be made, as it may be done in a collection district. The goods must be entered before a permit for delivery can be given. Shall one, then, be permitted to land goods in any part of the United States not in a collection district because he has voluntarily gone there with his vessel, where an entry of his goods can not be made; or to say, I know that my goods can not be entered where I am, and therefore claim the right to land them for sale and consumption free of duty?

It has been sufficiently shown that the plaintiffs had no right to land their foreign goods in California at the time when their ships arrived with them, except by a compliance with the regulations which the civil government were authorized to enforce, first, under a war tariff, and afterwards under the existing tariff act of the United States. By the last foreign goods, as they are enumerated, are made dutiable; they are not so because they are brought into a collection district, but because they are imported into the United States.

The tariff act of 1846 prescribes what that duty shall be. Can any reason be given for the exemption of foreign goods from duty because they have not been entered and collected at a port of delivery? The last became a part of the consumption of the country, as well as the others. They may be carried from the point of landing into collection districts within which duties have been paid upon the same kinds of goods; thus entering, by the retail sale of them, into competition with such goods, and with our own manufactures and the products of our own farmers and planters. The right claimed to land foreign goods in the United States at any place out of a collection district, if allowed, would be a violation of that provision in the Constitution which enjoins that all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Indeed, it must be very clear that no such right exists, and that there was nothing in the condition of California to exempt importers of foreign goods into it from the payment of the same duties which were chargeable in the other ports of the United States. As to the denial of the authority of the President to prevent the landing of foreign goods in the United States out of a collection district, it can only be necessary to say, if he did not do so, it would be a neglect of his constitutional obligation "to take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

Strong as is the case against the constitutionality of duties on imports from Porto Rico, the case against the imposition of duties on articles imported into Porto Rico from the United States is far stronger. The Constitution declares that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." On yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asserted, I understand, that under the Constitution there is no limit upon the authority of the President to levy taxes, duties, and imposts as an incident of the war power. To this proposition I can not assent.

This prohibition against laying any tax or duty on articles exported from any State is aimed at the exercise of that power by Congress, the President, and every other Federal agency, and is operative at all times, whether in peace or in war; and if it has been exercised by the President with reference to articles entering Porto Rico from the United States, it is an undoubted violation of the Constitution. This provision of the Constitution is one of the most important in that instrument.

The debates of the Convention show that it was intended to prevent a combination by which a majority of the States could lay an unjust and disproportionate burden upon the products of a minority of the States, and so intense was the conviction upon the subject that it was frequently asserted that the Constitution could not be adopted without it.

It is a limitation upon the power of Congress or other Federal authority in any case or for any purpose, and the duty levied by the bill is certainly a tax on articles exported from the States within its clear meaning, because it is laid upon the articles after and because of exportation and before they mingle in the mass of property in Porto Rico. Before the articles are started in course of exportation and after they leave the custom-house and become part of the general property in Porto Rico they may be taxed, but in the interim the prohibition applies, and they can not be taxed. In the case of Turpin vs. Burgess (117 U. S., 506) the Supreme Court thus announced the true doctrine upon the question:

> Now, the constitutional prohibition against taxing exports is substantially the same when directed to the United States as when directed to a State. In the one case the words are "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." In the other they are, "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports." The prohibition in both cases has reference to the imposition of duties on goods by reason or because of their exportation or intended exportation or whilst they are being exported. That would be laying a tax or duty on exports or on articles exported, within the meaning of the Constitution.

As a final argument for this measure they tell us the duty is light and inconsiderable. How untrue that is has been shown by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], but its oppressive character may be further seen from the fact that upon the people of Porto Rico, poor and impoverished as they are, this bill levies a greater tax by at least $3 per capita than is levied for all State purposes upon the people of Texas, who are prosperous and happy.

But, Mr. President, if it be true that the tax is light it neither palliates nor justifies the offense. Not many years ago Benjamin Harrison, gifted beyond all the Presidents with felicity of speech, in discussing a proposed tariff from his standpoint, declared that it was not so much the length as the direction of the step which was alarming. So is it here. It is something to put behind us our olemn duty; it is humiliating and cowardly to wrong a defenseless and prostrate people at the dictation of avarice and greed; it wounds the public conscience to disregard our plighted faith as a nation; but to do these things in violation of the organic law is an assault upon our institutions and a crime against free government.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it is extremely difficult to understand and fully comprehend all of the pending legislation providing for a future government for the people of Porto Rico. The House passed a bill providing for tariff duties of 15 per cent on the Dingley tariff on all goods going into Porto Rico from the United States and a similar duty on all goods coming from Porto Rico into the United States. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico in the Senate and was reported back and embedded in a bill providing for a civil government for the people of Porto Rico, and in this shape is now pending in the Senate. The senior Senator from Ohio introduced a bill providing for a civil government for the people of Porto Rico, and the bill provided a liberal Territorial government for that island, corresponding in every particular with the Territorial governments that have heretofore been organized since the foundation of our Government, and in its leading features is antagonistic to the present bill reported by the committee of which the honorable Senator is chairman.

The bill first introduced by the Senator made the people of Porto Rico citizens of the United States, extended the provisions of the Constitution to the island, and provided for absolute free trade between the people of that island and the United States. The bill now advocated by the Senator deprives the people of that island of the privileges of American citizenship, does not extend the Constitution to the island, fixes tariff duties between the United States and those people, and is an entirely new departure from all Territorial governments heretofore organized since we became a nation. The first bill I shall show later in my argument, if my time will permit, was in keeping with the original message of the President addressed to Congress on this subject.

The principal part of my remarks will be devoted to that feature of the bill now pending before the Senate which provides for tariff duties between the United States and Porto Rico, which practically treats Porto Rico as a foreign country in our relations with the people of that island, for such tariff duties destroy the free and uninterrupted trade relations which ought to exist between us and that island. I shall not attempt to discuss the legal question as to whether the Constitution by virtue of its own force extends to the island. The question I wish to consider is, What policy does justice and right demand that we should pursue in dealing with the people of Porto Rico?

In order to solve this question and to provide a suitable civil government for this people it becomes absolutely essential that we should know something of their habits, desires, and aspirations, and especially their capacity for self-government. The idea has been advanced that they are an ignorant, poverty-stricken people, incapable of taking care of themselves. This island—80 miles in length and 40 in width, containing a population of a million of people, 830,000 of them belonging to the Caucasian race—has a history interesting, instructive, and one of which the people of that island should be proud.

They are a peaceable, law-abiding people, and were even faithful to the parent country—Spain. While at this time they are in financial distress, which is attributable to the unprecedented hurricane which destroyed the products of the island in August, 1898, previous to that time the government of Porto Rico and the people of that island were more than able to take care of themselves. What were their relations with Spain before we acquired sovereignty there? It is a fact that can not be disputed that the people of Porto Rico had been demanding from Spain for more than a quarter of a century autonomous, local self-government and that Spain had acceded to their demands.

Spain had given to the people of Porto Rico the absolute right to govern themselves in their local affairs. Spain gave to them the same representation in the Spanish Cortes that any other citizens of Spain had. The people of Porto Rico had four members in the upper branch of the Spanish Cortes and sixteen in the lower branch. The people of Porto Rico had been contending with Spain for free trade between Spain and that island for many years, in order that the Porto Ricans might have a market for the coffee, sugar, tobacco, and other products. Spain had acceded to this demand. There was practically free trade between Spain and Porto Rico for many years before we acquired the island, the tariff duties being only 10 per cent, and this tariff was to cease on July 1, 1898; so on that day absolute free trade existed between the people of Porto Rico and Spain.

The people of Porto Rico found a ready market for their surplus products both in Cuba and Spain, but now this is not the case, as the tariff duties between Cuba, Spain, and Porto Rico are really prohibitory, and the people of Porto Rico are compelled to find a market for their goods in the United States, and if we fail to give them free trade they become isolated and are cut off from the markets of the world. The people of Porto Rico during the last quarter of a century took care of themselves financially, and during this period their government never owed a dollar. There were 40,000 slaves on the island and during this same period every one of them was freed, and this was done by the people of Porto Rico, and this same people paid to the owners of the slaves more than $12,000,000.

They have made a remarkable record. They loaned to Spain time and again from their treasury money to pay the expenses of her numerous wars, and the government of Porto Rico had in its treasury a million and a half of dollars at the time the United States came in possession of this island. This is the remarkable people who gladly accepted American sovereignty and hailed with joy and delight the American flag, and for whom we are now about to legislate. Their past struggles and achievements entitle them to our most favorable consideration, and the American people will demand at the hands of their representatives that no discrimination shall be made against these people, but that they shall be treated as American citizens and clothed with all the rights and privileges due to American citizens.

I am opposed to tariff duties between Porto Rico and the United States, because when Spain ceded this island to us, within a few hundred miles of our coast, a part of the Western Hemisphere, populated by the Caucasian race, who were fully in sympathy with our form of government, we knew this people would expect to become an integral part of our Republic and ask to be treated as any other Territory belonging to the United States, and at every step of our intercourse with them we led them to believe this right would be accorded to them.

The proposition that we will take an island near our doors, populated by our own blood and kindred; own, control, and govern it, a part of our own continent, intended to be under our system of government; require the people of that island to obey the laws and Constitution of the United States, and deprive them of the privilege of free trade and intercourse with the United States, is unjust, conscienceless, and defenseless. To state the proposition to the American people is all that is required to ask its condemnation. I place Porto Rico and Cuba on higher grounds than the Philippine Islands. The location of these islands, their proximity to us, their Caucasian population, especially the population of Porto Rico, lead me to expect that the people of Porto Rico will become valuable and useful citizens of the United States and will at no distant day in the future ask and receive the privileges of statehood.

The proposition that we are to establish a colony or a dependency on the Western Hemisphere, almost within sight of our own country, that shall not enjoy and partake of our free institutions, should stagger the American people. We should remember that these people had struggled with Spain for more than a quarter of a century for free trade and free interchange of products between Spain and the island, which resulted in their demands being granted. Now we take them and begin with them as Spain held them a quarter of a century ago. They will have lost every inch of ground they had gained over Spain in their historic struggle. Should we be surprised that these people now clamor against us and declare that we are cruel, unjust, and that the comparison they now make between us and Spain is to our great disadvantage?

Where will this people find a market for their sugar, coffee, tobacco, and other products, as they are now cut off from the markets of Spain and Cuba, if we build a tariff wall between us and them and deny them the right to sell their goods in our markets free of duties? The proposition that 75,000,000 people with eighty billions of wealth can not afford to come in competition with the handful of people in this little island is cowardly and deserves the contempt of the American people. It is conceded that under the Constitution that no tax or export duty can be laid upon articles exported from any State, but those who favor this tariff claim that the duties under this bill will be collected after the ship arrives in Porto Rico.

Let us illustrate: A vessel leaves Savannah loaded with lumber. She sails for Porto Rico; the tariff duties under this bill say would equal $500. It is admitted that we could not collect this tariff tax in the port of Savannah, but our friends on the other side claim that after the ship arrives in Porto Rico this rule does not apply; but how any lawyer can see the distinction between collecting the duty when the vessel leaves Savannah or in collecting it after the vessel arrives at Porto Rico I am unable to see. In both cases the same Government collects and uses the money. It is conceded that a vessel sailing from Savannah to New York or to any part of the United States could not be made to pay this tax for the reason that absolute free trade and interchange of products exists between every part of the United States.

Porto Rico, by virtue of a treaty, has been made a part of the United States; still we say the rule applicable to the United States shall not apply to this island. Again, Mr. President, I am opposed to these discriminating duties, because such a course violates the promises and good faith of our Government to these people. Those who have administered our Government in the past have maintained most scrupulously the sacred honor of the nation. This course has given us a standing and character among the family of nations that challenges the admiration of the civilized world. This people had been taught to believe that our flag carried with it liberty, freedom, and equal opportunity. They had been taught to believe that this great Republic made no distinction between its citizens.

They expected when the American flag was planted on that island and American sovereignty was asserted there that they would become American citizens and enjoy American liberty. They received American government and accepted American supremacy with gladness and joy because they expected American citizenship. When General Miles landed upon their soil he was received with honor as the representative of our Government. He entered the island on July 28, 1898, and issued his proclamation to the people of Porto Rico. What did he say? He said that our soldiers come bearing the banner of freedom to the people of Porto Rico, inspired by noble purpose, to seek the enemies of our country and yours, and to destroy or capture all who are in armed resistance. We bring you the fostering arm of a nation of free people, whose greatest power is in its justice and humanity to all those living within its fold. We have not come to make war upon the people of the country that for centuries has been oppressed, but, on the contrary, to bring you protection, and not only to yourselves, but to your property, to your prosperity, and to bestow upon you the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government. This promise was made to them when we first entered the island and planted our flag there. The provisions of this bill, levying these discriminating duties, refusing them free trade, is a notorious violation of our promise and repudiates our most solemn pledge made at the very beginning of our occupancy of the island.

This promise of justice and to bestow upon them the immunities and blessings of our Government was received by them with enthusiasm and cherished as a blessing which would make them participants in the free institutions of this great Republic. Trace every step of our intercourse with this people from the time we took possession of the island until Congress convened in December last, and they were led to believe that our Government would fulfill these promises. When General Brooke had charge of the island he assured those people that these promises would be kept. He was succeeded by General Henry, and what did he say to the citizens of Porto Rico when he arrived on that island representing the United States?

He said to them: "To-day the flag of the United States floats as an emblem of undisputed authority over the island of Porto Rico, giving promise of protection to life, of liberty, prosperity, and the right to worship God in accordance with the dictates of conscience. The forty-five States represented by the stars, emblazoned on the blue field of that flag, unite in vouchsafing to you prosperity and protection as citizens of the American Union." Mark you, Mr. President, he guaranteed to them that the promises which General Miles had made would be kept and that we would guarantee to them that prosperity and protection due to American citizens.

Now, what reply did the people of Porto Rico make to this promise? They said: "Porto Rico has not accepted American domination on account of force. She has suffered for many years the evil of error, neglect, and persecution, but she had men who studied the question of government and who saw in America her redemption and a guaranty of life, liberty, and justice. There we came willingly and freely, hoping, hand in hand with the greatest of all republics, to advance in civilization and progress and to become part of the Republic, to which we pledge our faith forever." Mark you, they asked a guaranty of life, liberty, and justice and to become a part of this Republic, and we pledged our faith that this promise would be fulfilled.

When General Henry died, he was succeeded by Brigadier-General Davis, who now occupies the position of military governor of that island. He came in daily contact with this people, knew their habits, their wants and desires, and his entire official administration on this island led these people to believe that every promise both General Miles and General Henry had made them would be sacredly kept by the Government of the United States; and so confident was General Davis that these pledges would be fulfilled, when he came to make his report to the President he recommended the removal of all duties on trade between the United States and Porto Rico. These tariff duties now proposed to be levied have a peculiar history.

Never before in the history of our country have so many public men, in so short a time, changed their views as to a certain line of public policy. It is known that the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, as an original proposition, was opposed to these duties between the United States and Porto Rico. It has never been disputed that the distinguished Secretary of War said that the highest consideration of justice and good faith—mark you, Mr. President, good faith—demands that we should not disappoint the confident expectations of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Porto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States and that we should treat the interests of these people as our own, and I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Porto Rico and the United States be removed.

The great Secretary of War knew that the good faith of the United States demanded that the people of Porto Rico should be treated as American citizens.

Congress had been in session for weeks before the unwise and unjust legislation now pending had ever been contemplated. The President of the United States knew of the promises which General Miles had made; he was familiar with the pledges of General Henry to the people of Porto Rico; he had read and considered most carefully in an official way the reports of General Davis, the present military governor of Porto Rico, who recommended absolute free trade between the United States and Porto Rico, and he determined that the good faith of the United States should be kept, and in a solemn message sent to Congress he asked and recommended unconditional free trade between our country and those people.

Not only did the President declare in his message in favor of free trade, but in the same message, embracing 53 pages, he practically recommends the same Territorial form of government for this people, including trial by jury, which we have given to our Territories in our previous history. I know of no other way provided by law for the executive branch of the Government to communicate in an official way with Congress except by official message.

The Constitution of the United States makes it his duty to do so. In the message which he sent to Congress in December last, prepared with great care before Congress convened, when he was fully informed by the report of General Davis of the conditions existing in that island, knowing then full well that we had promised the people of that island all the rights of American citizenship and to make them a part of our country—in pursuance of these sacred promises, after deliberation and with ample time for mature judgment, sent in a solemn message, read in this Chamber, that it was our plain duty to grant free trade to these people with the United States. Now, has the President changed his views?

The newspapers and some of the advocates of this bill inform us that he has. I submit that he has never communicated this fact to us in any official way. I know of no way for the Executive branch to communicate with Congress except by Executive message. I admit he had a right to change his views; he may have good reasons for changing them. But if he has done so it was his official duty to submit to the Senate a message setting forth this fact, giving fully his reasons for this change of faith. We are entitled to have those reasons; they might give valuable information to the Senate. These reasons might shed light on this important question and might aid us in a correct solution of this problem.

The distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives tells us, in a letter addressed to the public, that the President has changed his views and worked with all his power to pass the bill in the House, and is now doing everything he possibly can to influence Senators to vote for the passage of this measure. It may be true that he has communicated privately with some of the Senators, giving them a reason for his change of views, but there are many of us he has never communicated with on this subject, and until he tells us in an official way that he has changed, setting forth in his message his reasons for the change, we are authorized to presume that he stands by the only official message he has ever sent us on this subject.

The President now stands in favor of absolute free trade between the United States and Porto Rico; and if any Senator has any private information from the President that he repudiates his former position, let us have that information on the floor of the Senate. It is sometimes said, Mr. President, that our first impressions are our best, and generally found to be correct. When Mr. PAYNE, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, who now favors this unjust measure, first announced his views on Porto Rican affairs, he was for unqualified free trade. So was General Davis, until he learned that the Administration had changed its views; then he coincides with those who are responsible for the measure we have before us.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio spent days and nights in preparing a bill for free trade and citizenship for the people of Porto Rico, giving them all the rights of American citizens, granting to them a most liberal form of Territorial government, thoroughly in harmony with the brilliant and statesmanlike course he has heretofore maintained on the floor of the Senate. The position which he takes, that he has discovered that these people are incapable of self-government and of putting in operation such a Territorial form of government, is not sustained by the facts relating to their past history and their present condition. When we acquire territory populated by a race of people and force them to submit to American government, and deny them the rights and privileges of American citizens, it necessarily follows that these people will view our action with jealousy and dissatisfaction, resulting in disloyalty to our Government.

It is a fact that can not be disputed that all of our newly acquired possessions except the Hawaiian Islands are hostile to our Government and ready to fly to arms against us. The people of Porto Rico openly declare that we are robbers, and the people of the Philippine Islands cherish a more intense hatred toward us than they ever did toward Spain. The reckless course we have pursued toward our newly acquired possessions has planted in the bosom of those who first hailed the American flag as the emblem of liberty and freedom distrust, antagonism, jealousy, and unrelenting hatred. The only reason the people of the Hawaiian Islands respect and honor our flag is because our course toward them has been a just and liberal one, in keeping with the principles of our free institutions. Why should we not be equally as just with the people of Porto Rico, almost in sight of our doors? Give to the people of Porto Rico American liberty, American freedom, and American opportunity, and then we will preserve American honor, American liberty, and American institutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with the gavel.

Mr. CLAY. My time is out.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Vermont will yield one moment, I desire to offer an amendment for the purpose of having it pending for a vote at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the pending measure. I wish briefly to state my position in regard to it, that my vote may not be misunderstood.

By this measure Congress enters upon legislation for the islands recently ceded to this nation by Spain. The terms of the treaty and the condition of the inhabitants render it a step of the greatest importance, which should be taken with care and in the exercise of good judgment and discretion. No mistake should be made. It is easier to avoid than to correct a misstep of such importance. Either the Constitution ex proprio vigore entered the island immediately upon the ratification of the treaty, or it did not. Those who hold it did can not consistently demand that the bill should recognize or place it there. If, as I think, it did not, with the knowledge which Congress now has of the condition and aptitude of the inhabitants of the island, it would be unwise at present to extend the Constitution there by an act of Congress. In the present condition it is wise to move slowly, and with steps firmly placed where there will be no occasion for retreating.

The provisions for civil government in the island are liberal and generous. They grant vastly more privileges and rights than the inhabitants have ever enjoyed, and impose no unjust burdens. Such a government is a prime necessity to give stability and restore confidence and prosperity. It must not be expected to work a miracle. It will take time to put it into operation. The conditions in the island are exceptional. The evidence before the committee shows that the inhabitants are divided into two classes. The first includes merchants, planters, and professional men; the second, laborers. There is strictly no middle class. The first class, as a rule, are educated, own property, and are producers. Many of them are not natives of the island. They constitute but a small fraction of the population. The second class are numerous, have little education, are poor, and live on their daily earnings.

No portion of the population has ever exercised the legislative function, and rarely, if at all, the elective franchise. Laws for the island have been enacted at Madrid, and executed by appointees from there. Should the military arm of this nation be withdrawn, a general paralysis in every function of civil government would exist. There would be no executive officers and no revenues. It is evident that the civil government provided for can not be established and put into working order so as to produce revenues in less than two years.

The civil government part of the measure, I think, is wisely planned, carefully guarded, and confers all the rights and privileges which the inhabitants are capable of using. It commands my approval. But the operation of the existing government in the intervening time requires revenues. Without them it will be paralyzed. This nation should not furnish them. The evidence before the committee fully establishes that to provide necessary revenue by enforcing existing laws or by extending the internal-revenue laws of the United States would inflict innumerable hardships and be likely to prove fruitless of the desired result. The revenue provisions of the measure are to exist only until a civil government can be organized and provide them. Then free trade is to exist. I think free trade should be established as soon as it can be in justice to all interests involved. The question which confronted the committee was what shall be done in the meantime. They recommended this measure.

The foremost industry in the island—the coffee industry—for the time being has been rendered unproductive, if not destroyed, by the hurricane of last August. No revenue can be derived from that source for the next two years. The only industries that will be prosperous in these years are the sugar and tobacco industries. It is just that these should provide most of the required revenues. These industries are worked by labor now commanding from 30 to 50 cents per day. During these years producers of sugar and tobacco can pay the prescribed import tax and yet sell their products in our markets at as great or greater profit than can our home producers. They have no right to be given an advantage over our home producers. So the imposition of the import duties here is equitable and just between the industries of the island, and, if in some slight measure proportional to the amount imported, protective of these industries and the labor element here, not objectionable to me.

I regard, under existing conditions, the establishment of the beet-sugar industry in the States of great importance. If firmly established, it will furnish employment to many laborers, an enlarged home market for our surplus products, and keep at home millions of money which now go abroad to pay for sugar products in foreign lands.

The duties thus raised are all appropriated for the benefit of the island. The products of the island are not required to contribute a dollar to the expenses of maintaining this Government. In this respect the inhabitants of the island are more generously treated than are the citizens of the States. This part of the revenue measure is just and equitable to the inhabitants of the island, and in the line of protection to our beet-sugar and tobacco industries and to our well-paid laborers against the cheap labor of the island. This part of the revenue measure has my approval.

The raising of revenue on products produced in the United States in the manner provided in the bill does not meet with my approval. I do not like to have this nation take a step in the direction of George III, even for the short time while there is no civil government to raise revenue for the island. It has become an established fact of history that religious liberty and representation in taxation are the main seed germs from which government by the people springs. I am aware that the colonies had organized legislative powers when the repulsive tax of King George was imposed; also the purposes of this tax are quite different, yet I would prefer to avoid imposing it; but if while civil government is being organized revenue of this class is to be raised, I would prefer to tax all products going from the States into the island. I would not discriminate between different classes of these products. I would not tax some and allow others to enter free from taxation. I think such discrimination is unwise, if not illegal. Under the circumstances such discrimination seems necessary unless all such products are allowed to enter free. It would be inconsistent to place a tax on the necessaries of life imported into the island from the States when its inhabitants are so poor and so necessitous that Congress has just donated over two millions of money for their relief. I should prefer that all our products should enter the island free. For these reasons this part of the measure does not command my approval.

But as long as a consensus of a majority of this body is necessary for the passage of any measure it is evident that no Senator has the right to insist that important measures shall conform in all respects with his judgment before he will vote for them. Such a rule would defeat the purposes of government. If such measures are in the main fitted to accomplish the end demanded, he should yield his judgment in regard to less important features and give them his support. For these reasons, briefly expressed, I shall vote for the pending measure.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into a general discussion of this question which has been before the Senate so long. Having been absent from the Chamber for nearly three weeks in executing an order of the Senate, I have not had an opportunity to express my views, and so I take this occasion to briefly state why I shall vote against the pending bill.

I shall not vote against it, Mr. President, because it contains a provision for an import duty on Porto Rican goods coming into the United States. I am not objecting to that. Unless the people of Porto Rico are citizens of the United States and Porto Rico is a part of the United States we have an undoubted right to impose such a duty. I think this bill will make Porto Rico an integral part of the United States, and that we shall be under obligations to treat that people as we treat the people in our Territories. Should we conclude later that we do not care to take upon ourselves the burden of caring for those people, we should be somewhat embarrassed in trying to get rid of them.

I know very well that as to that island and other island possessions which have come to us through the war with Spain, we are not to release entirely our control over them. I believe it would be wiser for us to take the people of Porto Rico and to consult them as to the character of government they wish to establish; a government for them, to be composed of their own people, and to set them to work to try the experiment of self-government, saying to all the world, "These people are under our protection and under our care, and we will not allow you to interfere with them in the slightest degree." In other words, I would do for Porto Rico what we propose to do, and what I believe we shall do, for the island of Cuba.

I do not myself desire that the people of Porto Rico shall be incorporated into the United States as a portion of the United States. I do not think it would be an injustice to them, if they decline to accept a government of their own, if we hold a relation to them different from what we hold with reference to those portions of the country of which we expect ultimately to make States. I believe we have ample power to maintain a colony if we see fit. I believe we have ample power to legislate for those people without making them a part of the United States, and that we are not bound by the Constitution in the sense that we are when we deal with Territories that are ultimately to become States.

When I say we have unlimited power to legislate, I do not mean that Congress can go to the extent which has been suggested. I understand that there are certain great natural principles, inherent principles of justice, that must bind and restrict every legislative body, which are not derived from any constitution, but, as I said before, from the natural principles of justice. There are many things which we must refrain from doing that we are not prohibited from doing by the Constitution, in my judgment. The principles that bind this body as to legislation were in existence before the Constitution was adopted. They came down to us with the English law; they were as much a part and parcel of the law of the land as they were after they had been inserted in the Constitution, and they would have been if they never had been put in the Constitution. As suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], they were but declaratory of existing law, of existing fundamental principles, that must be considered and recognized by the legislature of a free government.

Mr. President, I do not consider it inconsistent with that position, or with any position that this Republic has ever adopted, that we should have a condition with reference to Porto Rico, which never existed as to any other section of this country. That we have a right to establish a colony and to govern it precisely as may appear to us just and right I have not any doubt. I would not have a colony governed according to the old English idea of governing colonies one hundred years ago. I would give to the people of an American colony the right of self-government, and I would recognize that great fundamental principle that existed long before the Declaration of Independence, that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed. Out of that grew republics, and if we keep that history in view, I think we may maintain republics, and we can not maintain republics unless we do.

There has been a great deal said about what we owe to Porto Rico. Mr. President, we owe absolutely nothing to Porto Rico except justice. We have entered into no arrangement with them, and made no promises to them, either through the Commanding General of the Army or the President or anybody else. This whole matter is with this body and with the other—with the Congress of the United States—by the very words of the treaty. The treaty might have made citizens of the Porto Ricans; the treaty might have put us under obligations to them; but the treaty did not. Ex industria the Peace Commission said the political status of those people shall be determined by Congress. That leaves us absolute control over them.

When a Senator stands here and says that those people are entitled to the same treatment to which the people of Oklahoma are entitled, he goes upon the theory, I suppose, that they are already citizens of the United States and that Porto Rico is a part of the United States. That is the controversy between us. That I deny. From my standpoint that is not correct. If that were so, I should join with Senators who have been declaring that we should treat those people as we treat the people of our Territories.

I do not mean to say that we have not the power to exact from them, even if they are a part of the United States, until they become States, a duty on their imports into the United States; but I say it would be a very anomalous condition, and one that I should not like to see, and certainly one that I should never favor. If it were admitted that we had the power to tax the citizens of Oklahoma, of Arizona, and of Alaska, I for one should not be willing to do it under any circumstances, and because I do not want to be in that position I do not intend to vote for this bill, which I think makes the relation between the people of Porto Rico and us of the same character as that which exists between us and the people of Oklahoma.

I want to say distinctly, Mr. President, that I am not opposed to the tariff provision. If we had a colony, we might impose such a duty upon it as we saw fit, or we might give it free trade if we saw fit. I should think very likely, if we had a colony, it might be to our interest and to theirs that they should have free trade. That, however, would be a matter for future consideration.

I think it is unfortunate that we have attempted at this time to legislate upon this subject. I do not mean to say it offensively, but it is apparent to everybody that this bill has been a plaything of politics here. On one side the Republicans have been trying to make capital out of it, and, as a matter of course, the other side have tried to make capital against it. I believe if we had waited until after the coming Presidential election, we could have sat down here deliberately, with less temptation to draw it into politics than we have had; and we might have secured legislation better than we are likely to secure under present conditions.

I think by that time we could have determined whether we wanted to create in Porto Rico an independent government, or whether we wished to annex the island. If we annex that island, we must make it ultimately a State. There is a population there of a million, enough for a large State; and if they are proper subjects of annexation, to be brought into the body politic and made citizens of the United States, I do not know how you are going to deny them statehood. We have denied statehood to the people of New Mexico for fifty years, and there has been a feeling on their part that we have done great injustice to them. There are many people who live outside of New Mexico who feel in the same way. The New Mexicans are not as well qualified for the maintenance of a State government upon as high a plane as the people of some of the States in existence or of some of the other Territories, perhaps; yet they had a right to suppose, because the treaty required us ultimately at some time or other to make them a State, that we would do so.

I believe that you will find if you do not take Porto Rico into the Union as a State, there will be ultimately a great deal of dissatisfaction and discontent, and to avoid that we shall ultimately have to take them into the Union when they are unfit to participate with us in the administration of national affairs. When I say that, I do not mean to say that they are unfit for self-government. I want to repeat what I have said previously. There are very few people in the world who are not fit for self-government, and the people of Porto Rico are fit for self-government to-day, with such assistance as we can give them, to establish a Territorial government, if we think that is best, or to establish an independent government, if we should conclude that is best, under our protectorate and protecting care. The question is prematurely here, in my opinion.

I am going to vote against this bill because there are features in it that I dislike, that I think are unwise from any standpoint, and because I believe when we shall have concluded this session of Congress and we come here again, with the great political campaign disposed of, no matter who shall be elected, we shall be in better condition to legislate righteously and justly than we now are.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate only to one or two points in the closing hour of this debate. I think it is a matter of considerable importance to mark the evolution of this bill in the steps by which it has arrived at its present stage.

The original bill, so far as the Senate is concerned, was a bill establishing a free Territorial government for Porto Rico, as we understand that term; in other words, it had substantially all the provisions which are usual in the acts organizing Territories in the United States. Those people were declared to be citizens. Provisions were contained in that bill by which the supremacy of the Constitution, in all of its protecting features, as well as in its other features, was recognized.

The people of the island were required to support the Constitution of the United States; they were prohibited from passing any law which was in conflict with the Constitution; they were allowed a Delegate in Congress, and to them was extended all the tariff and internal-revenue laws of the United States. That was the original bill. That was a bill, which, so far as I know, commanded the universal approval of all Senators on both sides of the Chamber. The passage of that bill was recognized as the proper thing to do. If there was a word of objection to it I failed to hear it. I certainly had none myself; and I have demonstrated the fact of my approval by having offered it as a substitute for the pending bill.

It was not until some time after that bill had been before the Senate—a bill in entire accord with the recommendation of the President of the United States as to what should be the revenue and tariff relations between Porto Rico and the United States—it was not, I say, until some time after that that the suggestion was made that there should be a tariff between Porto Rico and the United States, and the original bill was brought back to the Senate with certain amendments. It is to those successive amendments that I desire to call the attention of the Senate, for the purpose of marking, as I say, the evolution by which from the original bill the pending bill has been put into its present shape.

When the suggestion was made that there should be a tariff, it was recognized that there must be some changes in the bill, because it was not thought that as between citizens of the United States we could erect a tariff wall. The original bill expressly declared that the Porto Ricans should be citizens; the original bill, as I said, provided for entire free trade. The bill went back to the committee, and when it came back from the committee, with the provision in reference to free trade stricken out and making provision for a tariff, it still contained the provision that the people of Porto Rico should be citizens of the United States, and it still contained the provision that they should have a Delegate in Congress. When that matter came up for discussion and amendments were offered by the Senator from Ohio, it was pointed out that it would be utterly inconsistent with the establishment of a tariff between Porto Rico and the United States for the inhabitants of Porto Rico still to be citizens of the United States and still to have a Delegate in Congress. So that for the third time the bill went back to the committee, and it now returns from the committee in those particulars changed; and the bill is presented with a provision that the Porto Ricans shall not be citizens of the United States, and that, instead of a Delegate in Congress, there shall be a commissioner sent here, who shall have access to the various departments of the Government.

The purpose I have, Mr. President, in calling attention to this is this: That all of the changes in this bill by which it has been converted from a bill which would have organized an entirely free Territory, in all of the various features that free Territories have, into a bill from which all of these free features have been stricken, have been necessitated by the fact that it was necessary to do so in order that a tariff should be established between Porto Rico and the United States. Every feature of a free Territorial government has been sacrificed in order that a tariff may be enforced against Porto Rico.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on yesterday said that the original bill, offered by the Senator from Ohio, was "a brutal bill;" that was the expression of the Senator from Wisconsin, that it was "a brutal bill," and the evidence of the fact that it was a brutal bill was stated by him to be the effect it would have upon the cost of cigars and cigarrettes in Porto Rico, if I understood him correctly. According to the calculation made by the Senator, the brutality of that bill would have consisted in the fact that a cigar would cost about one-third of a cent more than it would in the absence of it, and a cigarette possibly one-twentieth of a cent more than it would if the internal-revenue laws of the United States were not in force in Porto Rico. I asked the Senator to permit me to read yesterday what the Porto Ricans themselves said on that subject in an address to Congress made by planters, merchants, and manufacturers of Porto Rico at San Juan, March 12, 1900. They used this language:

It is a fact—

Speaking now of the proposition of levying a 12 per cent tariff duty—

It is a fact that no class of goods produced here from leaf tobacco will be taxed less than 25 per cent ad valorem, while one of the most important of this class will be taxed 160 per cent ad valorem under the bill adopted by the House of Representatives.

So, Mr. President, it appears from the calculations that the Porto Ricans themselves have made that the proposition to tax 12 per cent of the Dingley law is a much more brutal one than the proposition to have applied to them the internal-revenue laws of the United States. They themselves go on and make the calculation that, under the internal-revenue laws of the United States, sufficient revenue would be raised for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the island.

The Senator from Wisconsin said that the situation was pathetic. That is true, Mr. President; and the main purpose I had in rising was to call attention to the fact that the disappointment of that people, their disappointment in not realizing their expectations, their disappointment in that which they now see is to be meted out to them, is indeed pathetic.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a handbill which was brought to this country by an official of the United States. It is in Spanish, and was said by him to be one of thousands of handbills which were distributed in San Juan on the 7th of February, 1899, calling for a meeting of Porto Ricans to rejoice over the fact that, as they then thought, they had become citizens of the United States. I desire to ask that this original paper be printed in the RECORD.

Al Pueblo Puertorriqueño:

El senado de Washington ha ratificado el Tratado de la paz. De modo que Puerto-Rico se incorpora definitivamente á los Estados Unidos de América. Somos pues, con legitimo orgullo, ciudadanos de esa gran Nacion, la mas libre, democrática y próspera del mundo civilizado.

Para festejar tan grandioso acontecimiento, se invita á todo el mundo para que se reuna esta tarde á las cinco en la Plaza de Colón, á formar una manifestación que irá por la calle de la Fortaleza hasta el Palacio del General Henry, á saludarlo como dignisimo representante del Gobierno federal, y volver á la Plaza Principal en donde se disolverá la reunión.

Puertorriqueños:

"Viva los Estados Unidos de América!"

"Viva Puerto-Rico americano!"

San Juan, 7 Febrero, 1899.

LA COMISION.

Imprenta El Pais.

I will read what is a translation of that handbill:

To the Porto Rican people—

This is dated San Juan, February 7, 1899; and, as I say, was a handbill, which was scattered all over that town for the purpose of calling a public meeting to rejoice at their new changed relations with the United States.

To the Porto Rican people:

The Senate of Washington has ratified the treaty of peace. So that Porto Rico—

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, may I ask who signed the handbill?

Mr. BACON. It is simply a handbill signed by a committee. Does the Senator understand that I am reading this as any pledge given to the Porto Rican people by anybody?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not understand why the Senator was reading it.

Mr. BACON. The reason the Senator did not understand it was that when I made my explanation he was talking to somebody else instead of listening to me.

Mr. SPOONER. What was the explanation the Senator was making?

Mr. BACON. The explanation I made was that the Senator from Wisconsin had spoken of the brutality of the original bill——

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I take nothing back about that.

Mr. BACON. I understand that; but the Senator asked me a question, and I am endeavoring to answer it, if he will permit me. I had further quoted the Senator as saying that the situation was pathetic. The Senator will probably recollect having used that word.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not withdraw it.

Mr. BACON. Of course not. And I was agreeing with the Senator that it was very pathetic.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And I was instancing the fact that one of the most pathetic features was the disappointment of these people, who had rejoiced in the fact that they were about to be incorporated as citizens of the United States, and now they are to be disappointed by it being held that they are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. By what is their disappointment evidenced?

Mr. BACON. I am sorry the Senator requires me to repeat it. I suppose I will have it to do.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it evidenced by this handbill?

Mr. BACON. I stated, if the Senator will now let me have his attention——

Mr. SPOONER. I will.

Mr. BACON. I stated that this handbill was in Spanish; that it was an original handbill which had been brought from Porto Rico by a gentleman who was an official of the United States, and who vouches for the fact that hundreds of them were, on the 7th of February, 1899, scattered over the town of San Juan, in the island of Porto Rico, calling for a public meeting to rejoice over the fact that by the ratification of the treaty they had become citizens of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me? I never before understood that the scattering of a handbill through a country was evidence of anything except the scattering of the handbill.

Mr. BACON. I do not understand it now, except that it is evidence of what the people themselves thought. I am speaking of the disappointment of the people.

Mr. SPOONER. No; it is evidence of what the men who drew the handbill and scattered it thought.

Mr. BACON. Certainly; and the community at large in responding to that handbill necessarily indorsed its sentiment. The Senator, I presume, wants to make it appear that I am producing a handbill here as an authority. I certainly am not. I am simply calling attention to the fact that these people, who are now not to be citizens, rejoiced when they thought they were to be citizens, and they called a public meeting for the purpose of giving expression to their joy at the prospect. That is the sole purpose of it. I shall ask, when it comes to be printed in the RECORD, while of course its reading has been interrupted, that it may be printed as a continuous document. I suppose the Senator will have no objection to that.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BACON. I am afraid before I get through reading it, while I never object to an interruption from the learned Senator, that the fifteen minutes will have expired, and I will not have the opportunity to read it.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg pardon.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is very short, and I will read it as the conclusion of my remarks:

To the Porto Rican people:

The Senate of Washington has ratified the treaty of peace, so that Porto Rico is definitely incorporated with the United States of America. We are, then, with legitimate pride, citizens of that great nation—the freest, most democratic and prosperous of the civilized world.

To celebrate such a magnificent occurrence, everybody is invited to assemble this evening at 5 in Columbus square to form a parade, which will go by way of Fortress street to the palace of General Henry to saluto him as the most dignified representative of the Federal Government, and to return to the Central square, where the assembly will be dissolved.

Porto Ricans:

Long live the United States of America! Long live America and Porto Rico!

San Juan, February 7, 1899.

THE COMMISSION.

Mr. President, if my time has not expired, I will say just one word more. The situation is not simply pathetic. There is a very tragic feature to it. Do we realize that to-day when this bill passes we will have enacted the first law, so far as the Senate is concerned, ever enacted in the United States by which those under the authority and jurisdiction of the United States are solemnly declared not to be citizens of the United States? Mr. President, it is a historic occasion when this bill will have passed, as I doubt not it will. It will not simply be the specter of imperialism which we have been recognizing as in our midst for eighteen months past, but it will be here in the substance and in the reality. I am glad that not only with Democrats, but with Senators of all parties in this Chamber it will be my good fortune to day to be able to cast my vote against such a bill.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, our Republic has grown from the thirteen colonies comprising its original domain to magnificent proportions. Forty-five Commonwealths are united in one nation, and incorporated with them are several Territories.

The enlargement of our country was rapid; the march of civilization to the westward swift and splendid. First the several States ceded to the National Government certain of their lands, and the Northwestern and Southwestern Territories were formed. They were divided, State governments erected, Commonwealths created and admitted into the Union, until these Territories were entirely absorbed.

Other States were taken into the Federal Union after being carved from the territory acquired by purchase from France and Spain; others still by discovery and settlement. Texas, a part of the Mexican Republic, by revolution broke the bonds that bound it, established a separate government, and asked admission into the United States. The Mexican war ensued, and as a result Texas became American territory. Thus in various ways there was a development of the wilderness into States and the building of capitals in waste places with marvelous celerity. Previous to the acquisition of Alaska, acquired by purchase from Russia, the territory added was in every instance adjacent and contiguous to the main body of land of the United States.

The Spanish-American war caused a change of policy by the necessities arising therefrom, and, as a war measure, Hawaii was added to the American dominion. As a result of the Spanish war the island of Porto Rico became American soil. The inhabitants submitted to American arms without resistance, and many of them hailed our coming as the beginning of a new era, in which freedom and prosperity were to be their portion after many years of misgovernment and tyranny under Spanish rule. By the treaty of Paris the island was ceded to our Government. It was Spanish territory before the cession; it became American territory by the submission of the people and the cession of the Spanish monarchy. But until Congress would establish a civil government, the military power prevails, as has been the case in other territories added to our jurisdiction.

At the close of the Spanish war it became evident that problems of great importance must be solved by our Government through the executive and legislative authorities, inasmuch as the acquisition of the new territories, our island possessions, both in the Caribbean Sea and Asiatic waters, placed the American flag far beyond our mainland, multiplied and diversified American interests, charged the nation with new duties, and enlarged the field of American commerce and trade. Responsibilities having thus thrust themselves upon us, it became the task of the lawmaking power of the Government to meet the obligations which, under these conditions, were due to ourselves and the various other elements which had entered into the situation.

Congress, when it convened in December of the past year, recognized this obligation and prepared to meet the demands of the present time by the organization of new committees in both Houses whose duty it would be to prepare such legislation for the several islands as would conduce to the general welfare of the new citizenship and to the advantage, prosperity, and progress of the whole country. One of the most important committees created was that over which the distinguished Senator from Ohio presides. In compliance with the duty he had assumed, the honorable Senator prepared a bill for the purpose of providing civil government for Porto Rico, establishing American authority, and extending the revenue and tariff laws to the island. I hold in my hand a copy of the bill introduced into the Senate on January 3 of this year by the Senator from Ohio, the title of which is "A bill to provide a government for the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes." This bill was the outcome of much thought and labor, and to my mind sought the creation of an equitable, just, and constitutional form of government for the island. It gives evidence of careful preparation by an intelligent and statesmanlike mind. It bears the traces of deep study, vast information, and thorough knowledge of constitutional law, but above and beyond this is apparent patriotic spirit, noble sentiment, and fair intention.

This bill recognized the inhabitants of Porto Rico as citizens of the United States. It carried the laws of the American Republic relating to commerce, navigation, and merchant marine to the island and its environing waters. It extended the tariff laws and revenue enactments of our land to the new territory and declared the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable to be in force in Porto Rico. It established judicial tribunals, sought to erect local self-government by an island legislature, and provided for the election of a Territorial Delegate to the Congress of the United States. To this bill I give my unqualified commendation and would find pleasure in supporting it by voice and vote, for it contemplates a scheme of government under the Constitution, wise, beneficent, and just. It seeks to place Porto Rico into the bosom of a fraternity of States upon the same plane as the Territory of Arizona or Oklahoma. For such a measure I would vote to-day with joyous alacrity. For such a law I would follow the lead of the Senator from Ohio and give him my humble effort to aid in its passage.

At this point an inquiry becomes pertinent. Why was this bill prepared? I am not in the confidence of the Senator from Ohio, but I am justified by the face of the bill itself, and by surrounding circumstances, in saying that it was prepared and submitted because the situation demanded action, and the Administration had signified in unmistakable, emphatic, and unequivocal language that it was the "plain duty" of our Government to pass such an act. But, sir, this bill has been discarded; it has been relegated to the wastebasket and is to meet the same fate that comes to thousands of other bills hurriedly prepared, ill-digested, and never intended for passage or enactment, over which the waves of legislative oblivion roll and "they are heard of no more forever." "A change came o'er the spirit of our dream."

The influences which produced this change of purpose I may not now discuss. Some subtle power, however, did cause a transformation, and the authority which had, in accordance with the Constitution, duly proclaimed "the plain duty of Congress" to recognize Porto Rico as a Territory and apply our tariff laws was persuaded to turn about face, renounce its avowal, cast aside its purpose, and pursue a new policy, which stood in direct contravention of its own previous emphatic declaration. It was indeed a curious spectacle and the country stood astonished at the consummation of a political somersault the like of which had not been witnessed in a generation. They failed to grasp or understand the reason for its perpetration and began to utter sounds of disapproval. The people all over the country have done so. Turn to the West and you will find it as the legislature of Iowa has already given voice. Turn to the East and you will find it according to the great meeting held in Rhode Island the other day. Sir, I ask that an account of the meeting held in Rhode Island be inserted as a part of my remarks.

[New York Sun, Sunday, April 1, 1900.]

SPEAK FOR PORTO RICO—RHODE ISLAND REPUBLICANS DISCUSS THE ISLAND'S NEEDS—GOVERNOR DYER SAYS THAT RAISING A TARIFF BARRIER IS AN "OUTRAGEOUS TRANSACTION"—ADDS THAT RHODE ISLAND MIGHT AS JUSTLY PLACE A DUTY ON BLOCK ISLAND FISH.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 31, 1900.

At the anteelection dinner of the representatives of the Republican party held here to-day the speeches of Governor Elisha Dyer and Congressman ADIN B. CAPRON pertaining to the Porto Rican question were received enthusiastically by the large gathering present, which represented every city and town in the State. Governor Dyer said:

"I believe it is the duty of every Republican to stand up, and with no uncertain sound condemn any course of procedure by Congress which brings into question the honor of the American nation toward those new peoples who have come under its protection. In the very beginning of the war with Spain, when it was uncertain what the result would be so far as added territory was concerned, the United States went to Porto Rico; it made no excuse that the island had been misgoverned by Spanish rule; it made no apologies; it said the island of Porto Rico is the gateway to the Antilles. To treat these people now as if they were aliens, as if they had no rights at all, to have gone over and taken possession of their island, to set up our own Government, and then to impose duties upon them just as we would upon the people of Haiti or Santo Domingo, is one of the most outrageous transactions that could be thought of.

"It is most encouraging that so many of the men who mold public opinion have taken the stand they have. It is not a question of constitutional right; it is a question of simple justice. Nations have moral obligations resting upon them as well as individuals. God forbid that any peoples should have to say that they preferred Spanish rule and that they trusted more in Spanish honor than they did in the honor of the United States.

"The Republican party has always been loyal to the principles it has enunciated. I believe there is to-day sufficient manhood in the party to stand up and not only protest against but to refuse support to any men or any measures not absolutely committed to the principles of national justice and national honor.

"What a spectacle it will be to European nations, that this people, having been conquered by us and brought into our field, should be treated as strangers, and taxed without reason for bringing their products into our ports. We might just as well tax the people of Block Island for the fish and farm products they send to the mainland as to tax these people of Porto Rico for what they bring to us. This question is one in which every Republican should be interested. I believe that before the time comes for the meeting of the national convention in Philadelphia this question will be settled, and settled with justice and honor, not only to ourselves but to the people who by every moral right should be a part of our nation."

Congressman CAPRON said he did not believe that the people who sent him to Congress desired him to truckle to any authority, however autocratic, so long as he believed his course to be right, and he did not think they would do other than spurn him if he did that. He had been glad with his vote and voice to stand for honest money, and that has been enacted into law. He was also glad to stand for American honor and American courage along the lines suggested in regard to the new territorial possessions which have come as a result of war, and on the question of the "plain duty" to the people of Porto Rico. He added:

"Up to the time the President's message was promulgated, at the beginning of December last, there was no question that we would do what was right in regard to Puerto Rico. The people of the United States have a solemn duty to perform toward the people of Puerto Rico, and I do not think Congress had any desire to shirk it. During the autumn the terrible tornado swept over the island and destroyed crops and a large amount of property, and the people were left in a hopeless condition.

"The conditions came to the knowledge of the members of Congress little by little, and so the President in his message said, 'It is our plain duty to give the blessings of free trade to the island of Puerto Rico.' Then we began to find out that the people were in a deplorable condition, more so than we had imagined. The military commander of the island came to Washington and said that the island needed the advantages of free trade with the United States. Everybody agreed with him and everybody agrees with him now."

The people did not understand and the people would not follow. It has been said that in these matters and changes there has been a lobby here for free trade, as you call it. I am not one of the committee, but I can say that if there has been a lobby it has not been in favor of free trade. I ask the members of the committee whether or not I tell the truth. I challenge a contradiction of the statement.

In the House of Representatives—the popular branch of the National Legislature—a bill was introduced placing a 15 per cent duty upon commerce as between Porto Rico and other portions of the United States. It will be observed that this proposition was at variance with the recommendation of the President's message; it was in direct violation of it, yet in a mysterious manner it began to be whispered that this bill was satisfactory to the Administration, and that Republican members would do well to support it. It was in danger of defeat. It was so evidently unjust that rebellion was threatened in the party ranks.

The highest thought and clearest judgment within the party condemned it, but the lash was applied, the Administration called its every prerogative into service, and with few exceptions the Republican membership of the House of Representatives placed itself upon record in favor of the bill, which, in my humble judgment, transgresses every principle of national honor, of patriotism, good faith, and benevolence. And, sir, this bill, in due course, found its way to the Senate, and was received here with the appeal that it must pass in order to save the Administration from defeat. Forthwith assault was made upon the Senator from Ohio. He was informed that he must make his bill for civil government in Porto Rico conform to the House bill. He was told party policy demanded this concession, and that all else must subserve to the political fortunes and interests of the party. I am quite sure that his own opinion was averse; that his sense of honor caused him to hesitate; but he finally yielded to the intense pressure which came from the circles that scintillate about the center of Government, and, in accordance with the wish of the majority of his party in the Senate, consented to embody the House bill, which laid this duty, in his civil-government bill and to strike out of his own bill the provision he had originally drafted.

Having conceded this, it became necessary to make other changes. He was forced to strike out the section declaring Porto Ricans to be citizens of the United States and in lieu thereof insert "citizens of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States." For, sir, if the inhabitants of Porto Rico were citizens of the United States, how would we dare place the impost duties of the House bill upon them?

Other transformations were had until the civil government bill of the Senator from Ohio became a new bill, with a purpose entirely different from and in antagonism with the original. But, sir, this was not all. When this bill, after its transformation, was submitted to Republican Senators insurrection was the consequence. It became evident that the House bill provisions could not pass as embodied in the civil government bill, and again amendment was made, and the legislative monstrosity now before us was brought forth with the evident purpose of obtaining a sufficient number of votes to pass it in the Senate. It was at this point that I was compelled to refuse to follow the dictation of the majority and array myself for conscience' sake with the minority of the Republican party, and I deem it but just to myself and fair to the constituency I represent to submit the reasons for my action and to declare the faith that is in me.

My ideas of the principles upon which our Government is founded; my desire to preserve from blot or stain the national escutcheon; my remembrance of the solemn and oft-repeated promise of the American authority to the inhabitants of Porto Rico: my devotion to the Constitution as I understand it; my purpose to act justly, benevolently, and, if need be, charitably toward my new fellow-citizens, each and all rebel and rise up in outraged indignation at the attempted injustice of this bill. I can not support it. I refuse to give my adherence to it. No influence shall persuade, no authority shall control me or cause me to favor it. I oppose it with all the vehemence of a positive nature. I have been a Republican ever since I can remember. The years of my youth and manhood have been dedicated to the service of the Republican party. In company with a determined band of fraters of my political faith, I labored unceasingly until my beloved State was redeemed from Democratic domination. I gave the best years of my life to this endeavor, which was crowned with superb success. I have loved and served the Republican party because I believed in the warp and woof of its victory were bound up the advancement and progress of my country, the elevation of men, and the perpetuity of self-government. But, sir, I am not charmed by a name when the principle be lost.

A rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

The Republican party by its name can not lead me against my conviction to do that which I believe to be unrighteous and unjust. I will not follow upon the new adventure which would compel me to discard at the first step the noble sentiment which I have ever held to be the strongest reason for the existence of the Republican party.

Sir, I oppose this bill for the reason that it seeks to impose a tax upon citizens of the United States in Porto Rico in defiance of the principles upon which our Government is founded.

It is passing strange how history repeats itself. This contention takes us backward to the American Revolution, which was caused by the attempt of the British Parliament to impose an unwarranted tax upon the American colonies. Can we forget the undaunted courage of the Revolutionary fathers when they refused submission? Does not their cry ring down through a century and a quarter of years and declare to us now, as it did to England then, "No taxation without representation." "Millions for defense; not one penny for tribute?"

Do you remember the appeal of the British ministers to the colonies, that they forget not love to their mother country and urging that this tax was imposed for the benefit of the colonies, adverting to the amendment which pledged all duties collected to be returned and used for colonial purposes?

But the men of that day remained firm in their devotion to their conception of right; they defied the power of the English Parliament to impose revenue or import duties upon them without their consent. Is not this a parallel case? I stand by the doctrine advocated by Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Madison, and that host of illustrious men who guided the infant nation from a prostrate condition to self-government. They created a nation upon this principle, not to stand for a day or a generation and to be of advantage only to themselves, but for the boundless and unnumbered years of the future, as a heritage to all mankind.

And, sir, if this be true, should we, their inheritors, attempt to tax without representation or consent the inhabitants of our Territory of Porto Rico? I for one will not aid in it. I register my protest against it and warn you of the retribution that must come to a Republic which would practice tyranny and oppression upon a people who came to it having confidence in our asseveration of friendship and our promise of liberty and self-government, and who are entitled to the same measure of freedom which our fathers established and defended. They are as much citizens of our land as were the Texans when they came into the Union. Texas was invaded by American forces, the people received them with open arms; they desired their protection. After the war Mexico ceded the territory to us. Did we not accept them? Was Texas not admitted as a State and its citizens, as citizens of the United States, permitted to enjoy the privileges of that condition? Did we not invade Porto Rico; did not the people hail our coming; did not Spain cede the island to us; did we not promise to bestow upon them "the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government?" Are they less entitled than the inhabitants of Texas to the advantages we can give?

Compromise has been spoken of. There can be no compromise. It is not a matter of mathematics, of percentage, or schedules; it is a matter of principle, and principle should not be compromised. A duty of 1 per cent would be as objectionable to me as a duty of 15 per cent, and a duty of 15 per cent is no more objectionable to me than would be one of 50 or 100 per cent of the Dingley tariff rates. I contend that the people of Porto Rico are inhabitants of the United States and should as quickly as possible be placed in such a situation as will cause them to bear the same burdens that the citizens of the United States in Maryland or New York or Arizona bear, and no more.

It may be said that this would be taxing them without representation and without their consent. In answer I would say that the impost duties of the Dingley bill and the revenue laws of the United States were in force in this country when Porto Rico became a part of our territory. The people accepted the conditions then existing, and their acceptance of them was a consent to assume the burdens which were then imposed upon American citizenship.

Having thus briefly stated my first reason for opposition to this bill, I will proceed to the second. I believe the imposition of this tax, even if it were not in violation of the basic principle of our Government, would still be indefensible for the reason that it would be a stain upon the national honor. An individual who makes a promise, whether it be upon his word or in a written bond, should perform the stipulations both in their letter and spirit, and the same code of honor that applies to the individual should obtain also with the nation.

When the people of Porto Rico submitted to American arms, General Miles, commanding the invading army, by proclamation made certain promises, which were hailed by general acclamation upon the part of our people and were accepted in good faith by the inhabitants of Porto Rico.

I maintain it is beneath the dignity of a great nation, by its representatives, commanding its armies and empowered in a military capacity to perform certain acts, to make promises and pledges to a people weak and defenseless who submitted, trusting to the honor of their conquerors, to break the promises made or to fail in the fulfillment of the pledges given by the Commanding General of their Army. Especially so when the whole nation acquiesced and the President gave consent, not by silence, but by positive indorsements, and, as above mentioned, in his annual message to Congress recommended as "the plain duty" of the nation to carry into effect by its acts the promises given. Are we ready to stand among the nations of the earth, after having thus made solemn promises, branded for a breach of faith toward this island for a gain so inconsiderable that even the most unscrupulous of men or avaricious of nations should hesitate before entering upon such a transaction?

We would not dare break faith with a great and powerful nation. Surely we may be brave enough to keep our word to these islanders, whom by the the fortunes of war we have deprived of their former markets, of the part and portion they had in the Spanish Government, and in return for what they have lost give them not only justly but generously and demonstrate to the world that we love not freedom in selfish purpose or only for ourselves, but that our desire is that the leaven of liberty shall go forth even to the islands of the sea.

Even if there were disadvantage and positive loss, it would be, in my humble judgment, incumbent upon us to redeem the pledge given. But, sir, I believe, upon good evidence, that there will be no loss and that we shall be abundantly compensated in the years of the future by granting present fulfillment to the terms set down to Porto Rico.

I now advance to the third reason for antagonizing this measure. It is not only in contravention to the basic principle of our Government, not only false to the national honor, but it is, in my humble opinion, unconstitutional. I have reverence for that parchment which bound together the original States and became the organic law of the new nation which upon the Western Hemisphere had arisen like a young giant to pursue a career glorious beyond compare in the annals of nations. I believe it should be held as the sacred writings were to the men of old. It is the palladium of the nation so long as we preserve it; so long as we feel it binding upon us and the spirit of patriotism dwells in the land there need be no fear for the perpetuity of our institutions. I still have faith in the Constitution. The Revolutionary fathers intended that the benefits of the Government which they created should go out to the world. They were not to be narrow or circumscribed, for the men who were enthusiastic enough to give life and fortune for the establishment of a Government that seemed ideal in its character were imbued with a spirit brave enough to be generous to others, noble enough to see in the future the grand vision of the Republic they had founded growing stronger and more forceful in the affairs of men until by the influence of our example, by the force of our success, by the victory of our ideas, we would send forth Liberty to enlighten the world.

The Constitution, in my judgment, never contemplated that we should for ourselves enjoy liberty, freedom, and self-government and deprive others of these privileges, prerogatives, and rights. And, sir, for a century and a decade from the time of the beginning of constitutional government in the United States there has never been a day or an hour until now when the American citizen has not been willing—nay, has not been anxious—that the struggling peoples of the world should enjoy the selfsame heritage that had come to him through the lofty aspiration and courageous endeavor of his forefathers. I believe that the great principles of our Government, so far as they are applicable to any locality which rests under the American flag and the beneficent influence of American Government, as enunciated in the Constitution and enacted into law under it, extend to every rood of territory which we may acquire.

Sir, if this island be not a Territory of the United States; if these men be not citizens of the American Republic, what gives the Congress of this country a right to legislate for them? Is the creature greater than the creator? Are the Senate and House of Representatives greater than the Constitution? I was under the impression that the Congress had been called into life and being by the Constitution. I am of the opinion that the powers which the Senate and House of Representatives have to legislate upon any subject are obtained from one source only—by and through the Constitution. If that be true, then the power to legislate must be accepted with the limitation placed upon it by the instrument that confers them. The eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States reads in part as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises.

Here is the power; now mark the limitation:

> But all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

The Congress has therefore the power to impose a tariff, to lay impost duties and excise taxes, high or low, many or few, but there is one limitation, and that is that whether the impost duties or excise taxes be high or low, many or few, they must be uniform everywhere throughout the United States. I believe that Porto Rico is a part of the United States. I have that conviction strong and firm, and therefore I am further convinced that Congress can not under the Constitution levy a 15 per cent duty upon the people of Porto Rico when that duty is different from the taxes imposed in other sections of the land.

You have a right, under the Constitution, to impose the Dingley tariff and the war revenue; but you have no right, in addition to this or outside of it, to place a 15 per cent impost duty upon commerce as between Porto Rico and other portions of the United States. We have no right, under the Constitution, to impose restrictions upon trade by reason of import and export duties as between Maryland and Arizona, as between New York and Oklahoma, as between California and Alaska. Where do you find the right, under the grant given by the Constitution, with its limitation, to place 15 per cent upon trade between Porto Rico and any State or Territory in the United States? I can not find it, and therefore will not vote to impose such a tax. And, sir, I do not believe that the Senator from Ohio found the power, for at least there is no evidence in the bill he presented, a copy of which I hold in my hand, that he found such a power or deemed it wise or just to attempt to exercise it.

And, now, a step further, and another reason of different character as against this bill and the imposition of this duty. We should be just.

Under Spanish domination, Porto Rico enjoyed privileges of trade with that nation and those other European countries which lay adjacent to Spain and have commercial and trade relations with her. We deprived Porto Rico of these advantages; we struck down these markets. Naturally she looked to us to establish other markets for her. The people of that island had a right to believe that, being a part of the great American system of States, there would be fraternal relations in trade, and instead of endeavoring to hamper, to bind, to imprison, and impound her products, we would receive them from her as from our sister States and thus give compensation for the injury done in severing old relations and striking down trade advantages which she had enjoyed for many years.

In justice this should be done, and the one way to accomplish it, the one way to achieve this end, is to have trade free and unrestricted between Porto Rico and other portions of our common country. But, sir, even if justice did not demand, we should upon another ground aid and assist the people of Porto Rico in their endeavor to find new markets for the coffee, sugar, tobacco, and other productions of the country. We are great enough—75,000,000 Americans, trading one with the other, without restriction of duties, from the head waters of the Mississippi to the Mexican Gulf, from the Rocky Mountains to the Rio Grande, from the northernmost point of Maine to the headlands of Florida, from the rock-bound coast of the Atlantic upon the east to the western slope where the Pacific waters leave the American shore—surely we are great enough and strong enough when we have added a million more Americans, dwelling in the little island far out in the waters, bereft of their ancient moorings, storm swept and stricken from every side; surely we are great enough and strong enough to be charitable and benevolent and to stretch out the hand of fraternal friendship to aid them in their hour of trial and destitution. It will be "bread cast upon the waters, which will return after many days."

Sir, the American Republic, when it began its course among the nations, was dedicated to "liberty, fraternity, and equality." It was the outcome of centuries of evolution, produced by Christian civilization. There was a time in the distant past when men lived in barbarism and savagery, in which the doctrine "live upon others" prevailed; there came a time in the dawn of civilized life when the maxim of "live and let live" obtained; the time now is when the new dispensation of "live for others" breathes joyous tidings to the world.

The Nazarene when he walked upon earth taught the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Luther proclaimed that as all men must stand upon a level before God, so in the God-given rights due to all prince and peasant must stand upon equality. Burns sang the song of man's prerogative when he wrote:

> The rank is but the guinea stamp—
> The man's the gowd for a' that.

Jefferson, in the immortal Declaration, penned a sentiment which will be precious to men so long as liberty is loved:

> All men are equal.

And Julia Ward Howe roused the sleeping conscience of the nation when she exclaimed:

> As Christ died to make men holy, let us die to make men free.

Having thus dedicated the national life, dare we do otherwise than be just and generous to the inhabitants of Porto Rico?

In view of these forceful objections to the proposed legislation, what excuse is offered to palliate the wrong inflicted or defend the unjust exaction? It is urged that there are present needs for governmental purposes and immediate requirement to relieve the distress, poverty, and starvation prevalent on the island. In answer I would say the passage of the bill appropriating over $2,000,000 for governmental purposes in Porto Rico in the present provides for the first need. It renders available that sum for immediate use in the government of the island and to a certain extent aids in the alleviation of the prevailing distress by the governmental scheme of building roads, establishing schools, and erecting schoolhouses, thus providing employment for idle labor and giving payment in American coin.

This is but temporary, but there need be no further delay in granting permanent relief; pass the original bill of the Senator from Ohio and you will see, as if by magic, the return of prosperity; uncertainty will disappear, confidence will be restored, new life, new blood, new aspirations will give nerve, ambition, and effort, and the inhabitant of Porto Rico, invested with American citizenship, will assume not only the privileges, but the burdens and duties incumbent upon him in his new condition. He will labor with vigor and energy, for he has assurance that the fruits of his labor are his own and a market better than the one he lost has been found for the coffee, sugar, and tobacco he produces among his new fellow-citizens.

For the future expenses of the General Government the extension of the Dingley tariff act and the impost duties therein laid, together with the internal revenue and the additional war revenue, should and will provide.

For local government, the Porto Rican, having become an American citizen, must adopt our methods of direct taxation for domestic administration. He will in the near future gladly have direct taxation, when he understands that the tax is not one imposed by foreign masters or for the enrichment of Spanish officials, but levied by himself, upon himself, for the establishment and maintenance of local self-government. Should there be an interval in which aid will be needed, the generosity of the American people will give freely the inconsiderable sum required.

But, say the advocates of this measure, unrestricted trade with the island will be detrimental to American labor, and the Republican party is pledged to protection. Yea, surely; but the tariff applies to all the States and Territories, and the new territory of Porto Rico and its citizens, now Americans, are as much entitled to the benefit of the protective tariff as any of their national brethren, whether they dwell in Maine or Maryland, New York or Ohio, Nevada or Arizona, South Carolina or Oklahoma. The Porto Rican is an American laborer; he now belongs to the American family. You say he labors for low wages; he is ill paid. Sir, recognize him as an American, lift him up from his low condition, and he will soon reach the level of others, having their wants and requirements, and gaining their fulfillment in the common market. We have absorbed millions of men who have been ill paid, oppressed, and were ignorant. Is there great danger in keeping faith with a million Porto Ricans, say 300,000 laboring men, chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits? I do not believe it. I can not think that any intelligent man believes it. The peasantry of Porto Rico is as intelligent as that of Spain; the educated class as accomplished as that of any country in the world. I have seen some of them who came to plead for justice. Their appearance, manner, and conversation proclaimed that they had intelligence, refinement, and culture.

But why speak of protection? I am a protectionist; and if Porto Rico is not a part of the United States, and we owe the island no consideration, then I say, do not place 15 per cent, but the whole amount of the Dingley tariff duties upon the trade between us. This bill does not protect American labor; it enacts a 15 per cent duty, which is confessedly a revenue duty only. Is it not admitted that it does not protect? If 15 per cent of the Dingley rates protect against low-priced labor in Porto Rico, why impose seven times that amount to protect us against England and Germany?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I ask unanimous consent, if you please, that I may be allowed five or ten minutes more to close.

Mr. FORAKER. There are several Senators desiring to speak, and since I have heard the Senator from Maryland, I desire myself to speak. Inasmuch as we must vote at 4 o'clock, I hope the Senator from Maryland will not insist upon his request.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Then I will close in a moment, if I may be allowed.

Sir, I assert, and defy successful contradiction, that protection has been relegated to the rear in this matter, and revenue only is sought after.

I go further. I believe more income will be realized by the extension of the American impost duties and internal revenue than by the imposition of this illegal and unjustifiable 15 per cent duty; if not in the present, at least in the near future. And it would be well for our people to understand that if we go out into the distant zones and gather territory in the far-off waters, as between us and these countries protection will of necessity disappear. If we adopt the British policy of territorial extension, the English doctrine of free trade will follow.

Thus I have reasoned from every point, and at every point have found that there should be unrestricted trade with this island. The basic principle of the Government demands it. The observation of national honor requires it. The Constitution provides for it. Justice and charity alike point the way to it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I was not expecting to speak again to this bill. Inasmuch as I have been in charge while it has been under consideration in the Senate, it has been necessary for me repeatedly to take the floor in its behalf, and in this way I have made a number of short replies to the speeches of the opposition and in answer to questions in regard to the bill. To such extent have I spoken in this way that, as I now recall the record, I have probably covered every point in the bill that has been the subject of controversy. That is the reason why I did not have it in mind to undertake to say anything additional in the closing hours of this debate. But the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] and other speeches of a similar character seem to me at least to make it appropriate that in the closing hour of this debate I should take the floor to say that with respect to the various bills which have been here under consideration and have been under consideration in the committee, there has been nothing whatever that is unusual as compared with legislation generally.

Let me say, particularly, that there has been no compulsion upon the part of anybody to change his mind in regard to any legislation whatsoever.

When it was said by the Senator from Georgia a few days ago that there had been a radical change between the legislation originally proposed and that now under consideration I took occasion to say that it was true some changes had been made, and I pointed out why they had been made, but I pointed out in that connection that it was wholly voluntary and from a sense of duty, due to the facts developed before the committee, of which we had no knowledge whatever when we prepared the original draft of the bill. It is true, Mr. President, that the first bill introduced here by me did provide for free trade between Porto Rico and the United States. It is true that the bill now under consideration does provide a duty upon commerce between these two countries; but time and again it has been explained here why that change was made, and never better or more forcibly than by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] when he spoke upon that point yesterday.

I knew, in a general way, when I prepared the bill that there were trouble and poverty and distress in Porto Rico, but not until we sat as a committee and witnesses were called and testified before the committee did I learn to what an extreme extent of distress and poverty and hopeless despair the people of that island had been reduced. It was then that we learned that to support a government in Porto Rico and for Porto Rico it was absolutely impossible to raise revenue by direct taxation upon property. Then it was that to save that people, who could not stand the burden thus to be imposed upon them by taxing their property, to save them from that distress and that burden, we sought to find another way and resorted to the system that is provided in this measure.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for a single brief question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; although my time is limited. And I hope the Senator will state his question and not make an argument.

Mr. PROCTOR. It has troubled me and others. Why did it not appear to the President and Secretary of War and Governor Davis, in charge of the administration in Porto Rico for many months, for months since the tornado, that it was necessary to raise revenue until the hearing before the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. I can not tell the Senator why this situation did not occur to the gentlemen to whom he refers in the way in which it was presented to us, but the fact that it did not so occur to them does not alter the fact that it was so established before us; that when so established we proceeded, not under any compulsion, but from a sense of duty; a sense of duty that the President, who had given the recommendation so much talked about, has recognized; a sense of duty that was recognized by the Republican party in the House and by most of the Republican party in the Senate; a sense of duty that required us so to legislate for that people as to make it tolerable for them to have a government and to support it, without our practicing paternalism to the extent of feeding them from day to day out of our public Treasury.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina, although I have only a few minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did that necessitate a change in the status of those people to not being citizens of the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. No; it did not at all necessarily follow that they should not be citizens of the United States, as I originally proposed in my bill, but every Democratic Senator almost, without exception, was saying that if we made them citizens of the United States we thereby made them a part of the United States, and if we made them a part of the United States that provision of the Constitution with respect to uniform taxation would apply, and we could not raise revenue in the way proposed in this bill. It was Democratic opposition, Mr. President, that brought us to realize that there ought to be a change from our original proposition, as it was clearly within the power of Congress to make it in the civil and political status of the people of Porto Rico. That is the complete explanation of the change which has been made. It was for that reason and no other.

But the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has called attention to what General Miles and the Secretary of War and the President of the United States have said, and Senators have been saying here and pressing it in season and out of season, that pledges have been given to the people of Porto Rico by General Miles and the President and the Secretary of War of which this bill is a violation. I challenge any Senator to find any pledge given by either one of the men named to the people of Porto Rico—any pledge of any kind. What was it that General Miles said? He went into Porto Rico at the head of our victorious Army. It was appropriate that he should, in the performance of his duty as a soldier, announce his purpose in coming; and he stated in a proclamation to the people of Porto Rico that he had come not as an enemy, but as a friend; not to tear down, but to build up; not to destroy, but to save; and that it was the purpose of his Government to restore prosperity to the people of Porto Rico.

That was his first declaration—to restore a prosperity to which they had been strangers for three centuries under Spanish tyranny and misrule. Then he said further that it was another purpose to extend to them the immunities and the privileges of our liberal institutions of government. That is all General Miles said. For Senators to intimate that he went beyond that is no compliment to General Miles. It was not for him to declare the political policy of this Government with respect to Porto Rico, but simply to carry the flag there and plant it, as he gallantly and heroically did, in triumph. His duty was then done. It remained for Congress to determine what the policy should be. He did not say anything about free trade. He did not say anything about a military or a civil government. He spoke about giving them a restoration of prosperity and the privileges and the immunities to which I have alluded. This bill, Mr. President, instead of being in violation of what General Miles said, is a complete vindication and redemption of all that he said and all that he promised.

Now, as to the Secretary of War, all that he said was that justice and good faith require that we shall not disappoint the expectations of the people of Porto Rico to share in our prosperity. That was not a pledge. It was simply his recommendation made by him to the President in his annual report. I pass it by, therefore, without further comment, in view of the limited time at my command.

What was it, now, that the President said? Senators who know that they are not in harmony with the President with respect to this legislation are assuming and claiming that they represent him here on this floor, and they are saying that this legislation is in violation of the recommendation made by the President of the United States in his annual message. What the President recommended was that we should abolish all customs duties between Porto Rico and the United States and give them free trade with us—free access to our markets, was, I believe, the language that he employed.

Mr. President, this bill does that very thing. Senators talk as though we were denying to the people of Porto Rico free trade with the United States. We are for a time, but because of the necessity to which I have referred, a necessity that was not in the mind of the President when he made that recommendation, a necessity that was not in my mind when I framed and introduced here the original bill, a necessity that nobody here was familiar with. We are not denying, but we are giving absolute free trade to the people of Porto Rico with the United States from and after the 1st day of March, 1902. In twenty-three months, hardly that long now, they will have absolute free trade.

For the time being, pursuant to the recommendation of the President, we have given to the people of Porto Rico absolute free trade from the very moment that this bill becomes a law as to all the necessaries of life, for all food products——

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. FORAKER. For implements of husbandry, farm machinery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FORAKER. I have only three minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not misstate the fact, however, that this bill expires by its own limitation in three years.

Mr. FORAKER. This bill never expires unless the Congress of the United States shall see fit to make it expire by repealing it and substituting another.

Mr. ALLEN. By one provision it expires at the end of two years. Now, would not the duty of the Dingley Act attach when this bill expires?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Nebraska has not read the bill, or he would not make that inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I have read it.

Mr. FORAKER. The provision on that subject is that from and after the 1st day of March, 1902, there shall be absolute free trade between Porto Rico and the United States upon every article and every kind of merchandise that may go the one way or the other, and, Mr. President, sooner than that if the people of Porto Rico, in whose behalf Senators presume to speak, shall see fit to request it and take the necessary action as a predicate for that request, for the bill provides not only that we shall have absolute free trade, as the President recommends, from and after the 1st day of March, 1902, but it provides also that on all the articles I have enumerated they shall have free trade now, and upon all other articles they shall have absolute free trade as soon as the legislature and the government are organized provided for by this bill, and they shall have instituted a system of taxation that will yield them the necessary revenues to support their government. Six months from this time, Mr. President, they may have free trade from the United States if they will only take advantage of the opportunity we give them under the bill.

Now, Mr. President, in view of all this, I say there is no truth in the claim that we are violating any pledges or that we are violating even the recommendation of the President. We are so closely approximating to his recommendation as to be almost exactly following it, for I call attention to the fact that the President of the United States in his message recommending free trade, did not say in that message that right away now, day before yesterday, we should have free trade, but that free trade was the natural and proper condition which we should bring about by appropriate legislation. He must have foreseen that it would require weeks and months of legislation before a government could be established, before that law could be enacted, and before it could be put into operation.

But, Mr. President, however that may be, he did not understand and appreciate then as he understands and appreciates now that there is a necessity for delaying for the time that this bill provides there shall be delay before free trade shall be granted, the time necessary to establish a government there and to enable it to provide a way of raising revenue of their own.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped with his gavel.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, fully comprehending the terrible conditions that prevail in Porto Rico, and appreciating the necessity of speedy action in a legislative way, I have occupied very little time in this discussion, and I propose to occupy only a few moments in the closing hour of the debate. Indeed, Mr. President, if my silence would aid the passage of this bill by one single minute, I would not say a word.

A few days ago in speaking to this question I ventured to quote an opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, in which he promulgated the doctrine that the Constitution did not of its own force extend to the Territories of the United States. The genial, lovable, amiable, witty junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] subsequently called the attention of the Senate to the fact that I had not quoted the entire opinion as delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley. The Senator from Alabama also ventured to sneer at my lack of legal knowledge, something that I had not claimed to possess, indeed something that I had explicitly disclaimed, and then he proceeded to say that if I had turned over another leaf in the book I would have found that Justice Bradley said:

> Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those constitutional limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and in its amendments.

And the Senator ventured the proposition that if I had quoted that the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley would not have carried the implication which I attached to it.

Why, Mr. President, I have not heard a single Senator who has advocated the passage of this bill contend that Congress can legislate in an illegal, unjust, or unconstitutional way toward the people of Porto Rico or toward the people of any Territory of the United States. What they have contended, and what I have endeavored to sustain, has been the proposition that while the Constitution does not of its own force go into the Territories, Congress must necessarily legislate for those Territories; but Congress of course must legislate in a legal, just, and a constitutional way. This observation disposes of the criticism of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, I listened to-day with a great deal of interest to the speech of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I heard every word of the Senator's able and lengthy address. I noticed particularly that he dwelt upon the proposition which has been advanced in this Chamber and in this debate, and in a certain other debate, that we have no right to govern people without their consent, and the Senator from Illinois quoted Abraham Lincoln to the effect that no man was good enough to govern any other man without his consent.

Mr. President, I will not traverse the ground that has heretofore been covered refuting that doctrine. I will only call attention to the fact that within the sound of a cannon in yonder navy-yard there live 250,000 people who are governed without their consent. There is not a man in the District of Columbia who can cast a vote. There is not a man in the District of Columbia who can say anything about how he shall be taxed or how he shall be governed. Congress governs the District of Columbia through a Board of Commissioners appointed by the President of the United States. In view of that fact it seems to me idle for any man to stand in this intelligent presence and say that we can not govern any people in this country without their consent.

Now, Mr. President, one other point in that regard. The Senator from Illinois said that it was the imposition of unjust taxation that caused our fathers to rise in rebellion against Great Britain. Why, Mr. President, if the Senator will read history carefully he will find that the battle cry at Concord, at Lexington, at Bunker Hill, at Bennington, and on some of the other battlefields of the Republic was that "taxation without representation was tyranny."

That is one of the things that they fought for in the war of the Revolution, and yet here, more than one hundred years after that war has closed, in the capital of this nation, we have taxation without representation, and I have not heard the Senators who are declaiming about the injustice we are doing to the Porto Ricans rise and demand that the law governing the District of Columbia shall in that respect be changed.

Mr. President, if we should adopt the contention of the Senators who are opposing this bill, and who are denouncing this committee for bringing in a bill that has tariff taxation in it, what would we be compelled to do? We would be compelled to impose upon the Porto Ricans the war-revenue taxation that we have on our statute books to-day. We would be compelled, Mr. President, to impose upon them direct taxation. If the Senators who are denouncing this bill will go to the testimony that was given before our committee they will find that almost every witness before that committee said that the people of Porto Rico could not by any possibility endure direct taxation or the imposition of our revenue laws.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I desire to submit, as bearing upon the observation he has just made, a cable dispatch from General Davis to the Secretary of War under the date of March 29.

It is perhaps proper to say that the Secretary, at the request of General Davis, sent Professor Hollander, assistant professor of finance in Johns Hopkins University, to study the working of taxation in the island and to aid in devising a practical system there, which, according to a letter from the Secretary to me under date of the 2d instant, is "to take the place of the old Spanish system which has gone all to pieces and yields very little revenue indeed." It is well to consider the conclusions reached by Professor Hollander. From the study he has been able to make of the subject he is of the opinion that we should not extend the internal-revenue laws of the United States, but should adopt a revenue system suited to the peculiar local conditions in the island. There is peril to the interests of the Porto Ricans in the proposition made by some to force upon the island a system of taxation which was devised for this country, but not for that. The dispatch from General Davis is as follows:

SAN JUAN DE PORTO RICO, March 29, 1900.

ROOT, Washington:

Letter by next mail from Professor Hollander strongly advising against legislative requirement of United States internal revenue laws, or fixed percentage thereof, for Porto Rico. He urges that tax system for this island should be made to suit local conditions and harmonize with home requirements. Hope of attaining such a system will be unrealizable if unsuited tax laws are forced on island and proper measures prevented.

DAVIS.

The advice of the Professor strongly confirms the wisdom of our present course in providing a portion of the revenues for the insular government from customs duties, as has been done heretofore. A system with which the people are familiar, and which there is good reason for believing they very much desire, should be continued until such time at least as they shall be able to construct a more scientific system of taxation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, I desire simply to add a word. This committee, which have been criticised so severely—and I will not venture to say in all respects unjustly—have been desirous of doing the best possible thing they could for the people of Porto Rico. That has been uppermost in the mind of every member of this committee. The committee believe that the bill which is now before the Senate will give the highest measure of relief to Porto Rico that can possibly be secured by any form of legislation which can be passed through the Congress of the United States.

And, Mr. President, bearing on the question of a tariff duty, I want to read an extract from a letter that came to me this morning, dated San Juan, Porto Rico, March 28, 1900. It is from a very distinguished lawyer in the island. He says:

Let me assure you that the people here are not to-day clamoring for free trade with the States. They are not. They simply ask now for some action. Whether it be 15 per cent, 25 per cent, or even 50 per cent, they want the matter settled. The distress is something terrible. If you will only end the controversy so that we may have something to base future business upon, and create such a form of stable, though limited, civil government, so as to assure protection to capital, the island will progress, starvation will cease, and we will be content.

The writer adds a postscript, as follows:

The only objection to the continuance of the military government is that capital will not come here until we have good courts and a guaranty of stability. General Davis is a most excellent man, strong, able, honest, and tactful—but the principle of military rule means that some one might take his place any day and, under his successor, arbitrary decrees might be rendered destructive of investments. The island needs American capital, and, in order to bring it here, we must have some form of civil government, including courts whose decisions are reviewable in Washington.

Mr. President, what the people of Porto Rico need, according to the information that has reached me from several correspondents, is not that they shall have free trade with the United States immediately, but that they shall have a stable form of government, a civil government, which will give them the benefit of the beneficent laws of the United States, and I predict that the passage of this bill will be the signal for the rehabilitation of that island, and for a degree of prosperity, contentment, and happiness such as those people never could have secured had they not come under the benign ægis of the Government of the United States. Let the bill be passed, and the result will amply justify those of us who have been its friends and advocates.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have contended from the beginning that hasty legislation with regard to the islands we have wrested from Spain is undesirable. I prefer to follow the example which was set in the case of the Louisiana purchase, the Florida purchase, and in the acquisition of New Mexico and California. President Jefferson was authorized by Congress to govern Louisiana, and through his executive military power he inaugurated civil government there, which was afterwards recognized by Congress.

Florida remained under military rule four years, during which time Monroe inaugurated civil government, which was recognized and adopted by Congress. California was under military rule for over four years without any interference on the part of Congress and very little on the part of the Executive. It was a purely military government until it had established a State government, and the work of the military authorities and the people was recognized and approved in the admission of California in 1850.

I thought and still think that it would have been better to have refrained from legislation and left all the islands wrested from Spain to be governed by the Executive until Congress was fully informed as to what legislation was necessary. The crude and unphilosophical bill which passed the House and the very defective bill now before us satisfy me that I was correct. The House bill provides for a permanent tariff between Porto Rico and the United States. The Senate bill in this respect is a great improvement. It provides for a temporary tariff, and in express terms declares for free trade at the end of twenty-three months.

In other respects the provisions of the Senate bill, so far as Porto Rico is concerned, are the most liberal of any financial bill ever passed for any Territory. The Government of the United States gives back to Porto Rico every dollar collected and, in addition thereto, supports the military establishment from the Treasury of the United States. There is no burden whatever imposed on the people of Porto Rico to support the Government of the United States. On the contrary, a large amount of money will be drawn annually from the Treasury of the United States to support the military establishment which governs Porto Rico.

Although the bill is crude and undigested and contains many defects, I regard it as a step toward the retention of these islands, which I believe was the greatest acquisition of the century. The United States needs these islands. The expenditure of three hundred millions per annum for tropical products which these islands would furnish shows the necessity of their retention. It shows that the United States has not all the resources necessary to make us an independent country financially. The drain of $300,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually to buy tropical fruits will always bear heavily upon the industries of the United States. These islands will not only furnish us all the tropical products which we require, but will enable us to keep our money at home and make the United States independent of all foreign countries.

I do not believe it injurious to acquire all the good and productive land necessary to supply all our wants. A deficiency in our natural resources of $300,000,000 per annum is no trifling matter and should be provided for by acquiring new territory which possesses the natural resources which we lack. Believing that these islands are of paramount importance; believing that this bill is a step in the right direction, notwithstanding it is very imperfect in many respects, and believing that it tends to fasten our hold upon these islands, I shall favor it. It gives the Porto Ricans a degree of local self-government; it gives them free trade in less than two years; it gives them United States courts; it gives them many things which a Territory has, and more than I anticipated would be given under the circumstances which surround this legislation.

I believe it has become a choice between evils. I believe it would be a greater evil to defeat this bill and repudiate any idea of conferring upon the people of Porto Rico the benefits of local self-government, which they so much desire, than it would be to pass it because it contains many provisions which recognize Porto Rico as a part of the United States, and will ultimately aid in extending the principles of the Constitution to a people who desire to come to us and bring us one of the most productive islands in the world. A permanent tariff between the United States and Porto Rico, as provided in the House bill, is out of the question; but a temporary tariff, to be collected and given back to Porto Rico, without internal-revenue taxes and without other charges, is a trifling evil in view of the good that may ultimately be accomplished by a partial extension of the free institutions which we enjoy to the people of Porto Rico.

Under all the circumstances, I have decided to vote for the bill without further amendment.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] accounts for the change in the phraseology of his bill in relation to the citizenship of the people of Porto Rico on the ground that all the Democrats insisted that unless the language was changed Congress would have no power to legislate in regard to these people in a manner different from the legislation required by the Constitution concerning any other citizens of the United States.

Now, I submit whether or not it is true that the language was changed, not because the Democrats so insisted, but because the framers of this bill and its managers conceded the propriety of the contention in relation to this subject.

As citizens of the United States these people could not be legislated about differently from other citizens; and it being the desire of those having charge of the bill to treat them not as citizens of the United States, but as quasi aliens, the language of the bill was changed to fit the purposes of the legislation.

The junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] yesterday argued to show that these people were without qualification to exercise the functions of citizens of the United States, but the Senator who has charge of the bill does not justify the change on the ground that the people are incapable of exercising the rights of citizens, but on the ground that the bill could not be constitutionally passed unless these people are denied the right of citizenship. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] on yesterday used the following language:

There is a duty at present of $1.60 per hundred pounds upon sugar and $1.85 per pound upon tobacco under the Dingley tariff act. There are millions of dollars worth of this sugar and tobacco, owned by the sugar and tobacco trusts, which is held from the market and stored in warehouses in Porto Rico awaiting the action upon this bill. This sugar and tobacco was bought from the planters of Porto Rico at a price which included these Dingley tariff duties and still left a large profit for the purchaser. Every concession made from the Dingley tariff is that much more clear profit, not to the producer, or the laborer, or the citizen of Porto Rico, but to these purchasers of their products.

If this be true, I ask why is it that the Dingley duties are reduced 85 per cent in the interest of these trusts who have bought this sugar and tobacco on the faith of having to pay the Dingley tariff duties and still make a large profit? If these trusts are entitled to no Congressional consideration, why not leave the Dingley duties in force for another year and make the reduction to 15 per cent take place next year, when the people of Porto Rico instead of the trusts will get the profit?

These are not the controlling reasons that actuate those in charge of this bill. These are such reasons as are necessary to justify to the people of the United States the deliberate refusal of Congress to act upon the advice of the President of the United States, to conform to his recommendation, and to treat the citizens of an American island as though the time was not to come when they would be allowed to enjoy the privileges of citizens of the United States.

At the outset this bill was intended to be a beneficent measure. Time progressed, and the necessity arose for converting it into a partisan measure. This has controlled the action of Senators on the other side, and to-day, in the face of the recommendation of the Secretary of War, in the face of the advice of the general in command in Porto Rico, in defiance of the recommendation made by the President of the United States, the bill is to be put on its passage as a party measure, and the test of party loyalty is to be the votes that Senators shall cast on the final roll call.

Mr. President, it is useless to attempt to disguise the fact that this bill is not solely in the interest of the people of Porto Rico. In the interest of the doctrine of protection it was felt necessary that something in the nature of a tariff should be incorporated in the bill. The fact that the limitations of the Constitution were not intended to be applied to favor the people of Porto Rico was made evident when the majority not only asserted the right of Congress to legislate beyond the grants of constitutional authority, but that the legislature of Porto Rico, elected by its 800,000 ignorant people, of whom the Senator from New York spoke on yesterday, should not be limited to the enactment of statutes not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me one second?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask leave to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received.

Mr. LINDSAY. I believe I have nothing further to say any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement the vote will be now had on the pending bill and amendments of which notice has previously been given.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by inserting, on page 7, line 2, after the word "citizens," the words "of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee, in section 6, page 7, line 2, after the word "citizens," by inserting the words "of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection;" so as to read:

That all inhabitants continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in Porto Rico, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 7, section 6, line 9, after the word "such," I move to strike out the word "other;" so as to read: "together with such citizens of the United States as may reside in Porto Rico," etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask that that section as it has been amended may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee inserting section 6 as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move, on page 7, section 7, line 19, before the word "laws," to insert "statutory;" so as to read: "statutory laws of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask that the amendment as amended be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to section 7 as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now move to amend section 37, which commences on page 25, by adopting the amendment as indicated in the print, namely, by striking out, on page 26, all after the word "choose," in line 2, down to and including the words "Territorial Delegate," in line 7, and inserting the provision following, whereby is substituted a resident commissioner for a Delegate in Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 37, page 26, line 2, after the word "choose," it is proposed to strike out:

One Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, who shall be entitled to a seat, but not to a vote, in that body, on the certificate of election of the governor of Porto Rico, who shall have the same rights provided by law for a Territorial Delegate, and the same compensation payable as now provided by law for a Territorial Delegate;

And in lieu thereof to insert:

A resident commissioner to the United States, who shall be entitled to official recognition as such by all Departments, upon presentation to the Department of State of a certificate of election of the governor of Porto Rico, and who shall be entitled to a salary, payable monthly by the United States, at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the committee to the proposed new section 37 will be stated.

The next amendment to the amendment was, section 37, page 26, line 16, after the words "bona fide," to strike out "inhabitant" and insert "citizen;" in line 17, before the word "who," to strike out "and;" and in line 18, after the word "language," to strike out "and who is not possessed of taxable property in his own right situated in Porto Rico;" so as to read:

Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide citizen of Porto Rico, who is not 30 years of age, and who does not read and write the English language.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now send to the Secretary's desk an amendment which I offered and which was printed on the 30th of March, and ask that it may be inserted in the bill as section 12, instead of section 11, as indicated in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as section 12:

SEC. 12. That all property which may have been acquired in Porto Rico by the United States under the cession of Spain in said treaty of peace in any public bridges, road houses, water powers, highways, unnavigable streams, and the beds thereof, subterranean waters, mines, or minerals under the surface of private lands, and all property which at the time of the cession belonged, under the laws of Spain then in force, to the various harbor-works boards of Porto Rico, and all the harbor shores, docks, slips, and reclaimed lands, but not including harbor areas or navigable waters, is hereby placed under the control of the government established by this act to be administered for the benefit of the people of Porto Rico; and the legislative assembly hereby created shall have authority, subject to the limitations imposed upon all its acts, to legislate with respect to all such matters as it may deem advisable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a section 12 in the bill. Does the Senator desire that the amendment he has just offered shall take the place of that section?

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the sections of the bill may be renumbered; and I want this to follow section 11 as it is now printed in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I move, if it be necessary, that the sections of the bill be renumbered so as to correspond with the amendments which have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the clerks may renumber the sections of the bill to correspond with the amendments which have heretofore been made. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

Mr. FORAKER. That completes the bill so far as the committee is concerned.

Mr. STEWART. Has the matter with reference to the appointment of a commissioner been acted upon?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of sections 2,

3, and 4, and all of section 12 after the word "States," in line 6, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. —. That Porto Rico is hereby made an internal-revenue district. That the laws of the United States providing for internal-revenue taxation and collection not locally inapplicable are hereby extended to and shall remain in force in Porto Rico while this act shall continue in force. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a collector of internal revenue for said district, who shall receive an annual salary of $4,000 and whose office shall be at San Juan.

SEC. —. That all the internal-revenue taxes imposed by the laws of the United States shall be collected in said district. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make all needful regulations to carry this act into effect and to prescribe the compensation of all officers and agents necessary for that purpose.

SEC. —. That the amount of all taxes so collected, or so much thereof as may be necessary, less the expenses of collection, are hereby appropriated and placed at the disposal of the President, to be expended under his direction for the government of Porto Rico now existing or hereafter to be established, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

SEC. —. That no duties on imports or exports shall, after the passage of this act, be levied or collected on any articles imported from the United States into Porto Rico or from Porto Rico into the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, upon that amendment I request the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN (when his name was called). On this subject I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] is paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that we transfer pairs, so that we may both vote, and the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from North Dakota will stand paired.

Mr. WELLINGTON. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. ALLEN. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. FAIRBANKS (when Mr. BEVERIDGE'S name was called). I wish to announce now, and I shall not again repeat the announcement during future roll calls, that my colleague [Mr. BEVERIDGE] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. He stands paired on this and all other questions connected with this bill with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]; but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], thus exchanging pairs with the Senator from Arkansas, so that he and I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. If he were here, I assume he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], by which a transfer of pairs has taken place, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea;" and, therefore, I vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] on this and all other amendments, as well as on the bill itself. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] having been transferred to the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], I vote "yea." While I am on my feet, I announce a pair between the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. PRITCHARD. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allen,	Daniel,	Martin,	Sullivan,
Bacon,	Davis,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Harris,	Money,	Tillman,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Turley,
Clark, Mont.	Jones, Ark.	Nelson,	Vest.
Clay,	Kenney,	Pettus,	Wellington.
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Proctor,
Culberson,	McLaurin,	Simon,

NAYS—40.

Allison,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Ross,

Beveridge,	Elkins,	McEnery,	Warren.
Burrows,	Hale,	Mallory,
Butler,	Hanna,	Pettigrew,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Rawlins,

So the amendment of Mr. DAVIS was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the amendment which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of sections 2, 3, and 4, and all of section 12 after the word "States," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That Porto Rico is hereby made an internal-revenue district. That the laws of the United States providing for internal-revenue taxation and collection, not locally inapplicable, are hereby extended to and shall remain in force in Porto Rico, excepting as herein otherwise provided, for the term stated in this act. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a collector of internal revenue for said district, who shall receive an annual salary of $4,000 and whose office shall be at San Juan.

SEC. —. That, excepting as herein otherwise provided, 15 per cent of all the internal-revenue taxes imposed by the laws of the United States shall be collected in said district. No stamp taxes imposed by said laws upon written or printed documents shall be collected in said district. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make all needful regulations to carry this act into effect, and to prescribe the compensation of all officers and agents necessary for that purpose.

SEC. —. That the amount of all taxes so collected, less the necessary expenses of collection, are hereby appropriated and placed at the disposal of the President, to be expended under his direction for the government of Porto Rico now existing or hereafter to be established, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

SEC. —. That upon tobacco not grown in Porto Rico and upon all manufactures thereof, and upon rum or other distilled spirits produced from substances not grown in Porto Rico, the full tax provided by the internal-revenue laws of the United States shall be collected. Upon tobacco grown in Porto Rico, and the manufactures thereof, and upon rum and other spirits distilled or made from sugar cane or other agricultural product grown in Porto Rico, or from the product of such sugar cane or other agricultural product, the said tax of 15 per cent shall be imposed, the same as upon other subjects of internal taxation.

SEC. —. That the President, whenever he shall be satisfied that a local self-government has been established in Porto Rico adequate to raise and collect taxes by its own legislation, shall have the power from time to time, by proclamation, to decrease the said per cent of taxation, or to wholly abolish the same.

SEC. —. That no duties on imports or exports shall, after the passage of this act, be levied or collected on any articles imported from the United States into Porto Rico or from Porto Rico into the United States.

SEC. —. That this act shall be taken and held to be provisional in its purpose, and intended to meet a pressing present need for revenue for the island of Porto Rico, and shall not continue in force after the 1st day of March, 1902.

SEC. —. That tobacco, or any manufacture thereof, and rum, or other distilled spirits, imported into the United States from Porto Rico shall be subject at the port of entry in the United States to the payment of, and there shall be collected on the same the full amount, less said 15 per cent, in case the same shall have been paid, of the internal-revenue tax imposed by the internal revenue upon such articles produced in the States of the Union. The Secretary of the Treasury is empowered and directed to make all necessary rules and regulations for such collection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of sections 2, 3, and 4, and all of section 12 after the word "States," in line 6, and insert the following:

SEC. —. That for the purposes of this act the following provisions of the Constitution of the United States are hereby extended and made applicable to Porto Rico:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

"No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

"No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

"No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another."

And it is hereby enacted that all duties, imposts, and excises imposed or levied, laid, or collected by Congress upon Porto Rico, or any products or business thereof, or in relation to said Porto Rico, shall be uniform with all duties, imposts, and excises laid and collected throughout the United States;

That no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid by Congress in or upon Porto Rico unless in proportion to the census or enumeration directed to be taken by the Constitution;

That no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from Porto Rico;

That no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of Porto Rico over those of any State of the Union; nor shall vessels bound to or from Porto Rico be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in any State of the Union;

Nor shall any preference be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of any State of the Union over those of Porto Rico; nor shall vessels bound to or from the ports of any State of the Union be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in any port of Porto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 37 was amended in two or three particulars, and was not agreed to after the amendments had been adopted. The question now is, Will the Senate agree to the section as amended?

The section as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment which is on the Secretary's desk, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 3, pages 3 and 4 of the last print of the bill, by striking out all from and after the word "same," in line 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That on and after the passage of this act all articles imported into the United States from Porto Rico, and all articles imported into Porto Rico from the United States, shall be exempt from duty: Provided, however, That articles of Porto Rican manufacture coming into the United States shall, before being withdrawn for consumption or sale, be subject to the payment of a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon the like articles of domestic manufacture; such tax to be paid by internal-revenue stamp or stamps to be purchased and provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and to be procured from the collector of internal revenue at or most convenient to the port of entry of said articles in the United States, and to be affixed under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

Amend section 4, page 5, by striking out all from and after the word "same," in line 1, page 5, to the word "shall," in line 4, page 5.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want the last part of the amendment voted on until after the first part has been acted upon. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the first part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks for the yeas and nays upon his first amendment.

Mr. BERRY. The last part of the amendment was withdrawn, as I understand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota stated that he desired the first amendment acted upon by itself.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota be stated.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the part to be voted upon stated separately in order that we may understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend section 3, pages 3 and 4 of the last print of the bill, by striking out all from and after the word "same," in line 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That on and after the passage of this act all articles imported into the United States from Porto Rico, and all articles imported into Porto Rico from the United States, shall be exempt from duty: Provided, however, That articles of Porto Rican manufacture coming into the United States shall, before being withdrawn for consumption or sale, be subject to the payment of a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon the like articles of domestic manufacture; such tax to be paid by internal-revenue stamp or stamps to be purchased and provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and to be procured from the collector of internal revenue at or most convenient to the port of entry of said articles in the United States, and to be affixed under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). My colleague is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Montana (when his name was called). The understanding with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], with whom I am paired, is that if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). On this amendment and on this bill I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I repeat the announcement of my pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS].

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. HOAR's name was called). My colleague, as I have already announced, is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. If present, my colleague would vote in favor of this amendment; and if the amendment should fail, he would vote against the bill. I will make no further announcement of his pair.

Mr. PROCTOR (when Mr. MALLORY's name was called). On all votes connected with this question the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WETMORE. I again announce the pair of the senior Senator from Rhode Island, my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allen,	Culberson,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Davis,	Martin,	Simon,
Bate,	Harris,	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Tillman,
Clark, Mont.	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Turley,
Clay,	Kenney,	Nelson,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Pettus,	Wellington.

NAYS—41.

Allison,	Foraker,	McBride,	Sewell,
Baker,	Foster,	McComas,	Shoup,
Bard,	Frye,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Carter,	Gallinger,	Penrose,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Gear,	Perkins,	Teller,
Clark, Wyo.	Hansbrough,	Platt, Conn.	Thurston,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.	Wetmore,
Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,	Wolcott.
Deboe,	Kean,	Quarles,
Depew,	Kyle,	Ross,
Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Scott,

NOT VOTING—18.

Aldrich,	Chilton,	McCumber,	Sullivan,
Beveridge,	Elkins,	McEnery,	Turner,
Burrows,	Hale,	Mallory,	Warren.
Butler,	Hanna,	Pettigrew,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Rawlins,

So Mr. NELSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "until," in line 7, page 5, section 4, it is proposed to strike out "otherwise provided by law" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The government of Porto Rico herein provided for shall have been organized, when all moneys theretofore collected under the provisions hereof then unexpended shall be transferred to the local treasury of Porto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out sections 2 and 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That on and after the date when this act shall take effect there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries into Porto Rico, which is hereby constituted a customs collection district, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897; and on and after the passage of this act trade between the customs collection district hereby established for the island of Porto Rico and the customs collection districts of the United States now in existence, or which may hereafter be established, shall be free from all import or tariff duties, and all laws or parts of laws now or heretofore requiring or authorizing the collection of import or tariff duties on articles of commerce between any of the customs collection districts herein named are to that extent hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BACON. I gave notice of a substitute for the bill; and if this is the proper time, I will offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose to offer the substitute in the Senate instead of as in Committee of the Whole? The Senator can offer it as in Committee of the Whole if he prefers.

Mr. BACON. I am indifferent. It makes no difference; either place; whichever is the more convenient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert——

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. PETTUS. It has been read several times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Chair state what it is? Is it the original bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the original bill as reported by the committee.

The amendment offered by Mr. BACON is as follows:

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

That the provisions hereof shall apply to and include not only the island of Porto Rico, but also all the adjacent islands and the waters thereof east of the seventy-fourth meridian of longitude west of Greenwich that were ceded to the United States by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899.

SEC. 2. That the capital shall be at the city of San Juan and the seat of government for the island shall be maintained there.

SEC. 3. That all inhabitants of the island continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in Porto Rico, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain on or before the 11th day of April, 1900, in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on the 11th day of April, 1899; and they shall constitute a body politic with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred, and with power to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States in the name of the "Island of Porto Rico" in all cases in which such courts have jurisdiction where one of the parties is a State or Territory of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the laws and ordinances now in force in the island of Porto Rico shall continue in full force and effect, except as altered, amended, or modified hereinafter, or by military orders and decrees now in force, and so far as the same are not inconsistent or in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable, or the provisions hereof, until altered, amended, or repealed by the legislative authority hereinafter provided for the island or by act of Congress of the United States.

SEC. 5. That the laws of the United States relating to commerce, navigation, and merchant seamen are hereby extended to and over the island of Porto Rico and all said adjacent islands and waters, and the Commissioner of Navigation may make such regulations as he may deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants of the island on the 11th day of April, 1899, and which continued to be so owned up to the date of such nationalization, and the coasting trade between the island and any other portion of the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts.

SEC. 6. That on and after the date of the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported, except from the United States into the island of Porto Rico, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of the act "To provide revenue for the Government, and to encourage industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said schedules and paragraphs were expressly reenacted in this act, and all the other provisions and paragraphs of such act comprised in the sections thereof from 2 to 34, inclusive, not locally inapplicable shall be and remain in force in said island of Porto Rico until otherwise provided by Congress: Provided, however, That all collections made hereunder shall be paid into the treasury of the island, to be expended as required by law for the government and benefit of the island instead of being paid into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 7. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be collected within the island of Porto Rico all the internal-revenue taxes imposed under the provisions of the Revised Statutes elsewhere in the United States in so far as the same are locally applicable, and all the provisions of the laws of the United States providing for internal-revenue taxation and the collection thereof not locally inapplicable shall be and remain in force within the island of Porto Rico until otherwise provided by Congress.

SEC. 8. That on and after the passage of this act all merchandise coming into the United States from the island of Porto Rico, and all merchandise going from the United States into the island of Porto Rico, shall be admitted into the respective ports of entry free of all tariffs, customs, and duties, all laws and parts of laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 9. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the government of Porto Rico for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the island, not, however, including harbors, light-houses, buoys, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall be paid by the treasurer of the island out of the revenues in his hands, and not be a liability in any case of the United States.

SEC. 10. That the Constitution and all the laws of the United States locally applicable, except as hereinbefore or hereinafter otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in the island of Porto Rico as elsewhere in the United States.

SEC. 11. That the legislative authority hereinafter provided shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law or ordinance, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act, as it may from time to time see fit.

SEC. 12. That all vested property rights, and all obligations, contracts, rights of action, suits at law and in equity, prosecutions for crimes and misdemeanors, and all sentences and civil judgments and decrees now existing shall remain unaffected by this act and continue enforceable.

SEC. 13. That all judicial and legal process shall run in the name of "The United States of America, island of Porto Rico," and all criminal or penal prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of "The United States of America, island of Porto Rico."

THE GOVERNOR.

SEC. 14. That the official title of the chief executive officer of the island shall be "the governor of Porto Rico." He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; he shall hold his office for a term of four years and until his successor is chosen and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President; he shall reside in the island during his official incumbency, and shall maintain his office at the seat of government; he may grant pardons and reprieves, and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of the island, and respites for offenses against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be ascertained; he shall commission all officers of the island that he may be authorized to appoint, and shall participate in and may veto any legislation enacted by the legislative authority of the island, as hereinafter provided; he shall be the commander in chief of the militia of the island and shall at all times faithfully execute the laws of the island, and he shall in that behalf have all the powers of governors of the Territories of the United States that are locally applicable; and he shall annually, and at such other times as he may be required, make official report of the proceedings and condition of government in the island, through the Secretary of State, to the President of the United States.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

SEC. 15. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the period of four years, unless sooner removed by the President, a secretary, an attorney-general, a treasurer, an auditor, a commissioner of the interior, and a commissioner of education, each of whom shall reside in the island during his official incumbency and have the powers and duties hereinafter provided for them, respectively, and who, together with the governor and five other persons of good repute, to be also appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the native inhabitants of the island, shall constitute an executive council, and, in addition to the legislative duties hereinafter imposed upon them as a body, exercise such powers and perform such duties as are hereinafter provided for them, respectively.

SEC. 16. That the secretary shall record and preserve minutes of the proceedings of the executive council and the laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the island, and all acts and proceedings of the governor, and shall promulgate all proclamations and orders of the governor and all laws enacted by the legislative assembly. He shall, within sixty days after the end of each session of the legislative assembly, transmit to the President, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of State of the United States one copy each of the laws and journals of such session.

SEC. 17. That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or disability of the governor, or his temporary absence from the island, the secretary shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the governor during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

SEC. 18. That the attorney-general shall have all the powers and discharge all the duties provided by law for an attorney-general of a Territory of the United States in so far as the same are locally applicable, and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports, through the governor, to the Attorney-General of the United States as that officer may require.

SEC. 19. That the treasurer shall collect and be the custodian of the public funds, and shall disburse the same as required by law, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make, through the governor, such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as that officer may require.

SEC. 20. That the auditor shall keep full and accurate accounts, showing all receipts and disbursements, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make, through the governor, such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as that officer may require.

SEC. 21. That the commissioner of the interior shall superintend all works of a public nature, and shall have charge of all public buildings, grounds, and lands, except those belonging to the United States, and shall execute such requirements as may be imposed by law with respect thereto, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law and make such reports through the governor to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States as that official may require.

SEC. 22. That the commissioner of education shall superintend public instruction throughout the island, and all disbursements on account thereof must be approved by him; and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law and make such reports through the governor as may be required by the Commissioner of Education of the United States.

SEC. 23. That the other five members of the executive council, to be appointed from natives of the island, as hereinbefore provided, shall attend all meetings of the executive council and participate in all business of every character that may be transacted by it; and they shall receive as compensation for their services such annual salaries as may be provided by the legislative assembly.

HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

SEC. 24. That the local legislative authority for the island shall consist of two houses; one the executive council, as hereinbefore constituted, and the other a house of delegates, to consist of 35 members elected biennally by the qualified voters of the island, as hereinafter provided; and the two houses thus constituted shall be designated "the legislative assembly of the island of Porto Rico, United States of America."

SEC. 25. That for the purpose of such elections, and for judicial and other governmental purposes, the island shall be divided by the executive council into five districts, composed of contiguous territory and as nearly equal as may be in population, and each district shall be entitled to seven members of the house of delegates.

ELECTION OF DELEGATES.

SEC. 26. That the first election for delegates shall be held on such date and under such regulations as to ballots and voting as the executive council may prescribe; and at such elections the voters of each legislative district shall choose seven delegates to represent them in the house of delegates from the date of their election and qualification until two years from and after the 1st day of January next ensuing; of all which thirty days' notice shall be given by publication in the Official Gazette, or by printed notices distributed and posted throughout the district, as the executive council may prescribe. At such elections all citizens of the island shall be allowed to vote who possess the qualifications of voters under the laws and military orders now in force in the island, subject to such regulations and restrictions as to registration and otherwise as may be now provided, or as may be prescribed by the executive council. The house of delegates so chosen shall convene at the capital and organize by the election of a speaker, a clerk, a sergeant-at-arms, and such other officers and assistants as it may require, at such time as may be designated by the executive council; but it shall not continue in session longer than sixty days in any one year, unless called by the governor to meet in extraordinary session. The enacting clause of the laws shall be, "Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the island of Porto Rico, United States of America;" and each member of the house of delegates shall be paid for his services at the rate of $5 per day for each days attendance while the house is in session.

All future elections of delegates shall be governed by the provisions hereof, so far as they are applicable, until the legislative assembly shall otherwise provide.

SEC. 27. That the house of delegates shall be the sole judge of the qualifications of its members, and shall have and exercise all the powers with respect to the conduct of its proceedings that usually appertain to parliamentary legislative bodies. No person shall be eligible to membership in the house of delegates who is not 25 years of age and able to read and write either the Spanish or the English language, or who is not possessed in his own right of property, real or personal, situated in the island, of the value of at least $2,000.

SEC. 28. That all laws enacted may originate in either body, but no bill shall become a law unless it be passed in each body by a majority vote of all the members belonging to such body and be approved by the governor within ten days thereafter. If, when a bill that has been passed is presented to the governor for signature, he approve the same, he shall sign it, or if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that house in which it originated, which house shall enter his objections at large on its journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be considered, and, if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal of each house, respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislative assembly by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

SEC. 29. That the legislative authority herein provided shall apply to all matters of a legislative character locally applicable to the island, including power to create, consolidate, and reorganize, as may be necessary, the municipalities of the island, and to provide and repeal laws and ordinances therefor; and also the power to alter, amend, modify, and repeal any and all laws and ordinances of every character now in force in the island or any municipality or district thereof, subject in all cases to the requirement that no legislation shall be inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States: Provided, however, That all grants of franchises, rights, and privileges or concessions of a public or quasi public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, and all franchises granted in Porto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

THE JUDICIARY.

SEC. 30. That the judicial power shall be vested in the courts and tribunals of the island as already established and now in operation, including municipal courts, under and by virtue of General Orders, No. 118, as promulgated by Brigadier-General Davis, United States Volunteers, August 16, 1899, and the laws and ordinances of the island and the municipalities thereof in force, so far as the same are not in conflict herewith or with the Constitution of the United States, all which courts and tribunals are hereby continued. The jurisdiction of said courts and the form of procedure in them, and the various officials and attachés thereof, respectively, shall be the same as defined and prescribed in and by said laws and ordinances, and said General Orders, No. 118, until otherwise provided by law: Provided, however, That the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court and the marshal thereof shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the judges of the district courts shall be appointed by the governor of the island, and all other officials and attachés of all the other courts shall be chosen as may be directed by the legislative assembly of the island, which shall have authority to legislate from time to time as it may see fit with respect to said courts, and any others they may deem it advisable to establish, their organization, the number of judges and officials and attachés for each, their jurisdiction, their procedure, and all the matters affecting them.

SEC. 31. That the island of Porto Rico shall constitute a judicial district to be called "the district of Porto Rico." The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal for said district, each for a term of four years, unless sooner removed by the President. The district court for said district shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizant in the circuit courts of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court. The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error and certiorari, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in such matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the island. Regular terms of said court shall be held at San Juan, commencing on the second Monday in April and October of each year, and also at Ponce on the second Monday in January of each year, and special terms may be held at Mayaguez at such other times and places in the district as said judge may deem expedient. All pleadings and proceedings in said court shall be conducted in the English language.

The United States district court hereby established shall be the successor to the United States provisional court established by General Orders, No. 88, promulgated by Brigadier-General Davis, and shall take possession of all records of that court, and take jurisdiction of all cases and proceedings pending therein, and said United States provisional court is hereby discontinued.

SEC. 32. That writs of error and appeals from the final decisions of the supreme court of the island shall be allowed and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner and under the same regulations and in the same cases as from the supreme courts of the Territories of the United States; and such writs of error and appeal shall be allowed in all cases where the Constitution of the United States, or a treaty thereof, or an act of Congress is brought in question and the right claimed thereunder is denied; and the supreme and district courts of the island and the respective judges thereof may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are grantable by the judges of the United States in the District of Columbia. All proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States shall be conducted in the English language.

SEC. 33. That the salaries of all officials of the island not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall be such, and be so paid out of the revenues of the island, as the executive council shall from time to time determine: Provided, however, That the salary of no officer shall be either increased or diminished during his term of office. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials for the island, appointed as herein provided by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall also be paid out of the revenues of the island on the warrant of the auditor, who shall pay all salaries, and also all items of official expense approved by the executive council and duly audit the same.

The annual salaries of the officials appointed by the President, and so to be paid, shall be as follows:

The governor, $10,000.
The secretary, $4,000.
The attorney-general, $4,000.
The auditor, $4,000.
The commissioner of the interior, $4,000.
The commissioner of education, $4,000.
The chief justice of the supreme court, $5,000.
The associate justices of the supreme court (each), $4,500.
The marshal of the supreme court, $3,000.
The United States district judge, $5,000.
The United States district attorney, $4,000.
The United States district marshal, $3,500.

SEC. 34. That the provisions of the foregoing section shall not apply to the municipal officials. Their salaries and the compensation of their deputies, assistants, and other help, as well as all other expenses incurred by the municipalities, shall be paid out of the municipal revenues in such manner as the legislative assembly shall provide.

SEC. 35. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from the island; but taxes and assessments on property, and license fees for franchises, privileges, and concessions may be imposed for the purposes of the insular and municipal governments, respectively, as may be provided and defined by act of the legislative assembly; and where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the island or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law to provide for expenditures authorized by law, and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That no public indebtedness of the island or of any municipality thereof shall be authorized or allowed in excess of 10 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of the property of the island or municipality, respectively.

SEC. 36. That the qualified voters of the island shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1900, and every two years thereafter, choose one Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, who shall be entitled to a seat, but not to a vote, in that body, on the certificate of election of the governor of the island: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide inhabitant of the island, and who is not 30 years of age and possessed of property in his own right situated in the island of the value of at least $2,000.

SEC. 37. That a commission, to consist of five members, at least two of whom shall be native citizens of the island, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to compile and revise the laws of the island; also the various codes of procedure and systems of municipal government now in force, and to frame and report such legislation as may be necessary to make a simple, harmonious, and economical government, establish justice and secure its prompt and efficient administration, inaugurate a general system of education and public instruction, provide buildings and funds therefor, equalize and simplify taxation and all the methods of raising revenue, and make all other provisions that may be necessary to secure and extend the benefits of a republican form of government to all the inhabitants of the island; and all the expenses of such commissioners, including all necessary clerks and other assistants that they may employ, and a salary to each member of the commission at the rate of $5,000 per annum, shall be allowed and paid out of the insular treasury as a part of the expenses of the government of the island. And said commission shall make full and final report of all its proceedings and recommendations to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

SEC. 38. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of March, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PETTUS and Mr. TELLER asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN (when his name was called). On this vote the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] stands paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON'S name was called). My colleague is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Montana (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], with whom I am paired, would, if present, vote "yea." I believe the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. Hence I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. On the passage of the bill I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. He would vote "nay" if present, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WELLINGTON. Under the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, a mutual transfer of pairs having taken place, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WETMORE. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 31; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The preamble, without objection, will be stricken out.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 268.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, and to divide the same into two districts and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a committee of conference on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. BACON were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that Senate bill 2355 may be laid before the Senate. I wish to have it made the unfinished business. Of course, I do not intend to ask the Senate to go on with it to-night.

Mr. PENROSE. I object.

Mr. LODGE. Then I make the motion. It was included in the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PENROSE. I second the motion.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BERRY. What is the bill the Senator from Massachusetts is trying to get up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROCTOR (when Mr. MALLORY'S name was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. WELLINGTON (when Mr. PRITCHARD'S name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] has been called away to attend a funeral. He is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. WELLINGTON. Under the arrangement heretofore announced by the Senator from Nebraska I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allen,	Clay,	Kenney,	Thurston,
Baker,	Culberson,	Martin,	Turley,
Bard,	Daniel,	Money,	Vest,

Foraker,	McBride,	Simon,

NOT VOTING—29.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	McLaurin,	Sewell,
Berry,	Hale,	Mallory,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Hoar,	Mason,	Stewart,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Turner,
Caffery,	Kyle,	Pettus,	Warren.
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pritchard,
Cockrell,	McCumber,	Rawlins,
Depew,	McEnery,	Scott,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion—my request—to take up Senate bill 2355, and after that I shall move to adjourn. This is according to the unanimous agreement, as I understood it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent——

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not ask it. I ask that under the unanimous-consent agreement we may proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2355.

Mr. ALLEN. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2355, Order of Business 536.

Mr. STEWART. I understand——

Mr. GALLINGER. Here is the agreement printed in the Calendar.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that this is to be the unfinished business, and will come up at 2 o'clock, and that it will not be in the way of calling up the Quay case immediately after the routine business.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that will be done every morning.

Mr. LODGE. It is simply to make this bill the unfinished business; that is all.

Mr. STEWART. If that is according to the agreement, I am going to keep the agreement.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska was recognized before the Senator from New Hampshire rose.

Mr. ALLEN. I rose to ask the Chair what the agreement was. The Senator from Massachusetts speaks of an unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, what is the bill that is proposed to be taken up? It has only been spoken of by number.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the title of the bill for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Order of Business 536, a bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of September, 1898.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand it is claimed by the Senator from Massachusetts that under the unanimous-consent agreement, made when I was not in the Chamber, this bill is entitled to take the place of the Porto Rican bill as the unfinished business. If that is the object of the Senator from Massachusetts, I have no objection; but I understand that the special order in reference to the Pennsylvania case takes effect to-morrow after the routine morning business, and that the Pennsylvania case, both under that order and according to the rules of the Senate, is a privileged question, subject to be called up at any time and pressed upon the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand that that statement of the Senator from New Hampshire has unanimous assent here?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. LODGE. The unanimous-consent agreement is printed here, if the Senator will look at it. The Senate made an agreement a part of which was that the Quay case should not interfere with this bill when taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not so understand the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. The unanimous consent, I understand, was for to-day—to take up the Quay case to-day.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement be read.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to interfere with its coming up after the routine morning business. The exception was clearly made.

Mr. PETTUS. There was no unanimous consent asked here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it. The reading being asked for, the Secretary will read the agreement entered into by the Senate by unanimous consent.

The Secretary read as follows:

That on Tuesday, April 3, after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of S. R. 107, declaring "that the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania," and continue its consideration from day to day until the final disposition of the same, subject to the consideration of appropriation bills, conference reports, the present unfinished business, and S. 2355, "in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of September, 1898." (March 16, 1900.) Notice given by Mr. Chandler that he would not call up the foregoing resolution until Wednesday, April 4, at the same hour. (March 31, 1900.)

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, if that means that these subjects are to be taken up and considered when the Pennsylvania case is not under consideration there is no objection to it, but if it is to be contended that the agreement means that all those subjects shall have a preference over the Pennsylvania case, that is a construction of the unanimous-consent agreement which will not be assented to by me for a single moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is precisely the understanding that some of us had, that the Quay case would be subordinate to the consideration of the other measures that are named in the unanimous-consent agreement, except, of course, that the Quay case can be called up in the morning hour.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what it says and what everybody on this side understood it to mean.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a most astonishing agreement if a question of the highest privilege is made subordinate in this body to almost everything else that anyone wants to bring up.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator in charge of this question of privilege assented to it, of course he is responsible for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] agreed to it, but he did not agree that consideration should mean preference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the question now before the Senate is upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that the bill the number and title of which have been read for the information of the Senate shall be now taken up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that it be taken up; and if no objection is made I suppose it will be taken up. If there is objection, I will move to take it up.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to its being taken up and made the unfinished business, but I will resist the inference that for a moment it is entitled to consideration as against the privileged question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There are one or two matters that we have got to understand here, preliminarily, it seems to me. We have fallen late in the afternoon upon a possible subject of disagreement in construing the unanimous consent. The Senator from Massachusetts understands it one way and the Senator from New Hampshire understands it the other way. This has been a long session of the Senate. This is a most important question. We are all tired; some of us, perhaps, inclined to be a little more hasty in judgment than we might be in the cooler hours of the morning. I therefore renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order, no business having intervened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that other business has intervened. Several Senators have made remarks and points of order and other questions have intervened, so that the motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. LODGE. That is not parliamentary business, Mr. President. Then, on the motion to adjourn, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). Mr. President, I am paired.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Baker,	Deboe,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Bate,	Gear,	Penrose,	Vest,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Wellington,
Chandler,	Heitfeld,	Scott,	Wolcott.
Clay,	Mason,	Sewell,
Culberson,	Money,	Stewart,
Daniel,	Morgan,	Taliaferro,

NAYS—31.

Allison,	Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Ross,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	Kean,	Simon,
Bard,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Spooner,
Berry,	Foster,	McBride,	Teller,
Burrows,	Frye,	McMillan,	Tillman,
Clark, Mont.	Gallinger,	Platt, Conn.	Turley,
Cockrell,	Hanna,	Proctor,	Wetmore.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Quarles,

NOT VOTING—31.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	McComas,	Platt, N. Y.
Allen,	Hale,	McCumber,	Pritchard,
Beveridge,	Harris,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Butler,	Hoar,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Jones, Nev.	Mallory,	Sullivan,
Chilton,	Kenney,	Martin,	Turner,
Clark, Wyo.	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Warren.
Depew,	Lindsay,	Pettus,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2355.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, that motion goes to the order of business in the Senate, and I presume it is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to take up the bill is not debatable.

Mr. CARTER. Then I will ask the Senator at this time to state his construction of the unanimous-consent agreement. Is it his contention that the language of this unanimous agreement requires that the Senate shall make of Senate bill No. 2355 the unfinished business?

Mr. LODGE. I understood that my motion to take it up and make it the unfinished business did not interfere with the agreement to consider the Quay case; that it was relieved from that agreement as one of the exceptions made.

Mr. CARTER. Then I understand from the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts that he does not contend that the unanimous-consent agreement in and of itself requires that the bill in question shall be made the unfinished business, but that the Senate may take the question up and make it the unfinished business or decline to make it the unfinished business without any violence of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate can undoubtedly refuse to take up anything. It can refuse to take up the Quay case.

Mr. CARTER. But I understand the Senator in the first instance to contend that this particular bill comes under the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate and has precedence to and priority over the case of the appointment of a Senator from Pennsylvania, and upon that basis he presents this motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen.	Davis,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Allison.	Deboe,	McBride,	Spooner,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Taliaferro,
Bard,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Teller,
Bate,	Foster,	Money,	Tillman,
Berry,	Frye,	Morgan,	Turley,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Perkins,	Vest,
Chandler,	Gear,	Pettus,	Warren,
Clark, Mont.	Hanna,	Platt, Conn.	Wellington,
Clay,	Hawley,	Proctor,	Wetmore.
Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Quarles,
Culberson,	Jones, Ark.	Ross,
Daniel,	Kean,	Sewell,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having responded on the roll call, a quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. I now renew my motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order in reference to the construction of the agreement. It was an agreement for to-day. The order was postponed at my suggestion from to-day until to-morrow, because of the pendency of the Porto Rican bill. If that order takes effect to-morrow and governs this bill in reference to the Philippines, it is not in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement for the Senator from Massachusetts to move to take up the Philippine bill at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I make that point upon the unanimous-consent agreement. If the Pennsylvania case is not entitled to come up now, then the Philippine bill is not entitled to come up now.

Mr. LODGE. When the agreement was made on the Quay case there was no agreement to vote on the Porto Rican bill on the 3d day of April. That agreement was made subsequently. The Porto Rican bill and conference reports and the Philippine bill were all in the same class. It is just as much in order to consider the Philippine bill to-day and make it the unfinished business as ti was in order to conclude the consideration of the Porto Rican bill. The prolongation of the agreement until to-morrow does not affect any of the excepted subjects, and the agreement to vote to-day on the Porto Rican bill has no bearing whatever on the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that if we are acting under the unanimous-consent agreement to which the Senators appeal, the first thing to be taken up is the Pennsylvania case, and if Senators are not ready to speak upon it, or are not ready to proceed with the continuous consideration of it, which the agreement provides for, it is then in order to take up some of those other subjects. But it is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement to move to take up the Philippine bill unless the Pennsylvania case is first laid before the Senate. I make that point.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the debate which occurred the morning when unanimous consent was given read for the information of Senators.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think that should be done. I should like to hear it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am sure that a great many Senators here are in the dark as to what they are doing, and they are not voting according to the agreement made that morning.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the Secretary shall read the debate which took place at the time.

Mr. BURROWS. The unanimous-consent agreement has already been read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. PENROSE. I call for the reading of the agreement.

Mr. BURROWS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am speaking about the debate the morning the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. I call for the reading of the debate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That should be read.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the debate be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the debate has been called for. It will be read for the information of Senators.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask what is the date?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. March 16, page 2963 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to renew the request which I made yesterday, which is that "a week from next Friday, after the conclusion of the routine morning business of the Senate, the Senate will take up the Quay case for consideration, and during the same period each day from day to day will continue the consideration of that case until it is disposed of, excepting the unfinished business"—the present unfinished business, I mean, of course—and also appropriation bills and conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the Senator forward that request to the Chair?

Mr. HOAR. It will be found at the bottom of page 3117 of yesterday's proceedings. I sent it to the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. This being Friday, the date proposed is two weeks from to-day.

Mr. HOAR. One week from to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read to the Senate the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary read as follows:

"I ask unanimous consent that a week from next Friday, immediately after the routine morning business, the Quay case may be taken up for consideration and continued until disposed of, reserving the right of appropriation bills and conference reports."

Mr. HOAR. My request, of course, is for a week from to-day. The phrase "next Friday" was used yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator added one other phrase, "appropriation bills and the present unfinished business."

Mr. HOAR. The present unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will add to the request "the present unfinished business."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, there is no disposition, so far as I know, to delay the consideration of this matter, but I will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has been very courteous in the affair, that his suggestion yesterday, in view of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggested that he might be back next Thursday or Friday, was that he would fix the time a week from Monday. But it will be remembered by the Senator from Massachusetts that a week from next Monday or Tuesday the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with its entire membership, will be engaged in the consideration of a very important matter before that committee involving the right of a sitting member of this body; and it has already agreed that two days, Tuesday and Wednesday, of that week shall be taken up by counsel in the discussion of the question, after which I suppose the committee will proceed with closed doors to consider the matter.

I therefore would suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts to fix the time at two weeks from next Monday or Tuesday, so that the Senator will be here, and to that arrangement I shall not have the slightest objection.

Mr. HOAR. I will accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on two weeks from Monday next——

Mr. HOAR. From Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From Tuesday next the election case involving the appointment of Senator Quay shall be taken up for consideration and continued to completion, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills or with the present unfinished business or with conference reports.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, but simply to make an inquiry. If the Porto Rican bill, which is the present unfinished business, should be disposed of before that time, do I understand that this agreement would debar me from making a motion to take up the bill reported from the Committee on the Philippines?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it would.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I can not consent to that.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague can get it up before that time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that the junior Senator from Massachusetts would not be in the least debarred from calling up the Philippine measure, but that in two weeks from Tuesday it would give way until the Quay case was disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair means of course that it would have that effect after the lapse of two weeks from Tuesday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I certainly shall not object to this arrangement, and yet I wish to make a simple statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest, Mr. President, that that need not be read; it does not particularly relate to this matter.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. WOLCOTT. Let us have it all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading, as follows:

I was astounded yesterday to have it suggested that those of us who are opposed to seating Mr. Quay were by parliamentary devices preventing consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I did not make any such suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be recalled——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if he understood me to make any such suggestion?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I did not understand him to make any suggestion of the kind.

It will be recalled, Mr. President, that the last two or three weeks of the time of the Senate have been devoted to the consideration, first, of the Hawaiian bill, which was in charge of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who I understand proposes to vote for Mr. Quay, and that next we have been considering the Puerto Rican bill, in charge of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who I understand likewise proposes to vote to seat Mr. Quay. In the next place, we have given consent to the reading of a bill at hours other than those that are usually occupied in the transaction of the ordinary business of this body, and the reading of that bill would have consumed two days of the time of the Senate. In the next place, we have been considering an appropriation bill for Porto Rico in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who is likewise, I understand, committed to the view that Mr. Quay is entitled to a seat in this body. There has been no matter, so far as I can recall, during the past two or three weeks before the Senate that a Senator opposed to the seating of Mr. Quay has insisted should be considered.

I have placed no obstacle in the way of this resolution. I propose to place none. It is immaterial to me when it is taken up, and it is immaterial to me when it is concluded. I will say that the Senate need not postpone the consideration or the vote upon this measure one single minute on my account, because it is not of any consequence to me or to the Senate or the country whether I submit a single observation in opposition to the seating of Mr. Quay or not. If I am present I shall vote against, if I am absent I shall be paired in opposition to this proposition, it being one that I am totally opposed to.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand it, then, after April 3, which is the date when this unanimous-consent agreement is to take effect, I should have no right under this unanimous agreement to move to take up the bill reported from the committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator would not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is impossible to say how long the debate on the Quay case may continue, and I can not resign that right.

Mr. HOAR. I will except my colleague's bill.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. We shall undoubtedly be able to arrange about the date.

Mr. LODGE. I merely did not want to bind myself; that was all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair will repeat the request of the Senator from Massachusetts so that there may be no misunderstanding.

The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on two weeks from Tuesday next the Quay election case shall be taken up for consideration, and that the consideration shall be had to the conclusion of the case; interfering not, however, with appropriation bills, or the present unfinished business, or the measure touching the Philippine question reported by the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Or conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Or conference reports.

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair hold that under this agreement, if entered into, a motion to postpone or to table or to recommit would not be in order?

Mr. HOAR. I should not claim any such ruling myself. I suppose it will be subject to an ordinary motion that is a disposition of the case.

Mr. HALE. It is simply that the resolution, the privileged question, shall have the right of way, but it is subject to all of the obstacles and all of the resistance that ordinary parliamentary law gives in such a case.

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I wanted that to be understood, because I remember, and some other Senators will remember, that without any jugglery on the part of anyone we got caught once and found that only the main question could be put. I want to have that understood by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As at present advised, the Chair would hold that any subsidiary motion touching the case would be in order.

Mr. HALE. I so believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately after the routine morning business is finished. Is that the Senator's request?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business in two weeks from Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to this question?

Mr. RAWLINS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, now, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators who perhaps differ from me on this question, whether they understand that that unanimous-consent agreement was a contract that gave preference over the Pennsylvania case—a question about the filling of a vacant seat in this Senate—to all the appropriation bills, to conference reports, and to the bill in reference to the Philippines, and that it is not in order to ask, under that unanimous-consent agreement, to proceed to the consideration of the Quay case so long as any one of those matters is before the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that under that unanimous-consent agreement I was to have the right to move to take up the Philippine bill on the conclusion of the Porto Rican bill. It was so understood by everyone. I stated that I could not consent to this Quay agreement unless I retained that right. I have exercised that right this afternoon, and the friends of Mr. Quay have prevented me from having the right I claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the Senator willing to answer my question or not?

Mr. LODGE. I am not engaged in interpreting unanimous-consent agreements. I am acting within my right in making the motion I have made.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has very discourteously refused to answer my question. I say that it can not be possible that the absent Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] ever intended to make a contract in this Senate that a privileged question like an election case should be forever subjected to appropriation bills and conference reports and the Philippine bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word, as

I remember very distinctly what occurred between the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and myself in relation to this matter. The Senator from Massachusetts was very anxious to bring the Quay case to a hearing, and I was willing that some day should be fixed for its consideration. The Senator from Massachusetts came to me and asked, and he also made the request in the open Senate, that a day might be fixed for the consideration of the Quay case. At that time I was not prepared to accede to his request, and suggested that the matter should be postponed until the morning, when I would confer with him in relation to it.

I did so. We agreed that the case might be set down for a hearing on the 3d day of April, subject to certain things; and my understanding of the agreement was—and I can not for the life of me see how there can be any misunderstanding about it—that the Quay case should be taken up on the 3d day of April, immediately after the routine business, and proceeded with until its conclusion, subject, however, first, to appropriation bills. I do not know what the practice in the Senate is, but in the House of Representatives that means that if an appropriation bill is brought in and its consideration demanded, it would take precedence of the special order, for the reason that appropriation bills must be disposed of before Congress can adjourn.

So the matter was made subject to appropriation bills, also subject to any conference reports that might be brought in, because a conference report is a question of very high privilege, and there was also excepted the then unfinished business, which was the Porto Rican bill. Finally, it was agreed also that the Quay case should be subject to the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has called up. So my understanding of the order was that immediately after the regular morning business the consideration of the Quay case, under this agreement, is in order——

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator whether he understood that that gave by contract a positive preference to all those subjects over the Pennsylvania case?

Mr. BURROWS. I understood by that contract just this: That the Quay case would be in order immediately after the close of the morning business; and if there was no appropriation bill, no conference report, and none of these special matters demanding a hearing, the Quay case would be proceeded with; but if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should rise at the close of the routine business and call up an appropriation bill, my understanding was that that appropriation bill would then be considered, and the Quay case would have to give way until that was concluded.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Michigan contend that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is in favor of filling the vacant seat with the governor's appointee and who made the report from the committee of which we are members, made a deliberate contract which made it out of order to try to proceed to the consideration of the Quay case so long as there was a conference report or an appropriation bill or the bill in reference to the Philippines before the Senate? Does the Senator from Michigan think that the Senator from Massachusetts made that contract when he was trying to get an agreement for the continuous consideration of a question of the highest privilege in the Senate?

Mr. BURROWS. I have not the slightest doubt about it, because I had a conversation with the Senator from Massachusetts, and that was also the understanding publicly in the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BURROWS. I believe under this agreement in good faith the Quay case can be called up at the close of the morning business and will be proceeded with; but if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should rise with a conference report when the Quay case was called up, it would have to give way until the conference report was disposed of. That would also be the case if an appropriation bill was called up. I know it is so in the House of Representatives where, when a special order is being considered and an appropriation bill had been specially excepted from the operation of that special order, the special order would have to be suspended until the appropriation bill had been disposed of.

Mr. CHANDLER. In an election case?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes; in any case.

Mr. CHANDLER. In an election case, never.

Mr. BURROWS. In any case where such an agreement had been made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator that he telegraph to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to-night and get his opinion, and leave the status quo where it is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the few words of rather personal controversy which have already been uttered here indicate more quickly than I feared might be the happening that we are sitting rather late to-night. We have had a tiresome and long and busy day. It is evident that the white dove of peace no longer hovers over the Senate Chamber as it does in the mornings; and, however Senators may be inclined to vote on this question, some of us feel who, in one way in accord on this question as to Mr. Quay differ as to adjournment, differ as to the Philippine question; and, upon the other side of the Chamber, where there is usually a most remarkable unanimity [laughter], there seems to be some difference also. I therefore appeal to Senators in the interest of good order and the wise conduct of public affairs at this late hour of the night, when most of us would be usually sitting down to our frugal dinners [laughter], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, and I make that motion.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for one moment. I merely desire to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado withdraw his motion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say that it is perfectly obvious that by attempting to hold the Senate here I shall attain no good result. I have no desire to do that. The purpose of the friends of Mr. Quay is plain, which is all that I desire to disclose. I have no objection now to either adjourning or going into executive session, but I desire to say that I consider the unanimous-consent agreement to be at an end so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not suppose that I was giving way for the purpose of an offensive remark. I do not know where the Senator from Massachusetts counts himself, whether as an enemy of Mr. Quay or as a friend of Mr. Quay. It is hard to tell who are Mr. Quay's friends and who are his enemies. But, Mr. President, when there is any suggestion or intimation made that there was any unworthy or unrighteous purpose in pressing the consideration of this case—a case of the highest privilege—anybody who makes the suggestion goes far out of his way to state that which is unqualifiedly false.

I change my motion to a motion that the Senate now adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think after what has been said that I am entitled to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado withdraw his motion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I made no charge of any kind. I said that I had been deprived of a right which I thought I clearly had under the unanimous-consent agreement. I am not going to press it; I am not going to hold the Senate; but if the unanimous consent is broken, of course that is the end of it. It can not bind one and not bind another.

Mr. CHANDLER. One word more, Mr. President. The unanimous-consent agreement had better come to an end if it means what Senators declare it to be—that there has been a contract made that this high question of privilege shall not be considered until after all the appropriation bills, conference reports, and the Philippine bill have been disposed of.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I now renew my motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 4, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 3, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a copy of a letter from Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, commissioner-general of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1900, dated November 17, 1899, submitting a detailed statement of the expenditures incurred under authority of law.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 2, 1900.

PUBLIC MONEYS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, CUBA, AND PUERTO RICO.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 9386, to provide better facilities for the safe-keeping and disbursement of public moneys in the Philippine Islands and in the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico, reported unanimously by the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to designate one or more banks or bankers in the Philippine Islands, and in the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico, as depositaries of public moneys, in the same manner as he now designates national banks as depositaries of public moneys under the provisions of section 5153, Revised Statutes of the United States; such banks or bankers thus designated to give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds, or otherwise, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public moneys deposited with them and for the faithful performance of their duties.

With the following amendments, recommended by the committee:

In line 11 strike out the word "or" and insert "and;" add at the end of the bill the following: "Provided, That this act shall apply to Cuba only while occupied by the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I want to call my friend's attention to a point I have in mind. This bill authorizes the President to name certain banks in the islands for the purpose of depositing public funds in these banks as a matter of safety. The point I make is this, that I did not catch from the reading of the bill——

Mr. BREWER. I object to the present consideration of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The consideration of this bill was postponed the other day to enable the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BREWER] to offer an amendment.

Mr. BREWER. I have an amendment to offer at the proper time, but I object to the present consideration of the bill until I can have some understanding about the debate that may occur on that amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can not the gentleman from Alabama present his amendment now?

Mr. BREWER. We are not ready to discuss it now without a conference as to the debate that may be had upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

EXTENDING HOMESTEAD LAWS TO SOLDIERS OF SPANISH WAR AND PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9140) providing that entrymen under the homestead laws, who have served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Spanish war or the Philippine insurrection, shall have certain service deducted from the time required to perfect title under homestead laws and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person having served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the late war with Spain, or in the Philippine Islands during the Philippine insurrection, and having been honorably discharged, who may enter a tract of land under the homestead laws shall be entitled to have the following term of service deducted from the time required to perfect title under said homestead laws, to wit: When the term of such service shall not exceed six months, then a credit of six months shall be allowed; when the term of such service shall exceed six months, but not exceed twelve months, then a credit of twelve months shall be allowed, and when such term of service shall exceed twelve months, then a credit equal to the time actually served shall be allowed; but no patent shall issue to any such homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements: Provided, That if any such person shall have been discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the full term of his enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title without reference to length of time he may have served.

SEC. 2. That in case of the death of any person who would be entitled to the benefits of section 1 of this act, his widow, if unmarried, shall be entitled to such benefits, or in case of her death or remarriage, then his minor orphan children, by a guardian duly appointed, may enter a tract of land under the homestead laws and receive the benefits of section 1 of this act; and if the soldier, sailor, or marine died during the term of his enlistment the entire term of enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title: Provided, That in no case shall the amount of such deduction be less than one year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman the necessity of calling up this bill at this time by unanimous consent?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The reason is that the bill is substantially in the language of the present law, and there are a great many persons interested in the matter. I did not anticipate there would be any objection. It is giving the members or the participants in the Spanish war the same privileges as those who served in the civil war. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands, and several members have expressed a desire to have it brought up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can not it be brought up under the call of the committees?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I will say that the bill as introduced did not exactly conform to the statute relating to homesteads taken up by soldiers who enlisted in the civil war, but the amendments that were made made it conform to the act as now upon the statute book relating to soldiers who served in the civil war. It seems to me there ought to be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that House bills 2946, 5482, 4237, and 9085 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I call up the special order of the House for to-day, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii. Pending that motion, I desire to state that, while the report is unanimous, inasmuch as gentlemen on both sides desire to speak, it has been considered fair to divide the time equally between the other side of the House and this side, and it has also been agreed, subject to the approval of the House, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCALEER] shall control the time on that side and that I shall control it upon this side. It is also desired that gentlemen who speak may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that that request may be granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider Senate bill 222, and, pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that the time be divided equally between the two sides, the gentleman from Massachusetts to control one-half of the time, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCALEER] to control the other half; also that all gentlemen making remarks upon this bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, pending this request, I have not the order before me, but I believe there was an agreement as to the length of time the debate was to last.

Mr. KNOX. For to-day and to-morrow, closing each session at 5 o'clock, the debate on Thursday to be under the five-minute rule until 4 o'clock, when the bill is to be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House, the Chair will have the order read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. KNOX, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that on Tuesday, April 3, it be in order, after the reading of the Journal, to consider S. 222, "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii;" that it be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, general debate to be limited to Tuesday, April 3, and Wednesday, April 4; to close each day at 5 o'clock; that on Thursday, April 5, the bill shall be read for amendments and debate under the five-minute rule, to continue until 4 o'clock, when the bill shall be reported to the House; the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to its passage. (Order made March 10.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize the fact that it would be too late to change the order just read unless unanimous consent could be obtained to do so; but the objectionable feature of that order is that two days are given for general debate and then only a portion of the third day for the reading of this bill under the five-minute rule. The effect of carrying out that order as adopted will be to bring us to a vote at 4 o'clock on Thursday, when possibly not one-third of the bill will have been read under the five-minute rule, and such reading is the only opportunity that will be allowed for the offering of amendments. It seems to me that the rule as just read should not have been agreed to.

But I repeat, I realize that we can not change it now except by unanimous consent. This bill, however, before the final vote, should be read entirely through under the five-minute rule, in order that each section may be open to debate and amendment. It occurs to me that it would be better now to modify the order, appropriating one day for general debate and the two remaining days for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule. It seems to me desirable that we should reach some agreement by which we may be relieved from so much of the order as brings us to a vote at 4 o'clock on Thursday. In other words, the bill should be read through. I regret that the order as read has been made.

I was going to suggest that if it can be done we modify the order so that the general debate may be concluded in one day; or if that can not be done, that we rescind the order for a vote at 4 o'clock on Thursday and let the bill be read through for debate and amendment. If that can be concluded by 4 o'clock on Thursday, all right; if not, then let us devote another day to this business. We have plenty of time, and it seems to me we ought not to bring ourselves to a vote on this bill without reading each section for amendment.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] whether it would not be well to go on for at least one day of general discussion under the rule as adopted. Perhaps at the expiration of that time the desire for general debate may not be so pressing as it has been. There has been a very great demand on both sides of the House for time to speak generally on this bill—a demand so pressing that it could not be fully yielded to.

Another answer to the gentleman's objection is this: This bill is for the establishment of a Territorial government; it contains 102 sections. A very large part of the bill comprises, of course, provisions for the governor, the legislature, etc., such provisions as we are all familiar with. I think the amendments will be confined probably to a very few sections, involving differences of view among members as to what the government ought to be. I am not myself apprehensive (I may be mistaken) of a lack of time to give the bill due consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are over 100 sections in this bill; and if the reading under the five-minute rule should commence at half past 12 o'clock on Thursday, it would take two hours—possibly it would take till 4 o'clock—without allowing any time for offering and discussing amendments. For that reason it would be better if we could get rid of the part of the order to which I have referred. If the offering of amendments and the discussion thereon can be concluded by 4 o'clock Thursday, all right; but I insist, if we do not get through that stage of the bill by 4 o'clock on Thursday, we ought not to bind ourselves to take a vote at that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request which has been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX]?

Mr. BELL. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Pending that, and before I object——

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have made no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] objected. The question is now on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill No. 222, to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. MOODY in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of Senate bill No. 222.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, in presenting to the House this bill creating a government for the Territory of Hawaii, I do not think it would be profitable or pertinent to discuss the general question of the desirability and wisdom of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. No subject of public policy has received the consideration of the American people more extensively than this. It has been debated for the larger part of the century now closing, both in Congress and the popular forum. It has been the subject of numerous Executive messages, and two treaties of annexation have failed. But however great has been the difference of opinion in the United States upon the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, there has been, and is to-day, no difference of opinion as to the danger and menace should they fall into the possession of any foreign nation.

And it has been the uniform position of the Government that acquisition of these islands by a foreign nation would be regarded by the United States as an unfriendly act.

The discussion which had been continuous for so great a part of our national existence came to a sudden and unexpected termination. Its end was in the events of the Spanish war, events which form an epoch in the history of this country and of the world.

That war made generally apparent to the people of the United States the strategic necessity of those islands, in view of war and a hostile fleet in the Pacific Ocean. They furnish the only base of naval operations in the Northern Pacific. In all that vast expanse of water, as is said in the report of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], from the Equator to Alaska, from the shores of Asia to the shores of the United States, there is but one spot where a ton of coal, or a pound of bread, or a gallon of water can be obtained, and that place is in Hawaii.

Hawaii also contains Pearl Harbor, one of the best and easiest defended in the world, an inland lagoon practically surrounded by land, with a narrow arm extending into the sea, and before that entrance a coral reef with a passageway of but five hundred to a thousand feet in width, where by guns in fortification the navies of the world may be stopped.

But there was something else besides the naval and strategic importance of these islands that was demonstrated by the war. We obtained a great island empire upon the shores of the Orient, drawing sharply the attention of the American people to the great market for American produce existing in the East, especially in China.

The acquisition of that territory came at a time when China, both territorially and politically, was being divided and changed; when a civilization, the oldest in the world, extending back thousands of years, older than Rome, older than Greece; a civilization that extended far back into the dim half light of tradition, beyond Egypt and Thebes and the Sphinx; a civilization that was old in the days of the Persian and the Babylonian Empire, was breaking up, emerging into the light and life of the present day. The possibilities of that market for American produce—and America now produces more than she can consume, and the disparity will increase as the years go on—can not be overestimated.

The possibilities of that great market have been secured to the people of the United States by a triumph of diplomacy achieved by a Republican President and a Republican Secretary of State, a triumph that challenges the admiration of the world. So that both in a military and naval sense and commercially the importance of the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands can not be exaggerated, and we may say to-day in fact what was said in argument for years in the past, that Hawaii is the Gibraltar of the Pacific in war, the key of the Pacific in peace, the paradise of the Pacific ever.

But whether the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands may be considered as the consummation of a long-settled policy upon the part of the United States or as the commencement of a new era of territorial expansion and commercial development, the step that has been taken can not be retraced. Hawaii is American territory by the solemn and the mutual agreement of two sovereign Republics. It is American territory absolutely and, humanly speaking, forever.

But while it is American territory, it does not possess American government. A part of the United States, it has no government of the United States. The annexation resolution, by which Hawaii became part of the United States, provided only for the continuance of a government in such manner and to be exercised by such persons as the President should appoint.

Its provisions were substantially the acceptance of the cession, a provision that the land laws of the United States should not extend to Hawaii, for a government by the President, for the continuance of the customs laws of Hawaii, for the exclusion of the Chinese, and for the assumption of the debt of Hawaii to the extent of $4,000,000.

Such a government could be in its nature but temporary, a government depending simply upon the will of the President in the appointment of agents and in the decision as to the manner in which it should be exercised. It is a government that is un-American, a government constituted against every principle and tradition of our country. If it were to remain, it would be a most offensive monarchy. Its only justification is that it was temporary.

There was no provision for expression of the popular will; no provision for a legislature; no provision for the future needs of the people. No courts of United States jurisdiction were established. It was intended to be, and was in itself, and by its nature must have been, a mere makeshift, to remain in force only until Congress should act and give to the people of Hawaii a government suitable to their needs and suitable to their fitness.

And that was the way the government was put in practical operation, by the proclamation of the President on May 13, simply continuing in power those then in office, except those who had relation to the foreign affairs of the islands, and continuing in force the municipal law of Hawaii that was not in violation of our own Constitution.

That government has utterly failed to meet the needs of the Hawaiian people. It has proved cumbersome, expensive, inadequate.

Many doubtful questions of admiralty jurisdiction have arisen. Under Article IV of the Constitution the judicial power of the United States extends to all questions of maritime and admiralty jurisdiction.

Here is the harbor of Honolulu, congested with shipping, with such questions arising almost daily, with no tribunal to pass upon them. Other questions have arisen in the administration of criminal law, as there is no provision in Hawaii for a grand jury, and a provision exists for a majority verdict of juries. There has been no power to make appropriations for public improvements, for roads, or to extend the wharves or harbor facilities.

The suspension of the conveyance of the public lands was ordered by the President in September, 1898. Persons who have had inchoate rights, homestead rights, and others have been unable to perfect their title. The Attorney-General rendered an opinion that although the municipal laws of Hawaii remained, yet the conveyances of the public lands were not authorized.

In addition, under this government large numbers of Japanese contract laborers have been imported into the island. By the last report which I have here, which has just been received, of the collector-general of customs of Hawaii, it appears that the immigration for 1899 was as follows: That there arrived in Hawaii 975 Chinese, 26,103 Japanese, and 5,647 of all others, and that there departed during the same time 1,514 Chinese, 2,780 Japanese, and 4,769 others.

Twenty-five thousand contract Japanese laborers have been imported into Hawaii since it was United States territory, subject to the United States laws, waiting for the United States Congress to give them a government.

It is time that this reproach upon the United States be removed, and the importation of contract labor into Hawaii be forever ended by the action of Congress.

Now, the duty is laid upon Congress to provide a government for these islands. In providing that government no question of general policy as to the people of other islands should have any weight. The government that we provide is to be decided, and decided alone, upon the needs of the Hawaiian people and upon their fitness for a representative and free government. In this way alone can we do justice to the people of Hawaii. They are entitled to a government for the Hawaiian people, not for the Puerto Rican, not for the Filipinos.

As to the character of the government that we provide, we should not be deterred by the fear of establishing any troublesome precedent for the future. If the conditions in Hawaii are not like those in Puerto Rico, in Cuba, or in the Philippines, then the establishment of the government that is made in Hawaii can form no precedent for such government, if any, as Congress may establish in other islands. Upon the merits of the case alone as applied to the Hawaiian people we ask you to provide a government for them.

Neither should we be deterred as to the character of the government we provide by any fear of a claim of statehood hereafter on the part of the people of Hawaii. They may never ask it. It may never be considered proper to grant it. But upon that question we can not bind the future.

We can not bind a single Congress that shall succeed this one. We can not bind the next session of this Congress. If claim is ever made for statehood upon the part of Hawaii, it must be decided by the Congress then representing the American people, and we can not make one hair black nor white in reference to that decision.

But there is nothing to fear, I believe, in this matter. I believe the Hawaiian people are content to go on under the free, representative government of a United States Territory, that shall give them the protection of the flag of the country and an opportunity to develop their wonderful resources, their marvelous, their beautiful country.

The American people can be trusted. For more than fifty years the Territory of New Mexico has been an organized Territory of the United States, often seeking statehood at the hands of Congress and uniformly refused.

For more than a generation the vast Territory of Alaska, the richest of land, one of the most valuable possessions of the United States, peopled with the boldest, the truest, and most enterprising American citizens, has existed, and yet has not an organization as a Territory. There is no fear of haste upon the part of the people of the United States or of Congress in granting the right of statehood.

I think I represent the opinion of every member here in saying that if it is possible for us to grant Territorial government to these islands like that of the other Territories of the United States—governments of which we have had experience, which have been perfected in the long years that Congress has dealt with them, governments which have had their particular laws generalized under statutes, and laws made applicable to all Territories—it is desirable to do so.

We are not met at the threshold of action by the question of the extension of the Constitution to Hawaii, for the annexation resolution provided that the municipal law of Hawaii that was not in contravention of the Constitution should remain until action by Congress. And this bill, in so many words, extends the Constitution to Hawaii; so that there has not been practically a moment of time since the Hawaiian Islands were annexed to the United States that the Constitution has not been the standard by which all the laws of that country must be measured. Before the annexation resolution and before our Constitution was extended there its spirit had gone.

For sixty years the spirit of the American Constitution, the foundation of our traditions and our history, has existed in Hawaii, permeating the body politic, enlightening the legislation of the islands. Together with the Constitution has gone the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, and the great guaranty of personal freedom that we extend to Hawaii is extended by the consent of the governed.

Can we, then, extend a free representative Territorial government to the people of Hawaii? There has been no time since the Northwest Territory that there has not been several organized Territories under the jurisdiction of Congress. Twenty-eight Territories in all have been organized. It has been the standard of government which we have adopted for all Territories of the United States where there was not a State organization.

Now, the question I ask the members of the House to consider, and one that seems to me to be a fundamental one, are the people of Hawaii fitted for it; will it meet their needs; are they fitted to receive suffrage; will they appreciate the great responsibilities of government that is put upon them? A word, then, as to the people of Hawaii. We have there about 110,000 people, the majority of them Asiatic—more than half Japanese and Chinese. But under our laws, under the bill as well as in the past, these Asiatics are and were not citizens of Hawaii in the sense of being entitled to suffrage or taking part in the government; and the moment that this bill is passed, the moment Hawaii is given Territorial government of the United States, the Asiatics, Japanese, and Chinese can never be citizens of Hawaii and can never exercise suffrage.

Now, what as to the remainder of the populace of the Hawaiian Islands? There are native Hawaiians, some 40,000 in number. The Hawaiians are a slowly dying race, fading out, soon to be wiped out from among the peoples of the earth. The first census of Hawaii was taken in 1836, and from that time up to 1874, when the reciprocity treaty with the United States started business and enterprise in Hawaii, every census has shown a large and rapid decrease in the Hawaiian people. No one can tell exactly the reason for it. The chief reason, perhaps, is that they more quickly take to the vices of civilization than to the virtues. They imitate its excesses; they do not possess its restraints.

Like the American Indian, wherever they come in touch with civilization they fade and die away. The position of the Hawaiian Islands also as a place for the calling of vessels of all nations has at all times offered inviting ground for epidemics, which have swept off the people in vast numbers. Whatever the cause may be, they are a rapidly dying, fading nation. Those that remain who will take any part under this government are fairly intelligent, simple, generally orderly; they are educated either in the English or in the Hawaiian language. All the younger portion of the Hawaiians speak the English language; the older ones speak the Hawaiian language, and the newspapers are published in both the Hawaiian and English languages.

In the early days of the missionaries—in 1820—the Bible was translated into the Hawaiian language. There are about 15,000 Portuguese. Of these more than half were born in the islands of Hawaii. More than half have been educated in the public schools of Hawaii, where the English language has been taught. They are orderly, peaceful, law abiding. We in America do not debar them from citizenship, and I think it will be admitted that in the large cities where there are many Portuguese they are among the best, most industrious, orderly, and tractable people.

The chief consideration as to the wisdom of extending the Territorial government to Hawaii and as to the fitness of the people to receive it is that there is in Hawaii a controlling class, American, English, and German, not oppressive, but that has guided the people, shaped legislation, and been faithful to the best interest of Hawaii through all the vicissitudes of its later history. Among those who have favored the reactionary tendencies, who have opposed the present government, this has been called the missionary class.

The missionaries went to Hawaii first in 1820—went there to plant the seeds of a Christian civilization. They went from New England. The king at that time, recognizing their great work and what they could do in the future for Hawaii, gave them and their families in the islands valuable lands. These missionaries were followed by other missionaries and their families. They acquired other lands, and they lived there, intermarried, and were soon after joined by other pioneers, business men, those who looked to their own profit in going to Hawaii. They laid the foundation, industrial and commercial, of Hawaii upon broad grounds; they shaped its legislation in accord with the high model of American tradition. They will be in the future, as in the past, the great vital, ennobling force that shall make Hawaii the fairest and best of the islands that have become part of the nation.

For the citizenship that is created, those who will have the ballot, this bill provides for an educational qualification. We give to Hawaii the intelligent ballot by providing in Hawaii the voter must be able to read, to write, and to speak either the English or the Hawaiian language. If there is any danger in this country to-day, it is the ignorant ballot. If there is any safety for the people of Hawaii in the future, it is the intelligent ballot. Thus we propose to create and to give to these people a government of a free, representative, United States Territory, founded on justice and equality, and depending for its preservation and advancement upon the intelligent ballot of the United States citizen. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in this bill, Senate 222, the House reports the bill, striking out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and inserting that of the House. The report that goes with the latter is not the report that was made with the House bill, and is very short. The full report, which I would be glad for all members to have and to see, was made upon the House bill when it was reported, and is numbered 305; and I have endeavored to see that there should be a sufficient number by a reprint, so that each member of the House might have one in his possession.

I do not propose to go over in detail the provisions of this bill. Members of the committee are ready and will be glad to answer all questions and give all information upon the bill that may be desired.

The first two sections simply define what is meant in the bill by the laws of Hawaii. They are the laws which have been enacted by past legislatures of Hawaii and the constitution that was adopted by the republic.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. If I understand you, we are extending the same laws as to immigration and the importation of contract labor to Hawaii that we have in the United States, and the bill provides for a restricted franchise.

Mr. KNOX. Provides an educational qualification.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the gentleman tell us as to about what per cent of population will be entitled to franchise under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. KNOX. About 80 per cent of the people are able to read and write.

Mr. RIDGELY. Of the entire population?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. Including the Japanese and Chinese?

Mr. KNOX. No.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. This conversation might as well take place in Hawaii for all we can hear.

The CHAIRMAN. Members of the House complain that they are unable to hear.

Mr. CANNON. I would suggest that the strong-lunged gentleman from Kansas go over to his side of the Chamber, and then the gentleman from Massachusetts, standing where he does now, will probably make himself heard.

Mr. RIDGELY. I availed myself of the liberty to come over to this side of the Chamber to hear the discussion, but I will get back on the other side. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I will repeat my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understand from the gentleman that the bill restricts the right of franchise to an educational qualification. My question is, What part of the entire population will be able to vote under this bill?

Mr. KNOX. About 80 per cent of all there is, except the Asiatics, who can not become citizens.

Mr. RIDGELY. What per cent are Asiatics?

Mr. KNOX. A little more than one-half—nearly 60 per cent.

Mr. RIDGELY. What part of the actual population of the island is affected by this bill?

Mr. KNOX. Less than half, perhaps 47 per cent, as to the right of citizenship and voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman what provision, if any, is made in this bill to prevent Asiatics born in the island of Hawaii from becoming voters?

Mr. KNOX. None whatever in this bill. They would stand under the existing United States laws, under which a Chinaman can not be naturalized either in a Federal court or a State court. So, too, Japanese can not be naturalized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But Chinamen born in the United States become American citizens.

Mr. KNOX. Under the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; and so it would be if they were born in Hawaii. Is there no provision in the bill that would curtail their right of suffrage there in any way except the educational qualification?

Mr. KNOX. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand. I merely asked the question because I was afraid the gentleman's answer to a previous question, put him by the gentleman from Kansas, would leave a wrong impression.

Mr. KNOX. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I do not wish to have any misunderstanding.

Mr. BARTLETT. I wish to ask whether section 102, the last section of the bill, will not be somewhat in conflict with the decision of the Supreme Court to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. KNOX. In what regard?

Mr. BARTLETT. It provides that Chinese who may be in the Hawaiian Islands when this act takes effect may within one year obtain certificates of residence under the act of May 5, 1892—the very act which the Supreme Court of the United States decided did not apply to Chinese children born in this country. If Hawaii became, in July, 1898, a part of this country, then children born there since July, 1898, of Chinese parents would be citizens of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. I should not agree that July 8——

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not say July 8; I said July, 1898.

Mr. KNOX. I should not agree that on July 8 the Constitution and laws of the United States went into operation in Hawaii, except as they went there under the annexation resolution.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman must admit that there might be a conflict of opinion on this point, and the Supreme Court of the United States might apply the principle of the decision contained on page 168 United States Reports.

Mr. KNOX. I do not see how we could provide for that in the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. It struck me that the provision of the bill was in conflict with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in that case.

Mr. KNOX. This section does not refer to children born in Hawaii since the annexation. It simply provides a means by which Chinese who are there may obtain within a year certificates of residence which would entitle them to remain there. That is all it undertakes to deal with; it applies only to Chinese who are actually there.

Now, the provisions of section 6 continue in force the municipal legislation of Hawaii—its municipal laws as they have existed in the past, provided they are not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. The Constitution and laws of Hawaii, which are in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, are repealed or abrogated.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. In reference to section 6 I would like to ask a question. That section provides—

> That the laws of Hawaii not inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of the United States or the provisions of this act shall continue in force, subject to repeal or amendment by the legislature of Hawaii or the Congress of the United States.

Now, this bill, when passed, will be a "law of the United States;" and when we have said that "the laws of Hawaii not inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of the United States shall continue in force, subject to repeal or amendment," we have said, it seems to me, as much as ought to be said.

Mr. KNOX. If there are any provisions of this bill which are inconsistent with the laws of Hawaii, then the laws of Hawaii must give way in the same manner as they would give way to our existing Constitution and laws. The language to which the gentleman refers may not be absolutely necessary, but certainly it can do no harm.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No; I do not see that any harm will be done; but it is always preferable to have the expressions in a statute as plain and concise as possible.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask another question. Does this bill permit the immigration of Asiatic people after its passage?

Mr. KNOX. The bill makes Hawaii United States territory, extending to it the laws of the United States. Immediately upon this bill becoming a law, all our laws restricting immigration and prohibiting the importation of contract laborers take effect at once in Hawaii, and that is the reason of our desire that the bill may be promptly passed. As I before stated, since July 8, the date of the annexation resolution, there have been some 26,000 Japanese contract laborers imported into Hawaii.

Mr. RIDGELY. That was my understanding of the bill, but the question and answer a while ago did not bring out that fact clearly.

Mr. KNOX. There is no question that the existing laws of the United States regulating immigration and the importation of contract labor will apply.

Now, in section 7——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman goes to that section will he allow me a remark? I notice on page 53 of the bill a provision that section 1890 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the Territory of Hawaii. That is the statute, as I understand, which prohibits any religious corporation from owning more than $50,000 worth of real estate in a Territory of the United States.

What was the idea in the minds of the committee when they prohibited the application of that statute to Hawaii? It seems to me it would be a good idea to provide against the dangers of mortmain, and there ought to be some limitation, whether $50,000 or some other sum, as to the amount of real estate that may be acquired by any such institution.

Mr. KNOX. The reason for that provision in the bill was that there are now existing in Hawaii quite a number of charities very largely endowed, which are performing a very meritorious charitable work in the islands; and if this provision were extended it would militate against these institutions, which all the people there and all the Americans who have ever been there consider to be of the highest and most meritorious and beneficial character to the people of the islands.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will excuse me, it being once admitted—and I think he himself will admit that the policy underlying the statutes of mortmain and the policy underlying all of our prohibitions against the ownership of property beyond prescribed amounts by religious corporations and charitable corporations, is a good policy—it being once admitted that that is a wise policy, then it seems to me that the fact that there are a good many charitable institutions in Hawaii which are doing a great deal of good does not militate against the wisdom of the statute.

If any of these corporations now own over $50,000 worth of real estate, it might militate against the idea of fixing that particular amount, because that particular limit might act as taking their property without due process of law, and might interfere with their vested rights; but why not fix some limit in the statute?

Mr. KNOX. There is great force, of course, in the gentleman's suggestion, but to answer frankly, I do not think that the House would probably limit it to any sum that would cover these large charitable institutions in Hawaii. For instance, they run up to very large amounts—$500,000. They hold that property now, and a greater amount probably.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that we can not interfere with those who already own it, but why not say that charitable and religious corporations shall not hereafter acquire an amount exceeding $50,000, leaving those that have their vested right the land which they now possess.

Mr. KNOX. Of course, considering the small number of people in Hawaii who constitute the thrifty class, the intelligent and controlling class there, and the great demand made on account of those who may become or are subjects of charity, and the great work these institutions do, it seems that the reason for the limitation upon the amount does not exist. There is another thing to which I call the attention of the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In that connection——

Mr. KNOX. Just a moment. There is another thing that I call the attention of the gentleman to, and that is that while in America we have a vast country, consisting of many States, Hawaii is a small community, with probably less than half the number of people in the gentleman's district, and while the benefits are great in so small a community the evils can be but small.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, they may be coextensive with the territory and with the population. Now, is there not an actual danger that the majority of the real estate of Hawaii will go into dead hands—that is, into the hands of charitable and religious institutions?

Mr. KNOX. There would be nothing for anybody if the majority of the property of Hawaii went into the hands of such organizations.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is a very bad condition for any country to be in, no matter how small.

Mr. KNOX. Well, it is very small, and I think the evil does not call for legislation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman please state what these charitable organizations are, how they are organized, and for what purposes?

Mr. KNOX. I have a statement here of the charitable institutions in Hawaii. Aside from religious and charitable institutions, of which there are a number, Protestant and Roman Catholic, there are several institutions of a charitable and educational nature——

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. It is absolutely impossible for us to hear a word, and many of us are interested in this presentation of facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. KNOX. I would state to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, as this is quite a long list and we have a perfect list here, would it answer or satisfy him if this should be inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. HAMILTON. I simply suggest to the gentleman that I will incorporate that statement into some remarks which I shall have occasion to make during the consideration of the bill. It covers all of these charitable institutions and the conditions surrounding each of them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that the opening paragraph of that statement is in language like this:

Aside from the religious and charitable organizations there are certain others.

Mr. KNOX. Aside from the religious and charitable institutions in Hawaii there are some——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is just what I want to know. What are the religious and charitable institutions? You say there are certain other institutions aside from those. How much property on the islands do the charitable and religious institutions own?

Mr. KNOX. I am unable to answer that. I have received no figures.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not that the vital question that is raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]?

Mr. KNOX. I can say to the gentleman that education in Hawaii is not connected with any church or any denomination, but is absolutely unsectarian. Under the laws of Hawaii the schools are entirely separated from sectarian control.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any limitation in the bill on the amount of property that a religious charitable institution or organization can own or acquire?

Mr. KNOX. There is none.

Now, in section 7 we undertake to give a list of the laws of Hawaii that are repealed, that are no longer in force on account of this provision that all laws must come up to the standard of the Constitution and laws of the United States. I think the very names of these laws will suggest a reason for their repeal. That is, by looking at the names of them you will see that they apply to an independent republic other than the United States, and would not be applicable to a country over which the laws of the United States were extended. But in the report, to which I invite attention, there is a statement of the laws which are repealed, with a brief description of them, so that any gentleman may find out for himself on examination the laws that have been repealed by this bill.

The offices which are abolished by this bill are no longer applicable to the United States territory. They are the president of the Republic, the minister of foreign affairs, of the interior, of finance, etc. The amendment to official titles requires no explanation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit another interruption right there?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Section 7 of this bill says that chapter 32, relating to ramie, and chapter 33, relating to taro flour, are repealed. Why are they repealed? What is the nature of them?

Mr. KNOX. They have no relevancy to anything existing now under United States laws. The report explains every one of these. By another section we simply undertake to keep all obligations, contracts, and rights of action which now exist, to secure and preserve vested rights, to provide for the continuance of litigation that has been begun in the courts of Hawaii, that it may go on to final judgment in courts of the United States and Hawaii, and that execution and judgment shall be properly enforced by proper officers of the United States or the Territory. The same provision applies both to civil and criminal proceedings, pending and unfinished, in the courts of Hawaii at the time that this bill shall take effect.

Chapter 2 provides for the legislative power. I would say that this whole provision in regard to a legislature for Hawaii does not differ from the general legislative provision as to Territories of the United States, nor does it differ from the provisions of our general Territorial laws as to legislatures.

The number of the house is made 30 and the number of the senate 15. I believe under the republic of Hawaii both houses were made up of 15 members. We have simply doubled the number in the popular branch, making it 30 instead of 15, and keeping the old number of 15 in the senate, preserving the names of house of representatives and senate, although our general Territorial law provides that the upper house shall be called the council and the lower the house of representatives.

The sessions of the legislature are biennial; the election is in the fall, and they meet in February. The provision is generally the provision of our law, that each House shall be the judge of the election and qualification of its members, and disqualifies all those who are employed by the government in other positions, and providing for the oath.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman as to section 18, which reads:

That no person shall be entitled to register or vote at any election in the Territory of Hawaii unless he shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

Does not the gentleman think that the verbiage of that section might be improved somewhat? There seems to be some question of whether a man every time he went to register should take a constitutional oath, and I would suggest that there be inserted "unless he shall theretofore have taken the oath."

Mr. KNOX. I suppose the gentleman would agree that the oath is a proper one, that he should support the Constitution of United States?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Oh, yes; I do not disagree with that. I am not criticising requiring a man to take the oath. This language might impart the idea that at each and every registration had and every election held each voter should take the oath, notwithstanding he may have taken it a half a dozen times before. It seems to me that if you would make it read "unless he shall have theretofore taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States" it would be much better.

Mr. KNOX. I hardly think the section is susceptible to the objection which the gentleman makes:

That no person shall be entitled to register or vote at any election in the Territory of Hawaii unless he shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

After he has once taken the oath and once registered, he is a voter.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes; but does that say that?

Mr. KNOX. Would not that be a fair construction?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes; but I want you to make it sure that it is that way.

Mr. KNOX. I think that would be the fair construction. If the gentleman thinks it doubtful, it could be changed, and there would be no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to have it made plain and direct.

Mr. KNOX. The provision for the yeas and nays, the rules, the punishment of persons not members, are so like those of the United States' provisions that I do not think it necessary to refer to them. The compensation of members of the legislature is $100 for a session that is limited to sixty days, and $200 for an extra session, limited to 30 days, and mileage at 10 cents a mile each way. I believe under our general Territorial laws the Territorial council receives compensation at $6 per day and mileage.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Referring to section 4, it is provided—

That all persons who are citizens of the republic of Hawaii on August 12, 1898, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States and citizens of the Territory of Hawaii.

Who were citizens then? Does that include any Chinese or Japanese?

Mr. KNOX. Under that provision the republic of Hawaii made citizens of the republic all persons born or naturalized in the republic of Hawaii. When the republic of Hawaii was formed, there were a few Chinese who had been granted citizenship, and the republic did substantially what this bill does; and with the exception of about 700 Chinese who had previously been naturalized in the days of the monarchy, there are no Chinese citizens, and that was the extent of the Asiatic naturalization; and of that 700 a very large number have departed.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Now, can you tell me how many come in under this act?

Mr. KNOX. None come in not already naturalized.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. How many are there of them?

Mr. KNOX There were not over 700 previous to the formation of the Hawaiian republic.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Of course, all Chinese born in Hawaii would be?

Mr. KNOX. They all are under our laws by this bill.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. About 700 would include all Chinese citizens?

Mr. KNOX. And according to the best estimate, half of these have gone from Hawaii.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman tell me why the 12th of August was fixed?

Mr. KNOX. The 7th day of July was the date of the passage of the annexation resolution. The President in his proclamation provided for the transfer of sovereignty—the actual ceremonies of the transfer of sovereignty from the Hawaiian republic to the United States, which was to take place on the arrival of the Philadelphia with Admiral Walker. That vessel arrived, and the ceremonies took place on August 12. That was the day that the Hawaiian flag was run down and the American flag went up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman is in control of the time. How could his time have expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Even if he were in control of the time, he must speak in subjection to the rules, which limits him to sixty minutes.

Mr. HITT. I thought an agreement had been made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; it was not made. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I have already stated the number of members of the senate, and that general and special elections may be had to fill vacancies which may be occasioned in either house.

Now, the provisions as to the division of senatorial districts are contained on pages 63 and 64 of the bill. I will not read these. The universal testimony was that these districts were divided as fairly and with as much consideration for the convenience of the people and the voters as it was possible under all the circumstances, and no objection came from any quarter; and I would say the same in regard to the representative districts contained on pages 65 and 66.

The qualifications of a representative are simply the attainment of the age of 25 years, citizenship of the United States, and residence in the Hawaiian Islands for a space of three years.

Mr. MORRIS. I see that those are the qualifications of a senator; where are the qualifications for a representative?

Mr. KNOX. That comes later on, and differs in no way.

The first session of the legislature will take place in 1901. It is provided that the English language shall control in the title to laws and the enacting clause. The reading of the bill is in accordance with our own provisions, and the certification of bills from one house to another and the signing of the bills by the governor are in conformity to our own rules. The governor has the usual veto provided by the Territorial law.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Have you provided in the bill that the final passage of bills in the assembly shall be by a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. KNOX. Yes, and the governor is obliged to return a bill vetoed, with the reasons for the same.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Have you made it mandatory?

Mr. KNOX. We have.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I notice on page 93, section 91, in connection with imports from Hawaii into the United States, this language:

That imports from any of the Hawaiian Islands into any State or any other Territory of the United States, of any dutiable articles not the growth, production, or manufacture of said islands, and imported into them from any foreign country after July 7, 1898, and before this act takes effect, shall pay the same duties that are imposed on the same articles when imported into the United States from any foreign country.

What was the date of our establishment of custom-houses out there?

Mr. KNOX. The customs laws of the United States have not been extended to Hawaii.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I thought we passed an act extending them some time ago.

Mr. KNOX. I think we passed it in the House at the last Congress, but it failed in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I knew we passed it in the House at some time.

Mr. KNOX. Now, the appropriations on page 69, which the legislature may make, are to be made biennially. They are made upon estimates submitted by the governor substantially in accordance with our own provisions. The provisions of section 54 are perhaps a little different in providing that the governor, in case of failure to appropriate, may extend the appropriations that have been made before.

The legislative power, page 70, is but a repetition of our own law as to the subjects upon which Territorial legislation may be had.

Mr. GILBERT. I have not studied the bill carefully, but I would like to know whether, under the provisions of this act, the Chinese and Japanese and other Asiatics are entitled to give evidence, to serve on juries, and to perform all the other functions of citizenship except to vote?

Mr. KNOX. As I understand the laws of Hawaii, the juries are drawn from citizens. Neither Japanese nor Chinese are citizens; they never have been and will not be.

Mr. HITT. They are denied naturalization by law.

Mr. GILBERT. Are they permitted to serve on juries?

Mr. KNOX. No.

Mr. GILBERT. Are they permitted to make contracts?

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. To sue and be sued; to give evidence in court?

Mr. HITT. They are aliens.

Mr. GILBERT. If you give them to that extent the right of citizenship, how are you going to deny them the equal protection of the law?

Mr. KNOX. In what way?

Mr. GILBERT. For example, the Supreme Court has held, as the gentleman knows, that the colored race have not secured a fair trial and have not secured the equal protection of the laws in these States where, by statutory enactment, they were not permitted to serve on the jury. Now, if you by this statute preclude the Asiatics from serving on the jury, has the Asiatic, when he is indicted and tried and convicted, been tried according to the law of the land?

Mr. KNOX. But the African in this country is a citizen and is entitled to vote.

Mr. GILBERT. The gentleman does not catch my point. Where the local State or Territory by legal statute precludes any particular class on account of race or color from serving on the jury or from being deprived of any of the rights of the white citizen, he has not been secured the equal protection of the law. Now, if this act deprives an Asiatic of the right to serve on a jury, can you convict him, under the Constitution of the United States, by a jury made up of another race, which other race has the exclusive right to sit on the jury?

Mr. KNOX. The colored man, or the African, is a citizen under our laws. He votes. The right that is withheld from the Japanese or the Asiatic is not taken away by this bill nor by the Hawaiian law. But under the existing laws of the United States Japanese and Chinese can not become citizens of this country. That is the effect of existing laws of the United States, which are simply extended over Hawaii by this bill. Those people are not a part of the body of citizenship under the general United States law, and they can not go on the jury list.

Mr. GILBERT. I was asking simply for information. Now, there is another question. Before the war we had a great deal of learned discussion down South as to what constituted a colored man or a negro. Now, it is conceded that the Japanese and the Chinese are not citizens of the United States. I do not know to what extent miscegenation is carried on out there, but suppose an Asiatic intermarries with an American citizen; is the offspring of such a marriage a citizen? Are half-breeds citizens under this bill?

Mr. KNOX. I have answered that before. Under an express provision of the law of 1882 we do not naturalize Chinese.

Mr. GILBERT. I am aware of that.

Mr. KNOX. That law provides that no Chinese shall be naturalized either in a Federal court or a State court. We do not naturalize Japanese, not by virtue of any express provision of law, but by a judicial decision. It is true this matter rests only upon a decision of a circuit court—a circuit court, I think, in Boston. But Japanese are held not to be free white persons under the provisions of our laws. The constitutional amendment is held to be for the benefit of persons of the African race.

Mr. GILBERT. Exclusively.

Mr. KNOX. Yes; exclusively; and a Japanese is not considered a free white person. I have a little brief in regard to the citizenship of Japanese; but I understand the whole matter rests upon the decision of a circuit court that they are not free white persons.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This bill has been sprung on us rather suddenly, and hence I desire to ask another question. I notice the suffrage provision——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I wish to ask this question: The Supreme Court has decided, has it not, that the child of a Chinaman who can not himself be naturalized is a citizen of the United States if born in the State of California?

Mr. KNOX. That is a recent decision.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, would not a child of Chinese parents born in Hawaii become a citizen?

Mr. KNOX. Undoubtedly, when our laws are extended there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If of mixed blood, would not that child be a citizen?

Mr. KNOX. It would. If children of Chinese parents, who can not themselves be naturalized, are citizens, a fortiori children of the half-blood, born in the United States, would be citizens.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the suffrage provisions on page 73 and 74 of this bill. And, by the way, I have no quarrel with them. I think they are admirable in their character—almost a transcript of the Mississippi constitution and tending strongly toward the preservation of white supremacy and civilization in Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. We are very much complimented. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I notice on page 74 a provision in these words:

> Prior to registration the person undertaking to vote must have paid a poll tax of $1 for the current year.

Now, if the poll tax could be paid upon the day of the election, or but a very short time in advance, politicians could, of course, come in and virtually buy votes by paying the poll tax for those desiring to vote; whereas if the poll tax is required to have been paid a considerable time in advance of the election—nine months in Mississippi—the class of people who sell their votes would hardly be trusted by politicians during that length of time. Hence, I should like to know about how long a time is to pass between the last day on which the poll tax can be paid and the day of the election.

Mr. KNOX. Under one provision which it was proposed to insert in this bill the voter must have paid all his taxes; and he is taxed for many things, the individual tax alone amounting to $5. In order to extend suffrage as far as possible this provision was modified so as to require the payment simply of a head tax; and according to that provision, as I recollect it, the time of registration extends close up to the time of election; but the tax must be paid before registration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that. What I desire to know is how long before the election the registration closes. This is a very important matter, in order to consummate what you desire to consummate.

Mr. KNOX. That is all in the report that is before you. I will have to turn to it in order to give you the length of time that registration must precede the election.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The object of my inquiry was to know how to vote when we came to it, because a poll-tax provision, the payment of which can entitle a man to vote if the payment be made immediately prior to an election, is no safeguard of any sort; whereas if a considerable time passes, it is a very estimable safeguard.

Mr. KNOX. The provision of the bill is simply that he shall pay his poll tax prior to registration, and in the report which you have before you, and which I will look at in a moment, the exact time when registration closes is provided. The exact time when he may register is provided there.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And he must pay the poll tax "prior to registration."

Mr. KNOX. Yes; he must pay it prior to registration. I agree with the gentleman that allowing the poll tax to be paid up to the time of voting used to be quite a common practice and might be liable to abuse.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. That was done away with in our State by abolishing the poll tax as a requisite for voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We did away with the evil by providing that all poll taxes due up to the February of the year preceding the election should have been paid on or before February 1, and in that way the politician had no temptation to buy voters by paying the poll tax.

Mr. KNOX. The provision here is that it must be paid previous to registration, and I will give you the exact time for registration in a moment.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does this bill treat all the inhabitants of Hawaii as citizens when it goes into effect?

Mr. KNOX. All except the Asiatics.

Mr. RIDGELY. The Asiatics are not admitted to citizenship in the island?

Mr. KNOX. They can not be under our United States laws. The laws of the United States are extended to Hawaii, and the Chinese and Japanese, as I have tried to explain, can not be citizens of the United States.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, one other question. Do you hold that the Constitution now applies to Hawaii?

Mr. KNOX. We extend it by this act, when it goes into effect.

Mr. RIDGELY. And you hold that it never has applied until extended by legislation?

Mr. KNOX. I do not believe, as the gentleman does, that the Constitution of itself goes to the islands after we have acquired them; but fortunately that question does not arise in reference to Hawaii, because the resolution which annexed the islands to the United States provided that all the municipal law of Hawaii that was not in contravention of the Constitution of the United States should be extended to it, so that the annexation resolution negatively extended the Constitution. This bill affirmatively extends it, and there never has been a time when there has been a hiatus, or when the Constitution of the United States was not the controlling power in Hawaii, since the annexation by special legislative enactment, which nobody denies the power of Congress to make.

Mr. RIDGELY. And if I understand the gentleman, the Asiatics now in the islands can not come into this country because of their being there at the time this law goes into effect?

Mr. KNOX. That is another question which will arise under the last section. There are some gentlemen in the House who apprehend that under the provisions of the last section of the bill the Chinese may, within a year, obtain their certificates of residence in Hawaii, and that they may then come into California or Oregon and take the benefit of the wages and employment they can get there. I do not think, and the committee do not think, that can be done, but there is some doubt about it, and an amendment is to be prepared covering that, and I will say to the gentleman that we entirely agree that that should not be allowed, and provision will be made to prevent it.

Mr. RIDGELY. Another question, and I am done.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, certainly; anything you desire to ask.

Mr. RIDGELY. All who may be born on the islands of Asiatic parents will, by reason of their birth, be entitled to come into this country as citizens?

Mr. KNOX. They will be citizens. That is a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. They would be citizens if born here.

Mr. KNOX. They become citizens if born under this jurisdiction.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. They would be citizens if born in Washington.

Mr. KNOX. We can not change that.

Mr. RIDGELY. And over 60 per cent of the population of the islands are Asiatics.

Mr. KNOX. More than half.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then we have a pretty wide door open for the admission of the Asiatics as citizens of this country.

Mr. KNOX. Let me say to the gentleman that of all the Asiatics who come over, very few are females. The Chinese come to Hawaii with the intention of remaining a few years and acquiring what is to them, in their own country, a competency and then returning So do the Japanese.

Their whole purpose, and the whole dream and object of their life, is to return, and they do return. I am not giving exact figures, but they are approximate. Out of 50,000 Asiatics in Hawaii there are not 5,000 females.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. Will not our Chinese-restriction laws apply to Hawaii as soon as this bill passes?

Mr. KNOX. Precisely. The laws of the United States cover that subject; and I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that the Asiatic births in Hawaii are exceedingly small in number and scarcely worth counting.

Mr. WILSON of Idaho. And if the gentleman will allow me to refer to subdivision 6, under the restriction of qualifications of voters for representatives, page 74, I notice a provision that they shall be able to speak, read and write the language of the United States or the Hawaiian language. I think that is a very admirable provision, which ought to be a statute of every State in the Union. It is an educational qualification, but I believe it is a new departure in Congressional legislation.

I do not know of Congress ever having made an educational qualification before. I think that will ultimately restrict, perhaps, the voting of native-born Chinese. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to why that provision was inserted in the bill, it being a departure in Congressional legislation.

Mr. KNOX. Well, it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that it was wise, and it was the unanimous desire of the persons from Hawaii who were here, who had had experience and had observed the people there, that the provision should be in the bill. They thought it was a safeguard and the best that could be adopted.

Mr. GILBERT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to refer to section 1977 of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same rights in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue—

And so forth—

and to the full and equal benefit of all laws—

And so forth.

Now, that section, of course, remains in force under the provisions of this act. I do not understand, and I would like to have you explain, how that statute can remain operative and at the same time by this act make a discrimination between the two races.

Mr. KNOX. We extend the laws of the United States.

Mr. GILBERT. But do you extend this statute there, too?

Mr. KNOX. Precisely. Now, where does the bill make any discrimination which you think is a distinction?

Mr. GILBERT. Why, by this statute all race distinctions are obliterated. Every man is secured the equal protection of this law. By your bill you preserve race distinctions and discrimination.

Mr. KNOX. In what regard?

Mr. GILBERT. As to their political rights. They are in conflict if you discriminate at all. If they have existed, they are in conflict with this statute which I have just read.

Mr. KNOX. By this very bill we extend the provisions of section 1977 to the people of the Hawaiian Islands. It does not apply to their political rights, but civil rights. We take away none of them, and the purpose is to take away none of them.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, which I think will answer his.

Mr. GILBERT. Well?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Does the gentleman know where any Chinaman in any Territory of the United States can serve on a jury?

Mr. GILBERT. I do not know whether he can or not; but that does not meet the difficulty. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that where a statutory enactment deprives a colored citizen, or a colored person, of his right to serve on a jury, that is to that extent a restriction of his political rights, and he is thereby deprived of equal protection of the laws. I want to know if we can have Hawaiian laws with race distinctions, notwithstanding the court has said that that is a discrimination and that it would deprive them of the equal protection of the law?

Mr. KNOX. The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States will be equally operative in Hawaii as in any portion of the United States as to any constitutional right which he possesses. It does not apply to his right to vote.

Mr. GILBERT. I said in the outset that I was asking questions for information.

Mr. KNOX. I fear I can not give the gentleman all the information that he desires, but what I can I freely give.

Mr. GILBERT. This bill does not disclose who were citizens in the particular time designated in the bill. Will you please, for my benefit, tell me who were citizens?

Mr. KNOX. All persons who at the time this bill goes into effect were citizens of the republic of Hawaii and made citizens of the United States and the Territory of Hawaii.

Now, when the republic of Hawaii was formed, four years before the passage of the resolution, of course those there who were citizens under the monarchy were citizens under the republic. And these are made citizens by the bill.

Mr. GILBERT. Were there any marriages there between Asiatics and others?

Mr. KNOX. I do not know. I think that matter was not called to the attention of the committee at all. On pages 8 and 9 of the report the whole matter that the gentleman inquires about is put in figures. In the provisions of the bill, on page 74, is given the method of voting for senators. In that provision we did away with the accumulative voting which had prevailed in Hawaii.

Of course the provision as to registering in Hawaii had to be taken and entirely changed, or changed in a great degree, because there was a property qualification under the old law. The names of the officers of the republic had to be changed; and in the report the gentleman will find the registration laws that are repealed by the bill and all that are continued in force. The governor has the same power substantially as under our own Territorial laws. The secretary of the Territory corresponds to ours; the attorney-general and the treasurer are substantially the same as our own.

In regard to the public lands of Hawaii, the laws applicable to them and the reasons for the provisions are stated fully in the report. So as to the commissioner or superintendent of public works, the superintendent of public instruction of Hawaii, the surveyor, the sheriff, and also the appointment, removal, and tenure of office.

The judiciary is to consist of a supreme court and such inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish. There is also to be a Federal court, with jurisdiction entirely distinct from the Territorial. It was the unanimous opinion of all before the committee that with the increased commerce at Honolulu and the various new questions arising there would be ample business for a Federal court in the islands. The provision as to a Delegate in Congress is substantially that of the general Territorial law which has existed for many years.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell me on what page the judiciary is provided for?

Mr. KNOX. On page 86 of the bill, and the Federal court is provided for on page 90 of the bill. Hawaii is made a customs district and an internal-revenue district.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with these remarks, unless there is something more to be said or inquiries to be made by other gentlemen, I will yield to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McALEER] such time as he desires or such time as he wishes to yield.

Mr. MCALEER. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish at this time to speak on this bill, but perhaps later on I may say something on the subject. I find there are a large number of gentlemen on this side anxious to be heard, and I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman from Indiana begins, I would like to suggest that an attempt be made to make another agreement as to the time.

Mr. KNOX. I thought that would have to be done in the House. I will say that if there is no objection we will act as if the agreement was made, and when we come into the House again I will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to make the request that he made this morning. The gentleman from Colorado was under a misapprehension.

Mr. KNOX. I will do so, and in the meantime we will act as if the request had already been made and granted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the gentleman does not make the request I will do it. The gentleman from Tennessee was going to do it.

Mr. KNOX. Very well, we will follow it as if it had already been granted.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the committee can not now rise and let that agreement be made in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the committee has the power to control the time.

Mr. KNOX. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCALEER] upon that side of the House, and by myself upon this side, and that the time be equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the time be divided equally between the two sides of the Chamber, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] and the other by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCALEER].

Mr. KNOX. And that gentlemen who make remarks have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the committee has not the power to do that. But the House having made no order as to the time, it is in order for the committee, by unanimous consent, to agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCALEER. Now I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in these troublous times of acquiring and governing outlying island possessions and efforts at once to sustain the Constitution the interest of labor seems neglected.

I yield to no man a superior regard, but am willing to concede to each an equal regard, for labor as that which I have myself.

Here and now we have our opportunity, not by promises, but by performance, not by words, but acts, to show our fidelity to that great cause not only in the Hawaiian Islands but here at home.

I approach this subject of labor in those islands with feelings of sadness as well as of responsibility.

The American Federation of Labor on December 19, 1899, in convention assembled at Detroit, Mich., resolved as follows:

> We affirm our previous position on this question, namely, that there must be no slavery or serfdom by ownership or contract tolerated under the American flag, and that we will make anyone whose action shall in any way militate against this principle of human freedom responsible for such action in every legitimate manner open to us.

On the 7th day of July, 1898, a joint resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate was approved by the President. Among other things, it provided "that the said Hawaiian Islands and their dependencies be, and they are hereby, annexed as a part of the territory of the United States and are subject to the sovereign dominion thereof;" and "the municipal legislation of the Hawaiian Islands not enacted for the fulfillment of the treaties so extinguished and not inconsistent with this joint resolution, nor contrary to the Constitution of the United States nor to any existing treaty of the United States, shall remain in force until the Congress of the United States shall otherwise determine;" and further, that "the President shall appoint five commissioners, at least two of whom shall be residents of the Hawaiian Islands, who shall, as soon as reasonably practicable, recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the Hawaiian Islands as they shall deem necessary or proper."

Under this resolution the President appointed Senators CULLOM, of Illinois, and MORGAN, of Alabama, and Mr. HITT, of Illinois, of this country, and ex-President Sanford B. Dole and Judge W. F. Frear, of the Hawaiian Islands. A hundred thousand dollars was appropriated to carry out the purpose of the resolution. The resolution also provided that "there shall be no further immigration of Chinese into the Hawaiian Islands."

That commission, after an excursion to the islands, filed their report in December, 1898, and with it presented a bill with their recommendation, which is the same as the bill presented by one of the commissioners in the Senate and one of the commissioners in the House of Representatives. Never before has a commission presented a measure to either body with provisions so un-American, so hostile to the genius of our institutions, as the bill recommended by this commission.

The bill now before the House is that bill torn to pieces and dismantled by the committee, and, save on the subject of contract labor, it might be identified as American.

This Hawaiian bill nowhere and in no wise protects or encourages American labor, here or there, and this policy is in keeping with the actions of this and last Congress dating back from this hour to the hour of the admission of the Hawaiian Islands. It is time to call a halt and to make an inquiry.

You of the majority have done nothing, absolutely nothing, to prohibit the importation of contract labor into the Hawaiian Islands, because influences there and here believe they can exploit them for commercial ends—the only motive that moves them—better by contract labor, and I will prove it.

You call caucuses to pass party measures. Why not go to some extremes to protect labor and destroy this infamous contract-labor system?

On the contrary, you provide by section 10 of this bill "that all obligations, contracts, and rights of action shall continue to be effectual," and that "penal proceedings shall be carried on," etc., without destroying the slave contracts already existing. Are they so inviolate that you dare not put your finger upon them?

This means that 40,000 laborers' contracts shall be continued in force and that the penal proceedings to enforce them shall continue; that slave men and women shall be imprisoned for failure to keep a civil contract. It means that involuntary servitude shall exist in the mills and on the plantations; that involuntary imprisonment with a felon's stripes shall be the remedy for enforcing civil rights between the favored masters of Hawaii and the cringing contract-labor slaves. It means that you would crucify labor on the cross of landlordism and money in Hawaii. True, the Senate amendment, which I hope will prevail here, strikes these contracts down.

Yielding to the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, than whom none is more popular here or in his State, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]—yielding to him the highest character for probity and good intentions, ability and skill as a lawmaker, and as to his colleagues on the commission in the Senate I say the same, yet—I measure my words—these three American lawgivers, as commissioners, were seduced and buncoed by their Hawaiian conferees and by the influences on the islands.

Passing over the wining and dining of the commission over on those delightful islands by the notables and the government officers, I pass to the result of the inspiration produced, as reflected in their report. First, on page 17, they say:

> The question whether white labor can be profitably utilized in the sugar plantations is yet a problem, but the planters are preparing to give such labor a trial, and some of them believe it will prove superior to the labor of either Chinese or Japanese.
> S. M. CULLOM, Chairman.

Most remarkable language for an American commission. Again they say in this report, on page 2:

> The commission visited several of the most important islands of the Hawaiian group in company with persons representing important agricultural and commercial interests and others representing the government.

Under this influence they found, in the absence of any representatives of labor, that white labor "is yet a problem," not yet solved, but that some think that white labor will prove superior to "Chinese and Japanese labor."

Disagreeable as it is, the proof is clear to me that those in power here and interested in profit and dollars in Hawaii seek to have this Government sanction the contract-labor system, and will claim, as the proof shows they do claim now, that only by contract labor can Hawaii be worked. It is probably more profitable to work the islands thus, but it remains to be seen whether this Congress will put money above manhood, contract slave labor above free labor. If so, better for labor that those islands had never rose from the bottom of the sea, or that some volcanic convulsion had sunk them, than that they should have been a part of our territory and be a constant menace to our labor.

The bills introduced in Congress by the representatives of that commission and set out and recommended in this report are outlandish and un-American, and amount to a rape and destruction of American labor.

Those who are ready to pass a bill to exclude the best class of immigrants from this country had better scan well the policy that has invited undesirable oriental contract labor to our islands and the system of slave contracts by which they are held.

We were told in both Houses as a reason for annexation that the climate was temperate and salubrious, the soil fertile, and that by annexing Hawaii we opened up a vast field for the profitable and remunerative employment of American labor.

How changed the picture! Now the commission says, "Some think that white labor may be superior to Chinese and Japanese labor."

Analyze the contract-labor system; see the contract laborers stored in steerage like sardines in a box, huddled together, men, women, and children; see them on the plantations, the whole family working under contract, the men for from $15 to $18 a month to pay their passage and board and clothe themselves; see them huddled together in prison for failure to keep their contract, and then tell me whether American white labor can compete in a country prompted by such sentiments and under such conditions. When it does, it will be when the sun shines at midnight and the moon at midday, when nature stops to take a rest, and when men forget to be selfish.

The population of the islands in December, 1898, as affirmed by the report, was: "Hawaiians and mixed blood, 39,000; Japanese, 25,000; Chinese, 21,500; Portuguese, 15,000; Americans, 4,000; British, 2,250; Germans and other Europeans, 2,000; Polynesians and miscellaneous, 1,250; total, 110,000."

The Japanese and Orientals predominate in numbers. Hawaii had a treaty with Japan that gave the citizens of the latter free ingress, being a "favored nation clause." By the resolution of annexation we struck this down and established our own treaty relations with Japan. This was only the enforcement of a well-established principle of international law. Our treaty with Japan provides that the United States may at any time control or prohibit the immigration of Japanese laborers to the United States. The party in power has never invoked this right to protect the interest of labor.

Note the number of Chinese and Japanese we have added to our population. Since annexation, July 7, 1898, thousands of foreign contract labor have been flowing into the Hawaiian Islands, so that to-day 40,000 contract laborers, or more than one-third of the population, are on the islands because Congress did not prohibit this infamous dealing in human chattels in the resolution of annexation.

It could have been done. The Chinese were excluded by a section of the resolution; but it was not the policy of the annexationists; it was not the policy of the administration of Hawaii, nor of those in charge here, to do it, because it is thought that the islands can be more cheaply and profitably worked by foreign contract labor. Those voices which were raised for annexation proclaimed that Hawaii was near to us—she is far enough away, but near enough to infect our laboring men with the pestilence of her labor system.

Hear this proof:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER-GENERAL OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, February 9, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 8th instant, and to state in reply thereto that this Bureau has no means by which to secure statistics of Japanese immigration to Hawaii, for the reason that its jurisdiction has not as yet been extended over that Territory.

However, it is ascertained that under date of January 6, 1900, Mr. Joshua K. Brown, Chinese inspector at Honolulu, forwarded the following information to the supervising special agent, this Department:

From August 12, 1898, to December 31, 1898:
Japanese arriving under contract	4,652
Japanese arriving "free"	669
Total for fractional part of 1898	5,321
From January 1, 1899, to December 31, 1899:
Japanese arriving under contract	20,561
Japanese arriving "free"	5,377
Total for year 1899	25,938
Total from August 12, 1898, to December 31, 1899	31,259
Japanese under contract to arrive within the first three months of 1900	2,750
Total admitted and under contract to arrive	34,009
Number who have departed from the islands during the same period.	242

This is all the data in possession of this office concerning the subject referred to, and it is trusted that it will answer your purpose.

Respectfully, yours,

T. V. POWDERLY,
Commissioner-General.

Hon. JAMES M. ROBINSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

This shows the importations from Japan only. Other nations are contributing contract laborers to this Hawaiian system. It will be seen that of 34,009 Japanese arriving, only 242 have departed in the same period, thus showing that the statement made that they leave is misleading.

The Pittsburg Dispatch (Independent) of September 26, 1899, referring to the dispatch from Yokohama that the sugar interests of Hawaii had collected 10,000 Japanese contract laborers for shipment to the islands, "and that Japan was alarmed at the exodus present and future contemplated," remarked significantly "that it was a cause of more just alarm to the United States."

Is it any wonder that the labor interests and organized labor is crying out against this infamous system that is trending toward their own enslavement? Can they not well doubt a government and their security for the future when that government tolerates such a scourge?

Cardinal Gibbons, in his able paper to the Knights of Labor, said:

The time has come in the world's history when the church should seek an alliance with the masses and should abandon special efforts to conciliate the mighty in war, the powerful in trade, the great ones of the earth, because in the future the control of the destinies of the world rests with the people.

Sir, some Hawaiians are in this country, representing the people and the labor interests, which class, they say, were not represented before the Hawaiian commission.

One is Mr. Robert W. Wilcox, a native of the islands, who, as a young man, was sent for six years to a military school in Italy by King Kalakau, and the other, Mr. Edgar Caypless, a lawyer, of Honolulu, formerly of New York, and a graduate of the South Carolina University. The latter says "that over 25,000 Japanese have been imported there during the past year and a half under contract to labor for a term between three and five years."

These contract laborers were brought to Hawaii for the money that is in them. Let us be honest. This editorial of the Washington Post of Sunday, January 21, 1900, which has favored the Administration's policy of island acquisition, is candid and honest with the laboring masses. It reads:

LET US BE HONEST.

Why can not we be honest in our utterances touching the territories we have recently acquired? Really it would save time and trouble, to say nothing of life and treasure, to come out frankly with the announcement that we have annexed these possessions in cold blood and that we intend to utilize them to our profit and advantage. All this talk about benevolent assimilation; all this hypocritical pretense of anxiety for the moral, social, and intellectual exaltation of the natives; all this transparent parade of responsibility and deep-seated purpose; all this deceives nobody, avails nothing, helps us not an inch in the direction of profit, dignity, and honor. We all know down in our hearts that these islands, groups, etc., are important to us only in the ratio of their practical possibilities. We value them by the standard of their commercial usefulness, and by no other. All this gabble about civilizing and uplifting the benighted barbarians of Cuba and Luzon is mere sound and fury, signifying nothing. Foolishly or wisely, we want these newly acquired territories, not for any missionary or altruistic purposes, but for the trade, the commerce, the power, and the money there are in them. Why beat about the bush and promise and protest all sorts of things? Why not be honest? It will pay.

As a matter of fact, we are not concerned in the ethical or religious uplifting of the Filipinos. After all, the difference between a breechclout and a starched shirt front is a mere matter of climate and personal opinion. Dishonesty, untruth, crime, and general wickedness are here in our midst—present with us as part of our daily life and growing with our growth. We need not go to the West Indies or the Philippines in search of material for moral rescue. Our own slums abound with opportunities for missionary zeal. Why not tell the truth and say—what is the fact—that we want Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Luzon, together with any other islands in either ocean that may hereafter commend themselves to our appetite, because we believe they will add to our national strength, and because we hope they will some day become purchasers at our bargain counters? We might as well throw off the pious mask and indulge ourselves in a little honest candor. It will cost us nothing, and it may profit much. At any rate, we shall have the comfort and satisfaction of being honest with ourselves and the privilege of looking into the mirror without blushing.

Now, after this plain avowal from a competent and reliable source, with the evidence all one way to prove it, it is clear that the ruling money power interested there under the Dole régime desires to hold the Hawaiian Islands for a like purpose and from like motives. With 40,000 laborers imported under the eye and by the aid of the United States Hawaiian government officials since annexation, where is the protection to American labor?

The chairman of the Committee on the Territories, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX], in January, 1899, by his objection, and on another occasion by a point of order raised, denied consideration to and prevented the passage of a bill which would have destroyed this nefarious system of contract labor.

The proceedings thereon are as follows:

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, chairman of the Labor Committee, asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill to extend the labor laws of the United States to Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX (Massachusetts) said: "Mr. Speaker, I object, as that matter is provided for in a general bill relating to Hawaii;" as shown on page 932, volume 32, part 7, third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

The bill sought to be enacted then reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 26, 1885, to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners, aliens, under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Hawaiian Islands.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] a long time after, in explanation of his obstruction to this salutary legislation at that early and opportune time, by voice and vote then confessing, said his only ground of objection was that he was "opposed to piecemeal legislation," and that his own committee had a bill including other provisions. His committee was then nursing and trying to have considered the bill with the outrageous provisions to which I have referred. But time was of the essence of this action in the House, and by his opposition in the House he delayed and defeated labor, and prevented the passage through the Senate of a bill of like import which he voted for later, but which reached the Senate too late for passage, though favorably reported by committee.

The Republican party in power then in the House is responsible for his action, and he is responsible for the failure to pass a law that would have kept out contract labor from the Hawaiian Islands, for in his hands lay the power and in his party was the power, as it was charged with the duty of legislating against this crying evil.

Let me read the words that came from the chairman of the Committee on Labor [Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey] as to the anticipated and evil consequences of that objection:

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the facts as officially ascertained, which makes it undesirable to delay longer such legislation as this, are that 3,000 contract laborers are already known to have reached the Hawaiian Islands since the annexation, and that the very day following the passage of the resolution of annexation contracts for the importation of only a few less than 6,000 laborers were approved by the government, and that some 3,900 of those laborers are to be brought in during the first quarter of 1899.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] is unfair when he says that these contracts were made before the bill was introduced. The making of the contracts was the cause for the introduction of the bill. There is nobody in the United States, so far as I know, that wants the door left open for the introduction of these Japanese coolies save only the gentleman from Massachusetts, and he wants them for a special purpose, to wit, to assist the House of Representatives in passing a bill for the Committee on Territories.

Mr. KNOX. The reason of the objection to the bill that the gentleman has referred to was that there was a general bill before our committee, of which that bill, if it contained desirable legislation, should have been a part.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The bill you had then in your committee?

Mr. KNOX. Yes; the bill which was being considered in our committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. "The Lord hath delivered mine enemies into my hands." Mr. Chairman, what bill was it that was before the gentleman's committee? It was the bill containing the outrageous provisions to which I have referred.

Mr. KNOX. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It was the bill providing that the supreme court should be appointed by the governor of the Territory, and provided a life tenure. It was the bill which prescribed a property qualification of $1,000 as a condition of the right to vote. It was a bill that provided that neither house of the legislature, without the consent of the other, should adjourn for more than three days, and if either house did so adjourn, the other should proceed to legislate, and their legislation should be valid. If I am in error about this last matter, I can be corrected. I want to call attention to the fact that such was the provision of the bill recommended by the commission. That provision may not have been in the gentleman's bill. His was a bill that provided in section 10, as does the bill you now ask the House to pass, that these labor contracts should be continued in force and that penal proceedings should be continued to enforce them.

Mr. KNOX. Now, if the gentleman will allow me—I know he would not do injustice to anyone——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Surely not.

Mr. KNOX. The bill before the Committee on Territories in the last Congress was a bill reported by the commission appointed by the President, who went out to Hawaii——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. A bill containing these outrageous provisions.

Mr. KNOX. A commission, the leading member of which was the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, Senator MORGAN.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, excuse me, Mr. Chairman, this is not a partisan question.

Mr. KNOX. Pardon me one moment. The bill that is now before the House, which the gentleman has stated continues the penal provision for the punishment of violations of the labor laws, distinctly repeals that provision.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Section 10, which you recommended in your last report reporting this very bill now before us, says that that provision shall be continued.

Mr. KNOX. Not at all. The penal laws now in force for the enforcement of labor contracts are repealed by this bill. The trouble is that the gentleman has not read the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Another provision of the bill of which the gentleman has spoken, and which he now gives as the reason why he kept that labor law from being considered, was a provision providing that the supreme court of Hawaii should pass upon the election returns and qualifications of the members of the senate and house of Hawaii.

Mr. KNOX. That is not in this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; but it was in the one which you were seeking to pass, and which you urged the passage of as the reason for objecting to this labor legislation against importations.

Mr. KNOX. That was in the bill originally reported. We have stricken it out.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What is the secret? The secret is that the American commissioners were hypnotized by President Dole. Motives are difficult to ascribe, but consequences are easily felt. I know not the real motives and purposes of the gentleman from Massachusetts. But few would arrogate the insubstantial ones he assumed, that it was to secure the passage of his own pet measure. His was the bill of the commission, which provided, among other things:

SEC. 10. That all obligations, contracts, rights of action, * * * prosecutions, and judgments existing prior to the taking effect of this act shall continue to be * * * effectual as if this act had not been passed. * * * All criminal and penal proceeding * * * shall be prosecuted to final judgment. * * *

Which is the same language as section 10 of the bill now before the House, and members have it before them and can read it.

SEC. 15. That in case any election to a seat in either house is disputed and legally contested the supreme court of the Territory of Hawaii shall be the sole judge of whether or not a legal election for such seat has been held, and, if it shall find that a legal election has been held, it shall be the sole judge of who has been elected.

SEC. 62 (qualification of voters for senators). * * * In addition thereto, he shall own * * * real property in the Territory of the value of not less than $1,000, * * * or shall have actually received a money income of not less than $600 during the year next preceding. * * *

SEC. 80. The governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate of the Territory of Hawaii, appoint the chief justice and justices of the supreme court. * * * All such officers shall hold * * * except the chief justice and justices of the supreme court, who shall hold office during good behavior.

By section 43 of the bill recommended, as shown on page 29 of this report of the Hawaiian commission, it was provided that neither house should adjourn without the consent of the other for more than three days, and that if it did so the legislative acts of the other was the law, as if passed by both. This provision does not seem to have been included in the bills presented to Congress.

The Republican party refused to pass a law in the Fifty-fifth Congress excluding contract labor in the Hawaiian Islands; refused to ingraft it on their reported resolutions in this House, and defeated the amendment in the Senate. We have islands here where people for years have gone "like the galley slave, scourged to his dungeon," for not obeying the terms of a civil contract to labor for another, into which they were induced to enter by the cupidity of navigation corporations, and into which many were induced to enter by the false hopes and the false representations held out for purposes of gain by plantation and mill owners.

On July 7, 1898, the American flag was raised over the Hawaiian Islands amid the booming of cannons and the playing of bands and while the children sang "The Star Spangled Banner, long may it wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave." Near that place now men are imprisoned at Oahu for violations of labor contracts, imprisoned with felons, wear stripes like robbers and thieves, are worked on the roads and in the quarries, and over the prison that entombs them is a flag floating that bears a picture of a bloodhound trailing, and this nearly two years after annexation.

You might as well cease to ring the chimes of old liberty bell, for they do not reach your Territory—the Hawaiian Islands.

This stands for the law—the labor law—of the islands. Where is the flag which should stand for law and order, for the Constitution, for the Declaration, for the law against slavery, for the law against contract labor? These people are slaves in form and in fact; their condition is a disgrace to American manhood and American statesmanship. Hear the condition that prevailed on July 27, 1899, more than a year after our flag floated over the islands. The Seattle Times has repeatedly denounced this practice, as have other influential papers on the Pacific coast. Hear it from the San Francisco Examiner in the language of a minister:

Slavery and involuntary servitude of the most degrading type exist in the Hawaiian Islands to-day as a means for the enforcement of contracts made by laborers to work on the sugar and coffee plantations. Thirty-six Galicians, subjects of the Austrian Empire, are now confined in Oahu prison, Honolulu, because they refused to comply longer with the onerous conditions imposed on them by their owners. They were convicted of "deserting contract service," and were sentenced to indefinite imprisonment. They can gain release only by buying their way out of prison or going back to the cane fields. Their tale is told by Rabbi M. S. Levy, of this city. It is one to cause anger and astonishment among those that boast that freedom lives wherever floats the American flag.

Here is the contract:

This memorandum of agreement entered into at Bremen 30th April, 1898, by and between Oahu Sugar Company, Limited, Hawaiian Islands, and the laborer Teper Yakob, now residing at Creszanow, Galicia, witnesseth: That

Whereas the said laborer is desirous of going to the Hawaiian Islands, there to be employed as an agricultural laborer, and in consideration of free steerage passage to the Hawaiian Islands to be furnished to him and his wife and —— of his children by the employer, the following contract has been concluded between the aforesaid parties to the said agreement:

The said employer, in consideration of the stipulations hereinafter contained to be kept and performed by the said laborer, covenants and agrees as follows:

To furnish to the said laborer and his wife and —— of his children, whose names and ages are noted at the bottom of this agreement, free steerage passage, including proper food and medical attendance, from Bremerhaven to Honolulu, and also to produce proper lodgings for the said laborer and his family at Honolulu, proper transportation from Honolulu to the place where he is to be employed as an agricultural laborer.

On arrival at Honolulu the employer agrees to provide employment for the said laborer as an agricultural laborer for the full period of three years from the date such employment actually begins, and also proper employment for the wife and grown-up children of said laborer.

The employer guarantees to the said laborer wages at the rate of $18 for each month of twenty six days' labor performed, and to his wife and grown-up children, if they desire to work, wages as follows:

To wives and daughters 20 years old, for labor performed, wages at the rate of 40 cents per day; daughters from 18 to 20 years, 35 cents per day; daughters from 16 to 18 years, 30 cents per day; daughters from 14 to 16 years, 25 cents per day; sons from 16 to 18 years, 50 cents per day; sons from 14 to 16 years, 40 cents per day; sons from 12 to 14 years, 25 cents per day.

And besides, the laborer is to have, free of charge, for himself and family, unfurnished lodgings, also fuel and water for cooking, and medical attendance and medicine.

During the continuance of this contract the said laborer shall be free of all personal taxes. The employer guarantees to him and his family the full, equal, and perfect protection of the laws of the Hawaiian Islands, also free primary instructions in the public schools to his minor children.

The said laborer, in consideration of the stipulations hereinbefore mentioned to be kept and performed by the employer, covenants and agrees as follows:

To proceed to Honolulu by the vessel provided for him in accordance with this agreement.

On arrival at Honolulu to accept such employment as the employer may, under this contract, assign to him.

During the continuance of this contract, being the full period of three years from the date such employment actually begins, to fulfill all the conditions of this agreement and to diligently and faithfully perform all lawful and proper labor and to obey all lawful commands of the employer, his agents, or overseers, and to work during the night and rest during the day, if called upon to do so, and to work on all days which are not holidays and as such recognized by the Hawaiian government, except when said laborer may be employed on domestic service, in which case the usual and indispenable work shall be done on these days also.

A day's labor shall mean ten hours' actual work in the fields or twelve hours' actual work in the sugar factory, the hours not being continuous, but allowing the necessary time for taking food and rest. The hours of labor are counted from the moment regularly established for the departure to the work in the factory or the fields, and the laborer must not exceed the time reasonably necessary to arrive there. And twenty-six days' actual work as aforesaid shall constitute one month's labor.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands, in duplicate, at Bremen, the day and year first above written.

TEPER YACOB,
CARL MUNCHP.

These contracts are acknowledged, and across the acknowledgment of Jacob Teper is this record of conviction:

Oahu Sugar Co., Ltd., vs. Jacob Teper. Deserting contract service. Found guilty and ordered to return to work. Costs, $3.20.

W. L. WILCOX, District Magistrate, Oahu.

HONOLULU, Nov. 11, 1898.

I have read the contract that binds these unfortunates to slavery. They are all alike. They are the same this year as they were last year and the year before, printed in three languages.

Here is the law that has governed since annexation:

SEC. 1384. If any person, lawfully bound to service, shall willfully absent himself from such service, any district magistrate, upon complaint made, under oath, may issue a warrant to apprehend such person and bring him before the said magistrate; and if the complaint shall be maintained, the magistrate shall order such offender to be restored to his master, and he shall be compelled to serve the remainder of the time for which he originally contracted.

SEC. 1385. If any such person shall refuse to serve for the term of his contract, his master may apply to any district magistrate where he may reside, who shall be authorized, by warrant or otherwise, to send for the person so refusing, and, if such refusal be persisted in, to commit such person to prison, there to remain at hard labor until he will consent to serve according to law; and in case such person bound as aforesaid shall have returned to the service of such master in obedience to such order of such magistrate and shall again willfully absent himself from such service without the leave of his master, such district magistrate may fine such offender for the first offense not exceeding $5 and for the second offense not exceeding $10, and in default of payment thereof such offender shall be imprisoned at hard labor until such fine is paid, and for every subsequent offense thereafter the offender shall be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding three months, and at the expiration of any such imprisonment such magistrate shall order such offender to be restored to his master to serve for the remainder of such original term of service.

SEC. 1386. The magistrate's warrant or order, mentioned in section 1384, when directed to any officer or other person by name, shall authorize him to convey the offender to the place of residence of the master, although it may be in some other island of the republic.

SEC. 1387. All the costs incurred in any process against a servant shall be paid, the first instance, by the complainant, and, if the complainant shall be sustained, the master shall have judgment and execution thereof against the offending servant.

This good minister went about and raised funds to purchase the freedom of Teper, who was an Israelite.

Here is the money paid for the purchase of a slave's freedom:

HONOLULU, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, July 3, 1899.

Received of Rev. Levy the sum of $120 for release of contract of Jacob Teper, contract laborer for Oahu Sug. Co.

H. HACKFELD & CO., LIMITED.

But what became of the other 35 prisoners? They remained in prison till William H. Marshall, of the Sunday Volcano, denounced the infamous system, exposed that one Hackfeld was acting as consul for Austria-Hungary and at the same time for himself, and as agent for other sugar planters and mill owners.

This worthy representative of the favored Hawaiian system of slave labor, without conscientious compunctions, served in the dual capacity of agent for the slaves who came from that country and for the masters who bound them and sent them to prison. He was forced to resign, and his company—the Hackfeld Company, Limited—was finally forced to release these prisoners. Marshall, who rained fire upon these methods and the ones engaged in them, was thrown in prison on some charge to atone for his offense, and was only able to secure his release by giving an unnatural bond, and on appeal his case stands without hope of trial, but with prospects of dismissal.

Such is the encouragement given to this odious system by those in power officially and otherwise in Hawaii, both before annexation and after it became part of the United States, and the same encouragement has been given by the same powers that be, down to this very hour.

Three distinct powers have encouraged the importation to and use of contract labor in Hawaii since annexation:

First, the navigation corporations;

Second, the plantation and mill owners, and

Third, the United States—Hawaiian officers in stations giving them opportunity to encourage it—from Sanford B. Dole down to the most minor officer.

From the third class I do not except the judiciary. For proof of these statements I refer to the report of the commissioners which was appointed by the resolution of annexation, and to the advance sheets of consular reports found in February, 1900, Consular Report, page 223, dated January 5, 1900, containing a report of Mr. Sewall, former minister of the United States to Hawaii, and now special agent of the United States at Honolulu, and by information from Mr. Joshua K. Brown, United States Chinese inspector at Honolulu, and from the report of the United States and Hawaii bureau of immigration, J. A. King, president, and Wray Taylor, secretary, and Charles A. Peterson, inspector of immigration, and to the decisions of Judge Frear and the other judges of all the courts.

The whole official life of Sanford B. Dole has been an indorsement of contract labor. He was one of the commissioners who made this report, and the traces of his dominant handiwork is found through its pages. The commissioners met the government officers. Dole was one. They met the nobility, the men with special privileges. Did they meet the man with the hoe? Did they meet the contract laborers? No; Commissioner Dole led them not by the disturbed waters, but the government officials led them "into the green pastures beside the still waters." If it had been otherwise, if the American members of that commission saw the contract-labor system and saw the prisons where compliance was enforced, which I can not affirm or deny, they should at once have returned to their own free-labor country and passed a law to protect labor, and to stop the thousands who have been pouring in at the command of the corporation shipowners and the masters of those islands.

What more was to be expected of the Hawaiian representatives one hat commission? President Dole's whole official life under the Hawaiian laws and under the laws of the United States has been intimately associated with contract labor. The other, Judge Frear's, career likewise has been a sanction of it even in judicial station, both as Hawaiian judge and as a judge since annexation. These two are a part of an administration under United States laws since annexation that is styled by those not in the circle as "Dole's family compact."

Another member of this "Dole family compact" is Minister of Finance S. M. Damon, who, after annexation, imported 17 Italian contract laborers via Canada, and now has those 17 Italians working as contract laborers on his estate within sight of Honolulu.

Hawaiian dispatches report that early in November President Dole received a letter from Mr. Damon containing a report of his trip to Italy, whose language he speaks, in the interest of contract-labor importations, and that his contemplated visit to Portugal was in the same interest.

Mr. Damon's connection with this slave-labor system while in official life and since annexation has been open and notorious. It will be remembered that this worthy representative of the contract-labor system and of the United States and of Hawaii last November resigned by a direct cable to President McKinley from Italy. The dispatch said, further, that his resignation was a surprise to official circles in Hawaii. It should not have been. All knew he was engaged in this labor-contract system while he was an official, and if his resignation was a surprise the surprise has no doubt abated, as, on his return, he was installed in his old position as minister of finance in Hawaii, and holds it to-day.

These were the officials of Hawaii who accompanied our American commissioners to find out from the bound how they liked contract labor. It is difficult to conceive, but the proof is patent, that the Americans were hypnotized by the Hawaiians and led away from the disagreeable facts of contract labor, cruelty to labor, child and woman contract labor, and imprisonment and stripes as a penalty for violation of terms of contracts with iron masters, all of which were but slightly touched upon in their elaborate report or passed over altogether. The report of Special Agent Sewall, while frank and open in many respects, shows an aversion to disagreeable exposures. The Hawaiian members of the commission, through the American members, press upon our attention un-American slaveholding laws suited only to the system of slavery in those islands.

I am willing to grant an amnesty to the American members of this distinguished junketing commission if it will do them any good, but can not under the proof grant them an acquittal.

In the report of the Bureau of Immigration of December, 1898, signed by Wray Taylor, our United States Hawaiian officer, we find among others the following, November 3, 1898:

Applications for 5,925 Japanese laborers were approved at this meeting, on the understanding that no more applications were to come in until April, 1899, from plantations represented at or obtaining permits at this meeting.

Mr. Sewall, who makes the report on the labor conditions of Hawaii, was formerly our minister to the islands.

[Mr. Sewall's report. Labor in Hawaii. United States Consular Reports, February, 1900.]

The purpose of the following is * * * to trace an outline and fill in just enough detail to give a correct view and intelligent idea of Hawaiian labor conditions as they exist to-day. * * *

Contract labor, consisting of Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, Italian, Hungarian, Hawaiian, and others, is held under contract for three years when coming direct from foreign countries under agreement, and for the same or a shorter period when contracting after a previous sojourn in this country. * * *

When contract laborers are needed from abroad, application is made to the government for permission to import laborers of the desired nationality. * * * The order to recruit them is given to immigration companies authorized by law. * * * These companies are then responsible for the delivery of the men. * * *

In obtaining European labor the planters have the benefit of the authority, forms, and official connection of the board of immigration. * * * Expenses are met by the planters in the first instance, afterwards a sum, not to exceed $130 for each family, is paid by the government to cover recruiting expenses and passage of women and children accompanying the immigrants. In this case the immigrant contracts with the board of immigration and signs his agreement before the Hawaiian consul at the port of departure in his own country. * * * The board of immigration assigns these laborers to their several employers. * * *

The only other laborers now imported are Japanese. The companies supplying these are chartered by the Japanese Government and have their principal offices in Japan. * * *

Laborers are shipped from the recruiting offices to the immigration company, which then bears all expense and responsibility for maintenance, transportation, quarantine expense, etc., until assigned and delivered to the planter employer. In order to protect themselves against desertion, these companies exact securities in the shape of mortgage, bond, or deposit from the laborer or his friends to an amount equal to all expenses. * * *

* * * The laborers are apportioned to their several employers, signing their special contracts before an authorized Hawaiian official assisted by interpreters.

* * * His photograph is taken for identification, and he is then assigned to a particular corporation.

* * * Chinese, being single men, are housed in barracks with from 6 to 40 men in a room. Single Japanese are often provided for in the same way. * * *

These quarters furnish only a shelter and a place of rest. In barracks where many single men are collected a platform 6 to 8 feet wide and raised 2 feet above the floor runs the length of the building, and each man has about 3 feet in width of space for himself to sleep on. * * * Again, tiers of shelves 3 feet wide along the sides of the room, sometimes three or four tiers high, with some slight low partitions give about 3 by 6 feet for a man.

Contract laborers are expected to do agricultural and mill work. * * *

From the contract-labor class the carpenter, blacksmith, engineers, and sugar boilers select their assistants. * * *

* * * In a few places men have been allowed to take small pieces of land and cultivate them at their leisure. In order to do this they are compelled to work early and late, Sundays and holidays, and the mill buys the cane at a fixed rate per pound.

Between one-third and one-half of the women work in the field and about the mill at the lighter kinds of labor. * * *

The number of hours is settled in the contract, being usually ten hours in the field and twelve in the factory. * * *

* * * A rising bell or whistle wakes the men at, say, 4.30 a. m. At 5.30 they are ready to proceed to the field, and at 6 o'clock the work day commences. * * *

The mill man begins at 5.30 a. m. and is relieved by the night shift at 6 p. m. * * *

* * * The contract price is now $15 per month for oriental and $18 for European laborers. * * * Women receive $7 50 to $10 per month. Only actual time spent in labor is paid for. A man receives no pay for enforced idleness, whether caused by sickness or anything else. * * *

* * * The individual presents his identifying tag and receives the amount that is to the credit of that number.

* * * Men work in gangs, * * * supervised by an overseer, who directs their work, corrects mistakes, * * * stimulates the lazy. He leads them out in the morning. * * *

Force * * * is fast giving place to other methods. * * * Recourse to legal fines and imprisonment are the means used.

The physician employed by a sugar corporation occupies a peculiar position with reference to his patients and his employer. It must be remembered that usually in the rush to make the progress of the work match with the season the management demands every available man among his employees, and looks with suspicious and jealous eye upon anyone who claims exemption through sickness. * * * Now, it becomes the duty of the medical man to determine between the really ill and the malingerer, and naturally the malingerer often goes away dissatisfied. * * * Treatment is unsatisfactory and is carried out with very little aid from the patient. * * *

To take a general view of the real state of affairs one must consider that every labor camp is a busy hive. Work is going on, and work is paid for and is what the men come here for.

Now, what are the hardships? The main one is compulsory work under a master. Here the law compels. At home need held the whip. They expected to work when they came; but the comparison with free men makes compulsion seem a hardship. * * * Sunday is a day for rest in most cases. * * *

* * * Let some real or fancied grievance break the monotony, and the scene changes. A tin pan is beaten noisily to alarm and summon the camp. The motley crowd gathers, generally at night. The leaders harangue their followers, and the mob, most of them ignorant of the real cause, rush off to demand redress or punish the offender.

The grievance is generally an assault by the overseer upon some laborer, a fine considered unjust, a compulsion used to obtain unwilling work, or a privilege withdrawn. * * *

The question may be asked, "Why, if they are contented, do they desert?"

There are several reasons. Natural causes may render the work disagreeable and burdensome, as rain, cold, mud, and overgrowth of weeds. A severe overseer will render all discontented, and the boldest will desert. Accumulated debt is a prolific cause. * * * The prospect of getting better wages * * * entice many away from their contract master.

* * * A Japanese will live on from $4 to $6 per month, a Chinaman from $9 to $11 per month, and a European, $11 to $13. * * *

The foregoing is a brief and unadorned statement of facts as found. * * * Plantations furnish all that the law demands, but are not carried on primarily for the purpose of elevating the laborer to the standard of Western civilization and morals any more than other corporations. * * *

I gladly give currency to the recent utterance of Senator MORGAN, one of the Hawaiian commission:

We extend over those islands the laws and Constitution of the United States in full force, so that there is not a shred of a contract left standing in Hawaii if it is opposed to the laws of the United States.

* * * * * * *

*But contracts have been made since, and the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, I believe, invalidates those contracts. That amendment in its present form is an outrage upon the Constitution of the United States, for the reason that men have made contracts in Hawaii with companies in Japan for the purpose of importing labor. Those contracts can not be, or ought not to be, invalidated by any act of Congress. * * * How can we afford to say that contracts which were valid, made since the 12th day of August, 1898, shall be made invalid by the operation of positive law? * * **

We are cutting into them in such a way as would be utterly disastrous if we had any power to do it. We are merely raising questions that we have no power to enforce, for I take it that, after all, the Supreme Court of the United States, when it comes to sound this question to the bottom, will hold that the Constitution of the United States operates as a prohibition upon Congress to invalidate any contract that was valid at the time it was made. I think so.

Does the Constitution of the United States govern the Hawaiian Islands? Does it cover our whole land, or are we part free, part slave—slavery sicklied over with the pale cast of words of interpretation? If the Constitution governs in the islands, then strike these contracts down as unconstitutional. Does the Hawaiian constitution, adopted on July 3, 1894, govern. Then strike them down as contrary to it, for it provides that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist except for crime.

If neither govern, then strike them down as un-American, as against public policy, as inhuman. You need not search for causes in the codes of law, morality, humanity. Compel the courts to enforce the law, a custom that has not been followed for many years.

Will you take refuge from your duty by the provision in the American Constitution that no law shall be passed impairing the obligation of contracts? But here is a contract against the thirteenth amendment, which provides that involuntary servitude shall not exist in the United States nor in any of the Territories subject to its jurisdiction.

This confronts you if the Constitution prevails; and if it does not, then it does not protect these labor contracts, and you have the original right of governing in all things, past, present, and future, by the right of acquiring.

You struck down all treaty rights of Hawaii with other nations and substituted your own. Will you now save its slavedom? Do your duty and sweep away a plague more dreadful than the leprosy among those 1,200 people on one of our Hawaiian Islands; more dreadful than the bubonic plague that has swept so many from the face of that country.

Was this refusal to pass a law prohibiting contract labor in Hawaii in last Congress, and so far in this Congress, by the ruling party caused by a doubt whether the Constitution shall prevail over our country—over our territory? Are you doubtful whether the flag represents freedom, the Declaration, the Constitution, and free labor?

Do you hesitate, and will you write in words in the Constitution, in our statutes, in our Supreme Court decisions, that will make the words "United States" mean less than our whole country?

If you do this, labor will rise up to plague you, to haunt you, to defeat you. Will our Constitution be the constitution of those islands; of those contract laborers? I do not know; you do not know; no one knows. Such is the chaotic condition created by a departure from our traditions.

Let me describe this contract-labor system in the Hawaiian Islands. It is cheaper and more profitable to the landlords and mill owners than free labor; and as it is encouraged in every form, it unfortunately exists and shuts out American labor.

If a corporation—mill or plantation—wants men, its agent applies to the government for laborers, and the board of immigration, a government department, then makes application through a Japanese immigration company, that, under the regulations and officialdom, has a monopoly, the plantation advancing the money and the laborer signing a contract to the shipping company, which contract is transferable, and thereafter is transferred to the corporations purchasing the laborers. The usual term of the contract is three years, but thousands have been rushed in since the United States controlled the islands whose contracts run from three to five years.

On arrival they are photographed, and a brass tag completes their badge of identification, their badge of slavery, and they are taken out to the plantation—laborers, indeed.

Shades of Kossuth, Washington, and Lincoln, behold the slavery under the American Constitution, beneath the American flag!

On the plantations of from 5,000 to 10,000 acres, with from 500 to 1,200 laborers on each, are lumas, or, as commonly called there, "slave drivers." A luma is over from 40 to 100 contract laborers, and he stands over them with a long or loaded whip, docks them, when it suits his fancy, a quarter or a half day, and drives them back and forth to work. A whistle is carried to summon other lumas to subdue refractory spirits.

If any of the laborers grow refractory at the conduct of the drivers and revolt, the manager telephones some miles to the local attorney, who then swears to an affidavit (invokes the sacred law to enforce slavery) charging the laborers with disobedience, and officers are sent to seize and bind them and drag them into court, before a judge appointed and not elected, and who is a part of the anti-labor Dole combine.

These men, singly or in bunches of scores, sometimes are driven into what is called a court and fined and costed, for the first offense, $3.50 to $4.50; the second, $8.50, and the third may be imprisonment not exceeding ninety days. The date of conviction, penalty, and amount of fine and cost is written across the contract of labor by this court, not of record nor of justice, and the laborer is ordered to return to work. If he complies, the amount of fine and costs is deducted from his monthly wages; and if he refuses, he boards it out in prison at 50 cents a day at hard labor.

In these prisons on American soil, like on the boat that brought them over, they are crowded into rooms with ten or fifteen in a department, wearing stripes like criminals.

If any man can read these conditions without his heart revolting I question whether his heart is human.

Of course the people over there in that part of our country are unhappy and unfortunate; all are unfortunate—the master, the slave, the free—all, all are unfortunate, for the bubonic plague is upon them.

Those who are not suffering are fleeing in mind and in body from its ravages and deaths. What is the condition of these 40,000 contract laborers, what their plight in this misfortune in that part of our country? What chance for charity will they stand either in indulgence or in money from the exorbitant masters of the Hawaiian islands, who, paying their managers from $7,000 to $12,000 a year, are yet able to pay annual dividends of 60 per cent? What will the masters do for the contract laborers during this plague? They brought these laborers there who are peculiarly susceptible to this disease. Who knows but they brought this disease to the American islands? But the inquiry now is, what can be expected of men and corporations in this exigency who will countenance and continue such a system of slave labor? The masters will deduct the time that the slave suffers from it or flees from it and add the lost time to the end of the service.

The Government of this country will appropriate hundreds of thousands to quarantine the suspicioned, to relieve the distressed, and to bury the dead, but the masters will hold their ill-gotten gains while they add to the deaths and the fury of the disease by imprisoning in coops the slaves for violation of their civil contract.

This may be harsh treatment for the violation of a contract, but some of the prisoners told Rev. Levy last summer that prison was preferable to service under brutish and slave-driving masters and landlordism and tyranny on the plantations.

Once in a while a luma is killed, but oftener a laborer. Conflicts and personal beatings are common.

What is the price they get for submitting to this slavery? For Orientals $15 and for Europeans $18 a month and board and clothe themselves. Wives and daughters and sons are paid as follows: Wives and daughters 20 years old, 40 cents a day; 18 to 20 years old, 35 cents a day; 16 to 18 years old, 30 cents a day; 14 to 16 years old, 25 cents a day; sons, from 16 to 18 years old, 50 cents a day; 14 to 16 years old, 40 cents a day; 12 to 14 years old, 25 cents a day.

To show the power, and self-executing power, lodged in the hands of the masters, it only need be stated that before leaving their countries the immigration company exacts security in money or from friends that the laborer will continue his service, and the immigration company on desertion returns to the master a proportionate share of the guaranty.

The Dole official family compact and the officialdom, under the influence of the immigration and the slave-mill and plantation managers, enforce these nefarious practices, and the supreme court decides that all these practices are lawful, and decides that they are not in violation of the Hawaiian constitution, that declares that involuntary servitude, except for crime, of which the party shall be duly convicted, shall not exist in the islands.

What do Americans think of such a judiciary, such officials, such a slavery?

Talk to Americans about a judiciary that supports such practices! It ought to be pulled up root and branch. Get a judiciary that knows the law and will enforce it—one that is free from the controlling influence of officers appointing and officers surrounding.

But, sir, would you expect any decency in politics or fairness in a land that works men and women and children as slaves, imprisons them for debt, where involuntary servitude exists and flourishes? What is to be expected from a government of slave owners, slave drivers, slavery apologists?

Let us call upon the press to protect labor against such abuses, on the pulpit to denounce this crying evil, and may we not hope that Congress will crush it out now and forever and its members be held responsible to labor for a continuance of this infamous contract-labor system? [Loud applause.]

Mr. KNOX. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LANE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, the islands of Puerto Rico came to us by treaty. The people of those islands accepted with joy the result of the treaty. What shall we do with them? Quibble over the Constitution or treat them honestly and equitably?

I make no pretensions to possess constitutional learning or wisdom. I have studied carefully and considerately the claims and arguments of the constitutional lawyers who have advised on this question. I have no hesitancy to accept the position that our Constitution does not extend over the island of Puerto Rico except as we by law extend it. The time has come, however, when we should declare in no uncertain terms how and to what extent the Constitution shall be extended there. We should now give these islands a civil government and formally make them a part of the United States. This done, our plain duty demands that we place these islands upon an equal footing with all other portions of the territory of the United States.

Our Constitution unquestionably contemplates this, and nowhere does it prohibit it. But outside of the question of whether Congress has or has not plenary power under the Constitution, our sense of common justice, honor, and equity demands that every portion of the United States shall be on an equality with every other portion of the United States. I understand that practically all parties, Republicans only included, but including those who favor a present tariff laid on Puerto Rico, now concede that such a measure must be temporary only, concede that the permanent plan must be equality, with no tariff on goods going into Puerto Rico from the United States or on goods coming from Puerto Rico to the United States. But this is not clearly shown by the House bill. I admit it is indirectly shown by the special provisions of section 5, which declares as follows:

> This act shall be taken and held to be a provisional act in its purposes and intended to meet a pressing present need for revenue for the island of Puerto Rico, and shall not continue in force after the 1st day of March, 1902.

I feel sure and warranted in saying that a large number of those who voted in the House to establish the 15 per cent tariff were induced to do so against their own judgment and largely upon the assurance that it was only a temporary measure; that the permanent policy of the Republican party toward Puerto Rico would be equality.

If this statement is not correct, if I am mistaken in this understanding, then many members of this House have failed to express their true sentiments on this question.

If by this tariff bill it is intended to fasten upon the United States a permanent policy of a system of tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico, then it is not to be wondered at that the great mass of the people do not take to it kindly. If it is intended by this bill to fasten a permanent policy upon this country, then it is not surprising that the great newspapers all over this land daily oppose it, nor that State legislatures resolve against it. If it was intended to establish a permanent policy, it is only natural that the conscience and intelligence of the people force mass meetings all over this land against it.

In connection with this I would ask the Clerk to read a resolution adopted last week in New York, to show that this sentiment is not only throughout the middle West and the Northwest, but even down in the city of New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROOMS OF THE NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
MAIL AND EXPRESS BUILDING, 203 BROADWAY,
New York, March 23, 1900.

At a special meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation called for the purpose of considering the Puerto Rican tariff matter, and held this day, the board adopted the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation the policy of the United States toward the island of Puerto Rico should be definitely and immediately determined upon considerations and conditions which relate to that island alone, and that such policy so decided upon should not in any particular or degree be affected, influenced, or warped by other and different questions, conditions, and considerations which may be involved in the relations of the United States to the island of Cuba and to the Philippines.

Resolved, That the people of Puerto Rico, in the opinion of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, are entitled by every consideration of justice, equity, and honor to the most beneficent treatment by the Government of the United States. We believe that in assuming the existing relation toward Puerto Rico this country accepted obligations which can not honorably be evaded, and that, apart from all other considerations, due regard for pledges given demand the extension to that island of free commercial intercourse with the United States and a civil form of government.

Resolved, That it will be a dishonor to the American flag which now floats over the island of Puerto Rico if by reason of any consideration unworthy of this great nation any act of ours shall impose upon the people of that island burdens less tolerant than those from which they have been released, and they shall come thereby to regard our flag as the emblem of avarice and not of liberty and happiness.

Resolved, That while giving expression to the foregoing sentiments, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation renews its expressions of confidence in the wisdom of the Administration and of Congress, and of their desire and purpose to legislate upon the interests of the island of Puerto Rico in accord with the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the United States, which, in our judgment, favors the keeping of good faith pledged by General Miles and other representatives of this Government.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, and to the members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the president be authorized to appoint a committee of five members of this board, who shall have full power to take such action as they may deem conducive to the carrying out of the views of this board as expressed in the foregoing resolutions.

A true copy.

W. H. PARSONS, President.

Attest:

FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

Mr. LANE. If by this tariff bill, Mr. Chairman, it was intended to fasten upon this country a permanent policy, then I say it is only consistent that a lapse of more than four weeks since its passage and a constant discussion ever since has only intensified the people of this country against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This sentiment is not only one from the people who live beyond the Alleghany Mountains and upon the Mississippi River. It is not confined alone to the States of Indiana and Iowa and Illinois and Minnesota, but I see by yesterday's paper that it has broken out in the old State of Rhode Island, and I ask the Clerk to read the speech of Governor Dyer, of Rhode Island, delivered last Saturday, he being a candidate for reelection, who appreciates the sentiments of the people of his State. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

DUTY OF EVERY REPUBLICAN.

I believe it is the duty of every Republican to stand up and with no uncertain sound condemn any course of procedure by Congress which brings into question the honor of the American nation toward those few people who have come under its protection.

In the very beginning of the war with Spain, when it was uncertain what the result would be so far as added territory was concerned, the United States went to Puerto Rico, it captured Puerto Rico; it made no excuse that the island had been misgoverned by Spanish rule; it made no apologies; it said the island of Puerto Rico is the gateway to the Antilles; it is the outmost sentinel to guard the approaches of that isthmian waterway between the Atlantic and the Pacific which was bound to come.

To treat these people now as if they were aliens, as if they had no rights at all, to have gone over and taken possession of their island, to set up our own government, and then to impose duties upon them just as we would upon the people of Haiti or Santo Domingo is one of the most outrageous transactions that could be thought of.

It is most encouraging that so many of the men who mold public opinion have taken the stand they have. It is not a question of constitutional right; it is a question of simple justice. Nations have moral obligations resting upon them as well as individuals.

God forbid that any people should have to say that they preferred Spanish rule and that they trusted more in Spanish honor than they did in the honor of the United States.

The Republican party has always been loyal to the principles it has enunciated. I believe there is to-day sufficient manhood in the party to stand up and not only protest against but refuse support to any men or any measures not absolutely committed to the principles of national justice and national honor.

What a spectacle it will be to European nations that this people, having been conquered by us and brought into our fold, should be treated as strangers, and taxed without reason for bringing their products into our ports! We might just as well tax the people of Block Island for the fish and farm products they send to the mainland as to tax these people of Puerto Rico for what they bring to us.

This question is one in which every Republican should be interested. I believe that before the time comes for the meeting of the national convention in Philadelphia this question will be settled, and settled with justice and honor not only to ourselves but to the people who, by every moral right, should be a part of our nation.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, this question appeals to the sentiments of the people. It arouses their judgment, justice, equity, and right. And I now warn you that whenever the standard of justice and right of any political party materially differs from the standard of the people upon any great question, the people rise in their might and that party goes down in defeat. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Therein, I say, to a large extent is to be found the safety and the perpetuity of our form of government.

Mr. Chairman, concede, if we may, that it is not the intention by this bill to establish a permanent doctrine of tariff inequality. Concede, if we may, that this legislation is purely temporary. Is it expedient? Is it wise? Leave out of the discussion all query as to its legality, as to the constitutionality of it. Is it wise? Is it expedient?

Two reasons, Mr. Chairman, have been given which it is claimed establish both the necessity for and the wisdom of the bill. What are these claims, and what do they establish? As I understand it, the first necessity suggested for the bill is the claim that to establish a civil government on an equality without a tariff of some amount will embarrass the future in relation to the Philippines. In other words, to maintain and preserve the claim that the Constitution does not extend to the Philippines, we must put a tariff of some amount on Puerto Rico; that by enacting a tariff on Puerto Rico of 15 per cent, or any other amount, we thereby stop the Constitution from extending to the Philippines, or rather place the Republican party on record as saying that the Constitution does not extend to newly acquired possessions, such as the Philippines, except by express enactment.

Why, I would be glad to have the Constitution stop from extending to the Philippines, but it does seem to me that the passage of a plain and simple resolution from Congress directed to the Philippines would most clearly establish the position of the Republican party on this question. The people would know exactly what was said and possibly what was intended.

Let us not grind the poor Puerto Ricans with a tariff tax for two years to the tune of $1,000,000 for the purpose of studying the Constitution with relation to the Philippines. I do not know how that method impresses you, but I would say that it was a course of study entirely too long and expensive, and the Lord only knows whether the poor Puerto Ricans would be able to stand the treatment or not. I am afraid not.

But it is suggested that the tariff bill will furnish a means to raise the constitutional questions and have the Supreme Court decide them within two years. Well, that may be true, but why go to all this trouble? When did the Constitution extend to Puerto Rico, if at all? I do not believe it ever did; but if it did extend, it did not wait till the 1st day of February, 1900. It went, if it went at all, when our military forces took possession under the Paris treaty; and if it extended at all, it has been there ever since.

During all that time and now the United States has been collecting the Dingley tariff, a law under the Constitution, and it seems to me, although I do not profess to be a constitutional lawyer, no difficulty could arise to start litigation in relation to the payment or the refusal to pay the Dingley tariff. That would bring all the light on the Constitution that the proposed bill can possibly bring. And I notice by reading the RECORD of last Saturday that the senior Senator from Indiana in his remarks stated it to be a fact that there was now pending in the courts of New York City litigation against the customs collector for over $1,800,000, upon the ground that the Constitution extended to Puerto Rico and that the duties could not be lawfully collected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, will he allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There are several suits of the character suggested by the gentleman pending, but they do not and can not raise in those cases the same question that will be raised by an actual enactment of Congress affecting that Territory. This only raises the question whether or not the acquisition of Puerto Rico put an end not to the power of Congress to legislate over it, but to a law already existing, which only did have application to the ports of the United States and to goods coming from foreign territory. Therefore the real question that must affect all the island possessions must be a different one and raised in a different suit from the one that the gentleman is speaking about. That is my suggestion.

Mr. LANE. I am very thankful for the suggestion. I have heard of it before, but it seems to me that there is no question but what the proposition we want to have raised can be raised without going through the farce of laying down a tariff upon a district that belongs in and is a part of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I say, Why depart from the plain path of duty here so clearly stated by President McKinley in his message to Congress? Why depart from the plain path of duty so acceptable to the people of this country and the people of Puerto Rico? Why, let us look at the RECORD. On January 19, 1900, only a few months ago, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. PAYNE], on this side of the House, himself introduced a "plain duty" bill, No. 6883.

That bill simply and clearly extended the customs laws and the internal-revenue laws of the United States to Puerto Rico—a bill drawn upon the plan of the "plain duty"—a bill to establish equity, and that was all. If that bill had been reported to this body, in my judgment, it would have received at that time the support of every member on this side of the House, if not on the other. Why? Because at that time it was in accord with the individual judgment of the members of this side of the House, because they believed it was right.

On February 8, only seventeen days thereafter, orders seem to have issued to "right about face." From whence or from whom those orders came the lapse of time does not seem to have made certain. The truth is, however, that then and there the policy of the Republican party was shifted, and a substitute bill reported providing for 25 per cent tax. Aye, more, that bill that was introduced as a substitute did not have any language in it or any provision in it that indicated that it was a temporary measure.

But it was drawn in such a way that it would fasten on the Republican party the permanent policy of tariff on Puerto Rico and those other possessions. Why was this done? Why, because it had been discovered that on account of the ravages of storm last August the financial condition of the people of Puerto Rico was such that they would be unable to raise the necessary revenue by ordinary methods of taxation. Just discovered it! I say that if that be the real, true, and genuine reason for this proposed departure from the equality plan, which was the policy of the Administration and of the party up to that time, then it does not become a question of differences as to principles, but only as to methods and means.

All parties concede the present serious condition of the people in Puerto Rico. The Republican party is always alert to appreciate such conditions of the people. The Republicans of this body, and some few Democrats, responded to that condition, and willingly voted $2,000,000 and over to aid and assist those people who rested under this dire calamity. This action was inaugurated by a special message of the President, supported loyally by his supporters in Congress and by the great mass of the people of this country. We then made no question about the constitutionality of that proposition, but saw only a plain duty, and performed it.

And so, when necessity demands it, we will do it again. But some one says you have no right to vote money from the Treasury for such a purpose. But we have the right, we have the power, and now we have the precedent, and we have the approval of the American people. And right here let me say that I believe it to be true that the necessary votes to pass the House bill were obtained by an appeal made under the financial-aid clause in the bill; that a large number were induced, against their own judgment and belief, on the principle of free trade and tariff, to yield their own judgment because of the financial distress of the people of Puerto Rico and the provision of the bill that helped them.

It is well known on this side of the Chamber, and I believe it to be equally an established fact, that had the bill to transfer the revenues collected under the Dingley law of over $2,000,000 been known or presented first, it would have resulted in the defeat of the tariff bill and the establishment of the equality basis in the commercial transactions between Puerto Rico and the United States. I have no doubt about it.

If this be true, and I believe it is, then I am warranted in making the statement that the House bill, with all the knowledge and the facts now known, including those unknown, when voted upon does not represent the judgment and consensus of opinion of the majority of this body. I have heard many members give expressions which induced me to believe that if they had first voted to give the money collected under the Dingley tariff, over two and a half million dollars, they would not have supported the tariff bill; but having gone on record, although they concede the reason for doing so has been fully satisfied, they feel a delicacy about voting against the tariff if an opportunity offers, and it now looks very certain that it will offer within a few days, and I hope it will.

I am unable to understand this kind of philosophy. If the cause that moved me was satisfied, removed, I would at least prefer to make the correction myself, if opportunity offered, than run the chance of having my constituents correct it for me at a time that might not be convenient.

The House bill that was passed is predicated upon three necessities, according to the preamble of the bill. First, it is predicated upon the alleged necessity of raising revenue for schools; then, secondly, for roads and internal improvements; and, finally, upon the alleged necessity of the administration of their government as to funds. These are the three necessities stated in the bill.

I say, abandon now this tariff, since we voted the money to carry on their administration—two millions and a half. We all know from the statement of the Ways and Means Committee made here that that money will carry on their administration for more than eighteen months, from their own figures. Then, I say, abandon this pretext of levying a tariff tax under the alleged necessity of building schools and roads for Puerto Rico. What they demand now is not schoolhouses and roads but justice and equality. Recognize their rights by the enactment of proper legislation, and they will get their schoolhouses and roads as fast as they can use them.

The $2,500,000 already given them will furnish ample revenue for the present administration of their government. The establishment of their just rights will build more schoolhouses and roads than the paltry revenue proposed by this tax. Establish the principle of equality and Puerto Rico will work out her own salvation.

In connection with the discussion of this question, reference has been made to the extreme tariff that burdened Puerto Rico when controlled by Spanish rule. The tariff on flour was $4 for 200 pounds, and in addition a consumption tax of $2.30; making $6.30 on 200 pounds of flour. Other items were taxed in proportion.

Under Spanish régime wheat from the United States was placed at such a tariff, $3.15, that it was forced to go to Spain to be ground into flour and then shipped back. I heard this suggestion made, and it conveyed to my mind that Puerto Rico was so used to the Spanish imposition that it would not do to give her free trade all at once. It would be such a shock that it would be dangerous. Even the action of the President, Mr. Chairman, in suspending the tariff during the past months upon the important necessities of life in Puerto Rico is unheeded.

The President, in the exercise of his wisdom, appreciating the impoverished condition of Puerto Rico, suspended the customs tariff on flour, breadstuffs, codfish, and the staples of life to the masses of the people. But when they come to pass this bill, in the anxiety, it seems to save the Constitution, in the anxiety to give schools and roads to Puerto Rico, the House bill turns down this action of the President of the United States and allows the people to starve. Instead of recognizing their rights, instead of giving them their equality, we propose to tax their nakedness in order to raise revenue to teach their intelligence.

They say, or seem to say, that history shows these Puerto Rico people were taxed and taxed and taxed again, and under it all they were able to tax themselves besides to the amount of $12,000,000, for the purpose of freeing their slaves; therefore, America should tax them, too.

They point in one breath to the tyrannical robbery by tariff taxation by Spain, and in the next breath they say it is a blessing to these Puerto Ricans to be taxed by America, because the amount is so small and the system so different and the cause, schools and roads, so good.

Mr. Chairman, the American people rejoice that the United States liberated Puerto Rico from Spanish tyranny. The American people accepted with joy the treaty with Spain, whereby the sovereignty over the island of Puerto Rico was ceded to the United States. The American people accepted with satisfaction the reception of the United States troops by the people of Puerto Rico. The American people accepted as a verity the declaration of President McKinley when he stated in his message in December that—

> It is the plain duty of Congress to abolish all customs tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico, and give her products free access to our markets.

Mr. Chairman, with the President of the United States and on that declaration I still stand. In the name of the American people, I implore you to keep off this tariff tax. Put Puerto Rico on an equality. That is all; on an equality. Give her an opportunity to work out her own salvation, and, in my judgment, she will do it. Her people, her resources, her soil, her climate, her history, all speak in no uncertain strain that she can and will lift herself.

Besides all this, add the benefits of a free and natural trade with the people of the United States, the best market on earth. Then, stimulated as she will be with American capital, stimulated by American energy, stimulated by American brain, give her equality, and Puerto Rico will become the pride of America, the gem of the ocean. [Applause.]

Mr. McALEER. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, by an interesting coincidence the ceremony of the final annexation of the Hawaiian Islands took place on August 12, 1898, the very day upon which the protocol of peace with Spain was signed. The year 1898, therefore, witnessed the acquisition by the Government of the United States of a vast extent of new territory. The Hawaiian Islands, by annexation pursuant to joint resolution of Congress, and Porto Rico and the Philippines by cession, pursuant to the treaty of peace with Spain, in that year became a part of the United States. I believe they are part and parcel of the United States, though the Republican party seems to have some doubt upon that point since its attitude in this Congress on the Porto Rican tariff. These new possessions have necessarily involved our Government in much new legislation relating to their disposition, control, and management.

It was the ambition of Sancho Panza to govern one island, but in the past two years the United States has suddenly become the governor of islands without number, containing populations of such number and such character as the founders of the Republic never dreamed could or would become a part of our territory. Cervantes says, in his celebrated history of the renowned Don Quixote, that the faithful squire, Sancho Panza, exclaimed at the termination of his governorship of the island of Barataria:

> Since I became a governor and mounted upon the towers of ambition and pride a thousand miseries, a thousand toils, and four thousand disquiets have entered my soul.

I sincerely trust that the people of the United States, having acquired by annexation and cession not only the Hawaiian Islands and Porto Rico, but the numerous Islands of the Philippine Archipelago, the island of Guam, and part of the Samoan Islands, may not in the future find these possessions a source of so much disquietude as did Sancho the possession of one island.

It is, indeed, Mr. Chairman, a serious condition which confronts the American people in the possession of this new territory. How we shall govern, how control, how legislate for the people of these islands, as well as for the best interests of the American people, presents to the Congress of the United States and to the Executive grave problems demanding the most careful thought and wisest statesmanship now and in the future. If the present policy of imperialism of the present Administration is to be continued, I am convinced the solution of these problems will be of many years' duration, and perhaps they may be solved only by a material departure from the principles of our republican institutions, or may lead finally to their complete overthrow and destruction.

PERMANENT RETENTION OF PHILIPPINES A GREAT PROBLEM.

In discussing the bill before the committee "to provide a government for Hawaii," I wish to discuss also briefly some phases of the pending problems submitted for our solution by the acquiring and permanent retention of our entire island territory. The question of expansion, or imperialism, whichever term gentlemen may prefer, is one that is and has been for some time past agitating the minds of the American people. It is fraught with tremendous consequences to the Republic. It is one of the issues on which the next national campaign will be fought. It is not only a question of the greatest interest to me and every American citizen, but in my humble opinion it is the most important question presented to the citizens of this country since the first shot at Sumter in 1861.

Hitherto in the history of the United States we have acquired territory contiguous to the thirteen original States, and in this manner we have expanded our territory until now the flag of the Union bears upon its field of blue forty-five stars, representative of as many sovereign States.

Beginning with the purchase of the Louisiana territory from France, by treaty of April 30, 1803, which was followed by the cession by Spain of Florida, by treaty of February 22, 1819, and by the annexation of Texas in 1845, and the cession of part of the Mexican territory as a result of the Mexican war in 1848, and by the Gadsden and Alaska purchases, the territory of the original thirteen States stretching along the Atlantic coast has been expanded to the golden shores of California and from Canada to the Gulf during the nineteenth century, now nearing its close.

But, Mr. Chairman, these Territories were adjacent and all upon the American continent, adapted to the development of a homogeneous people and a homogeneous government.

Now, however—

Says a distinguished writer—

after more than a century of continental growth and development, upon the threshold of the twentieth century, the United States of America has taken a new and radical step forward in its great national career, having added to its dominions an island empire, a large number of tropical islands situated on the opposite side of the earth and inhabited by peoples strikingly distinct from those of the great Republic of the West. This country has lifted the anchors which hitherto held it fast to the American continent, and has drifted far over the seas into the arena of colonial international relations from which it has heretofore striven to keep clear. We are thrown suddenly into the turbid maelstrom of the eastern question, with its possible partition of the ancient Empire of China among a host of land-hungry applicants.

I quote from Morris's handbook entitled "Our Island Empire."

Is it to be wondered, Mr. Chairman, that while slavery was a great issue, and while the question of union or disunion was a vital one in 1861, while legislation relating to finance and tariff and trusts appeals to the interests of the American people, this new problem involved in the possession of our new territory is absorbing the attention of all American citizens? To me, I frankly confess, sir, it is one of supreme interest; I regard it as of the highest importance; and if I speak strongly upon the question, it is because I feel its scope and its meaning, even if I may not fully comprehend its significance in all the details.

THE WAR WITH SPAIN AND FILIPINO WAR CONTRASTED.

When, on April 21, 1898, the Congress of the United States, under its constitutional power, declared war against Spain, it entered upon that war in the holy cause of liberty and humanity. By that war a new renown was added to the name of the American soldier by the gallantry displayed at El Caney, San Juan, and Santiago and to the fame of the American sailor by the victories of Dewey at Manila and Schley at Santiago Bay. [Applause.]

The declaration embodied in the joint resolution of Congress—

That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent. * * * That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people—followed by the successes of our Army and Navy, won for our Government the respect and admiration of the whole world. Our entire course in regard to Cuba was consistent with the history of our past and with the traditions and practice of our Government. But hardly had the peace protocol been signed before the spirit of greed asserted itself and tarnished the luster of our original noble declaration and purpose.

The Hawaiian Islands we have annexed by the consent of the republic of Hawaii. In the case of these islands it was peaceable annexation, by the consent of the annexed and the governed. In the case of the Philippine Islands we have forcible annexation, without the consent of the governed.

The Republican party unjustly and contrary to the Constitution proposes to tax the people of Porto Rico, who so gladly welcomed our flag to their shores, and it is proceeding to completely subjugate and forcibly annex the people of the Philippines, who have struggled for many years with Spain for freedom and who were our allies in the late war with Spain.

No sooner had the treaty been ratified than that party proceeded to make a radical departure from all the past theory and practices of our Government. It embarked upon a policy termed by some "expansion," by others "imperialism," and it entered upon a war against freedom, against human liberty, against our former allies.

WERE THE FILIPINOS OUR ALLIES?

Some question has been raised as to whether the Filipinos were our allies. The actual facts in regard to this matter are fully stated in the very able article of the Hon. WILLIAM HENRY FLEMING in the Conservative Review of May, 1899, from which I copy as a part of my remarks, as it contains as clear and succinct a statement as any I have seen of the official dispatches of our Government before and after the capture of Manila:

Readers of the debates appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD toward the close of the last session will be put to their wits' end to harmonize the seemingly contradictory statements contained in many of the speeches pro and con on the subject of our relations to Aguinaldo and his followers. Opponents of the Administration's policy quote freely from the letters of our consuls showing the agreements made and partly acted out with Aguinaldo. Supporters of that policy cite the dispatches from our State Department refusing to make any promises, etc. The apparent contradiction is easily explained. It is only a matter of fixing the dates of the several transactions.

In the early stages of the war with Spain our consuls and Dewey freely accepted the services of the Filipinos as our allies, knowing they were fighting for independence, of which our State Department was fully cognizant, and this course of dealing continued until reenforcements reached Dewey and our Administration conceived and began to put into gradual execution the purpose of grabbing the Philippine Islands as a prize of war. After that time our State Department began to "disapprove" and hold aloof. It was then and thus that Filipinos were transformed from friends into enemies and from patriots into rebels.

One of the earliest of these cautionary dispatches was sent to Consul-General Pratt on June 16, 1898, as follows: "Avoid unauthorized negotiations with Philippine insurgents."

Another was sent to Consul Wildman on August 6, 1898: "If you wrote Aguinaldo as reported by Hongkong correspondent Daily Mail, your action is disapproved, and you are forbidden to make pledges or discuss policies."

Again, on August 15, 1898: "Take no action respecting Aguinaldo without specific directions from this Department."

But this change of policy came too late. While no one claims that we had made any precise or technical agreement with the Filipinos, yet all must admit that our general relations to them had already become fixed by our own conduct, and no word of future caution to our consuls could absolve us from obligations previously assumed toward the Filipinos. There is abundance of proof to sustain this statement. Note, for instance, the following extract from a public speech by our Consul-General Pratt at Singapore, June 8, 1898, in response to a complimentary address from the Filipino colony at that place:

"I am thankful to have been the means, though merely the accidental means, of bringing about the arrangement between General Aguinaldo and Admiral Dewey which has resulted so happily."

In a communication to the Secretary of the Navy, dated June 27, 1898, Dewey speaks for himself as follows:

"At the same time I have given him [Aguinaldo] to understand that I consider insurgents as friends, being opposed to a common enemy. He has gone to attend a meeting of insurgent leaders for the purpose of forming a civil government. Aguinaldo has acted independently of the squadron, but has kept me advised of his progress, which has been wonderful. I have allowed to pass by water recruits, arms, and ammunition, and to take such Spanish arms and ammunition from the arsenal as he needed. Have advised frequently to conduct the war humanely, which he has done invariably."

From another high authority, speaking from personal observation, we learn that for four months prior to October, 1898, "in and out of the harbor of Manila vessels passed floating the flag of the Philippine republic, saluting and being saluted by American men-of-war."

And Maj. Gen. F. V. Greene, in his testimony before the United States commissioners at Paris, said, referring to Aguinaldo and his troops:

"The United States Government has to some extent made use of them for a distinct military purpose, viz, to harass and annoy the Spanish troops, to wear them out in the trenches, to blockade Manila on the land side, and to do as much damage as possible to the Spanish Government prior to the arrival of our troops."

On July 4, 1898, just four days after the arrival of the first detachment of American troops in the Philippines, General Anderson, who was in command, addressed a letter to Aguinaldo as "commanding the Philippine forces," and, after assuring him that the United States "has entire sympathy and most friendly sentiments for the native people of the Philippine Islands," said:

"For these reasons I desire to have the most amicable relations with you and to have you and your people cooperate with us in military operations against the Spanish forces."

From August 14, 1898, when the Spanish forces at Manila surrendered, to February 4, 1899, when the actual hostilities of the American-Filipino war began, the two armies remained side by side, or, more accurately, perhaps, face to face. The important question to answer is, Why did these armies come into conflict? Why should these recent allies in arms against a defeated foe turn their guns upon each other?

They would have gladly accepted our friendly assistance in preserving order and establishing a stable government, and would have welcomed an American protectorate with whatever concessions it implied. As early as April 30, 1898, Consul-General Pratt wrote our State Department as follows:

"The General [Aguinaldo] further stated that he hoped the United States would assume protection of the Philippines for at least long enough to allow the inhabitants to establish a government of their own, in the organization of which he would desire American advice and assistance."

In the proclamation of June 23, 1898, establishing the revolutionary government, it was distinctly announced that its "object is to struggle for the independence of the Philippines until all nations, including the Spanish, shall expressly recognize it, and to prepare the country so that a true republic may be established."

There never was a day when all danger of a clash between the American and the Filipino armies could not have been averted by a simple statement from our Administration that we did not intend to subjugate them, but to aid them to independence. Astute diplomats may seek to cover it up; shrewd politicians may try to turn public attention away from it, but the plain truth remains that it was our refusal to consent to the ultimate independence of the Filipinos that was the cause of the conflict of arms that began at Manila on February 4, 1899.

By what standard of morality will our imperialists seek to justify our conduct toward the Filipinos? Certainly not by that highest of all codes of ethics which the Great Teacher enjoined upon his followers when he went up into the mount and spake as man never yet spake. If the standard enjoined by divine revelation be too high for human virtue, will they appeal to our own political sermon on the mount, the Declaration of Independence?

THE DUTY OF OUR GREAT REPUBLIC.

I am not disposed to make a martyr of Aguinaldo or to regard him as a second George Washington, but I do believe the facts as stated by Mr. Fleming in this article, from all my information upon this subject, are substantially correct. I do believe that Aguinaldo and his forces were of material assistance to Admiral Dewey and to the United States forces in the conquest of Spain in the Philippine Islands, and especially at the battle of Manila, and that these people are fighting for what they conceive to be their rights and their liberties, just as other people and other nations have struggled for independence in the past history of the world; just as the Boers in South Africa to-day are contending for the maintenance of their independence with Great Britain.

It has been said that these people of the Philippine Islands are in a state of insurrection. That is undoubtedly true since the ratification of the treaty with Spain and since they became a part of our Government, but it must also be remembered that for many years they have been in revolt against Spanish rule and tyranny and have been struggling for absolute independence; and it seems to me it is clearly the duty of this great Republic—"the home of the free"—either to give them independence or at least to declare its policy toward them.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that by the treaty with Spain we should ever have acquired this territory, but having acquired it, I believe to hold this territory in the far Orient is fraught with far greater danger to the Republic than to give its inhabitants their independence under an American protectorate after the suppression of the existing insurrection.

The truth is, I think, all honest men know and are ready to admit that the acquisition of this territory was inspired largely by a spirit of unholy greed. From the best information I have been able to obtain upon this subject, the Paris commissioners of peace were first instructed to demand only the island of Luzon, but under the pressure of the influence of those who were actuated by a spirit of gain the Administration finally determined to purchase all these islands, and, if need be, forcibly annex them without the consent of their people, adopting that policy which was at first denounced by the President himself as "criminal aggression" and "contrary to our code of morals."

THE EXPANSION OF JEFFERSON AND IMPERIALISM OF M'KINLEY CONTRASTED.

Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this subject involves a new policy upon which the two great parties of this country have made an issue and upon which these parties have taken a position of antagonism one to the other. It is said by you, gentlemen upon the Republican side, that this is not a new question; that expansion (as you choose to term it) is in fact Democratic doctrine. It has been urged that Jefferson, one of the founders of the Democratic party, was himself an expansionist. But, Mr. Chairman, as has been well suggested by a distinguished gentleman upon this floor—

No one but a blind man ought to have any difficulty in distinguishing between the expansion of Jefferson and the imperialism of McKinley. One was the natural evolutionary growth of the Republic; the other is a foreign fungus that, if not removed, will sap the life of the Republic.

[Applause.]

It is true that Mr. Jefferson favored the acquisition by purchase of the Louisiana territory and that all the territory heretofore acquired by this Government up to the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, excepting the Alaska purchase, was acquired under Democratic Administrations. But all this territory, as I have before endeavored to impress upon the committee, was contiguous and homogeneous. It was acquired by the consent of the people occupying it and for the purpose of making States of the Union. The facts are, according to the history of the Louisiana purchase, that territory was bought for the purpose of giving this Government control of the mouth of the Mississippi and of the commerce of that great river, and, in the language of Consul Napoleon, the territory was sold by France to "strengthen forever the power of the United States and to give to England a maritime rival that will sooner or later humble her pride." The acquisition of this territory gave added strength to our Government. Can it be said that the acquisition of the Philippines will do as much?

Florida was acquired from Spain because, by reason of its contiguity to our territory and its commercial relations with our people, it had been for years practically a part of our country and only nominally held under Spanish rule. The great State of Texas was annexed by the voluntary consent of her people; and the acquisition of Louisiana, Florida, Texas, and California was a natural, homogeneous expansion, with a view to admission of the new territory eventually to statehood and citizenship.

The taking of these domains in the Temperate Zone, adjacent to the original thirteen States, represented genuine American expansion, because American citizens could make homes there and develop the same sturdy civilization based upon the equality of rights that existed in the older States. But our American citizens, our white race, can not make permanent homes as far down in the Tropics as the Philippine Islands, already thickly populated by an acclimated race; nor is it intended to give the Filipinos the full and equal rights of American citizens.

That our purpose has been eventually to admit all territory heretofore ceded the United States to statehood and citizenship is clearly shown by the treaties by which the Territories of Louisiana and Florida were annexed to the United States, to which I call attention. By the treaty for the cession of Louisiana in 1803 it was provided:

ART. 3. The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the full enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

In the treaty with Mexico in 1848 it is provided:

ART. 9. The Mexicans who in the Territories aforesaid shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States according to the principles of the Constitution; and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the full enjoyment of their liberty and property, and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

These treaties show the conclusive intent of Jefferson, Polk, and the Democratic Administrations under which we added territory to admit the new territory to all the rights of citizens.

In the treaty with Spain, however, it is provided:

ART. 9. That the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

And the policy of the present Republican Administration in regard to the territory acquired from Spain differs so materially from the policy of the Democratic Administrations as outlined in the treaties to which I have referred, that "he who runs may read."

THE POLICY OF THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION.

The policy of the present Administration is clearly outlined to be not a policy of legitimate expansion, but one imperial or colonial in its nature, as evidenced by the Administration resolution in regard to the Philippine Islands known as the McEnery resolution, which passed the Senate of the United States on February 14, 1899, by the vote of the Administration party. This resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States.

The policy of the Democratic party has been to acquire all territory for the purpose of making the same States and the inhabitants thereof citizens. But the policy of the Republican party, as outlined in the McEnery resolution, is not to make States or citizens; and if not to make States or citizens, what does that policy mean except a colonial system such as exists under the English Government to-day?

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, we should embark upon any such policy. I do not believe either that we want these people as citizens of this government, or that they will be valuable to us even from a commercial standpoint held as colonies, even if I were in favor of a colonial system. An exaggerated impression has been created as to the benefit to American commerce, and the business of the country to be derived from the acquisition and retention of our island territory. Let us for a few moments, and very briefly, form some conception from history and the most authentic sources of what sort of territory we have acquired in Hawaii and the Philippines.

The people of the Hawaiian Islands, according to the authorities, in their present condition and as a whole, among all our new possessions, are perhaps best fitted for the representative government of a United States Territory. Even in these islands, however, it has been found necessary to restrict suffrage and safeguard by legislation their admission as a Territory.

The Hawaiian group numbers seven inhabited islands and a dozen rocky or sandy reefs and shoals, with a total population of a little over 109,000. In this estimate of population the Japanese laborers imported since the passage of the annexation resolution (about 20,000) are not included.

These islands are directly in the track of the ocean-going steamers between our western coast and China, and valuable to us for coaling stations, for their trade, and because of their proximity to our coast.

We can easily care for and protect them. A considerable part of the population, composed of the Asiatics—the Chinese and Japanese—and part Hawaiians (mixed Hawaiian and foreign blood) is undesirable; but the native Hawaiians are orderly, peaceable, intelligent, industrious, and have shown steady advancement under the influence of education and Christianity since the advent of the first missionaries from New England in 1820. In the language of the report of the Hawaiian Commission—

> The free school, free church, free press, and manhood suffrage have marked their progress. The government of the islands has shown the same progressive development. For sixty years it has been administered under a written constitution. The first constitution was promulgated in 1840.

The trade of the islands with the United States, considering their size and population, is valuable and extensive. According to the best statistics, the exports of the United States to the Hawaiian Islands in 1899 amounted to more than $10,000,000.

The imports from the Hawaiian Islands into the United States amounted in 1899 to more than $21,000,000; and, Mr. Chairman, whether it be true, as a general proposition, that trade follows the flag, certainly in relation to Hawaii it seems to be true, and doubtless the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands will in the future be of advantage to the United States, as it already has been, by reason of this extensive trade and the character of the majority of its people.

With the Philippine Islands, however, Mr. Chairman, it is entirely different. These islands, lying as they do about 630 miles from Hongkong, in China, and about 7,000 miles from the western coast of the United States and in the far Orient, requiring as they are now doing, and will continue to do, a large standing army and navy and involving an immense expense, as well as possible foreign complications, can not eventually prove advantageous to our people.

The total number of islands in the Philippine Archipelago is unknown. According to the best authorities they have never been counted, but their estimated number ranges all the way from 600 to 2,000. It is said by Morris in his handbook:

> The actual number does not probably exceed 1,200, if every barren rock be included.

The best estimate of the land area in these islands is about 115,000 square miles. Many of them are unimportant in size, mere rocks in the ocean. Several hundred are large enough to be inhabited. The largest two of the Philippine Islands, respectively the farthest north and the farthest south, are Luzon and Mindanao. As compared in area with the American States, the whole group of the Philippines, according to the best authorities, is of nearly the same extent as the New England States with New York and New Jersey added.

The population, like the number and area of the islands, is equally indefinite. According to the best statistics, the population of the group is variously estimated at from 7,000,000 to 12,000,000. The missionaries made an estimate in 1885 which showed 9,500,000.

The inhabitants of these islands belong to three distinct races, namely, the Malayan, the Indonesian, and the Negrito. The Negritos do not number to-day more than 25,000. It is stated in a recent compilation upon the Philippine Islands, made pursuant to a resolution of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], Senate Document No. 171, that within a comparatively short time this race of Negritos has completely disappeared from several of the islands which it formerly inhabited.

So far as at present known, the Indonesian race is found only in the large island of Mindanao, the surface of which constitutes about one-third of the total land area of the archipelago. The remainder of the archipelago is occupied by the Malayans, composing the great majority of the inhabitants of the Philippines. These Malayans have intermarried with Chinese extensively, and to a limited extent with Spaniards and other Europeans.

These people, Mr. Chairman, I insist, we do not want and we should not have as an integral part of the American people. We can not and ought not to make citizens of them, and to hold them as colonies is contrary to the genius and spirit of our Government.

THE VALUE OF THE COMMERCE AND TRADE OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The value of the Philippines to us from a commercial standpoint has moreover been greatly exaggerated. In the Senate document to which I have before referred, and according to the latest and best statistics, it appears that the entire trade of these islands, including exports and imports, amounts to not more than $30,000,000 annually.

For the year 1896 (the latest figures available) the imports from the Philippines into Great Britain, France, Germany, the United States, and other leading countries amounted to $19,702,819. The exports to the Philippines for the same year amounted to $9,174,093. So that, Mr. Chairman, if we were to control the entire trade of the Philippine Islands, unless it should materially increase, it would not pay one-third the expense of maintaining our Army and Navy in that quarter of the globe for the protection of our new possessions.

I will read here from the document to which I have referred the statement setting forth the imports and exports from these islands during the year 1896, showing that the value of this trade to us has been greatly exaggerated:

The following statistics in regard to the imports and exports of the Philippine Islands have been compiled from official publications of the various countries mentioned:

Countries.	Imports from Philippines.	Exports to Philippines.
Great Britain	$6,223,426	$2,063,598
France	1,990,297	359,796
Germany	223,720	774,928
Belgium	272,240	45,660
Spain	4,819,344	4,973,589
Japan	1,332,300	92,823
China	56,137	97,717
India	7,755	80,156
Straits Settlements	274,130	295,001
New South Wales	119,550	176,858
Victoria	180	178,370
United States	4,383,740	94,597
Total	19,702,819	9,174,093

THE VALUE OF THE CHINESE TRADE.

It is said that the Philippine Islands will form a base for our trade with the East and China and be of great value to us in opening the markets of the East. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that these same advantages might have been acquired by the treaty with Spain without the necessity of the American people assuming the burden of this large and remote territory. I insist, further, that the value of the Chinese trade has been greatly exaggerated.

In a very able speech made upon this floor some weeks ago by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] the value and extent of the Chinese trade is fully outlined by him, and he clearly shows that if we were to control the entire trade of China, including that of the Philippines, it would not more than offset the expense to which the Government will be subjected by the retention of these islands. After a careful and exhaustive analysis of the trade with China and our island possessions, he remarks:

THE BALANCE SHEET AGAINST US.

What, then, does the balance sheet show? The total import and export trade of China for a year does not exceed $250,000,000. Now, if the United States absorbed every dollar of this commerce, driving every rival from her market and every dollar of this trade was profit, how does the account stand?

For the year 1901 recommended appropriations for our Army are $128,000,000, and for our Navy $75,000,000, a total of $203,000,000, taking no account of pensions incident to the Spanish and Philippine war. Add to this sum the past cost of the war, $250,000,000, and allow for the commerce of the Philippines and Porto Rico $30,000,000, which counts every dollar of their trade as profit, and the sheet is balanced against us by $175,000,000.

But the Army is to be permanently increased, and the Navy is to be built to proportions commensurate with the responsibilities of our new obligations. If you double the existing Navy, which will make us then only a fourth-rate naval power, you double, at least, the present appropriation and double the present Army, and you at least double the present appropriation to $400,000,000.

In other words, an army and navy adequate for the requirements, with the attendant increase of pensions, civil government, and unforeseen expenses, will add to the cost of running this Government $500,000,000, or twice what it cost us in 1897, before the war with Spain, or twice as much as the aggregate of all the commerce of China, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, if every dollar of their commerce was with us to the exclusion of every other commercial power in the world, and if every dollar of that commerce went into the pockets of American citizens as profit.

INFLUENCE UPON MARKET FOR COTTON AND OTHER PRODUCTS.

It has been suggested by some inconsiderate people that we could have a profitable market for our cotton in the Philippines. It would be far wiser to send our coals to Newcastle. Living in a tropical clime, these people have little need for clothing and would consume very little cotton; but with industry on their part, or, what is more likely, on the part of Chinese and Japanese laborers, they can, in all probability, produce cotton of the best quality. They had produced long staple cotton until the Spanish Government stepped in and arrested the production. They can resume this product and develop it, beyond a doubt. With the Chinese and Japanese, if not with native Malay labor, they can manufacture this cotton, paying 5 or 10 cents per day for their operatives. How would this sort of "expansion" benefit New England or South Carolina or Georgia or other States in which the manufacture of cotton goods is a profitable industry?

It is true, as has been suggested by the distinguished junior Senator from Indiana and others who have written and spoken upon this subject, that there may be vast and indefinite deposits of coal and iron ore and even of gold. The resources of the islands in these particulars are as yet unknown. But, Mr. Chairman, are we to assume for the sake of possible undeveloped resources, for the sake of a trade which, according to the statistics, has been greatly exaggerated, the burden of caring for more than 9,000,000 of alien population remote from our shores and the numerous foreign complications to which the care of these people must subject us?

"MANIFEST DESTINY."

Are we to sacrifice the principles of the Declaration of Independence to sell a few bales of cotton or a few bushels of wheat? Trade is valuable; but, purchased by the sacrifice of the principles of the Declaration of Independence and of the Farewell Address of Washington and of the Monroe doctrine, it is not worth the price.

There is a good deal of talk about "manifest destiny" in connection with the Philippines. I am one of those who believe that the hand of God is in the affairs of the world. "By Him kings reign and princes decree justice." But I do not believe the hand of God is in this business. If it is, I fear it is to discipline and teach us the dangers to our Government from an imperial or colonial policy. Mr. Chairman, some of the same people who are loudest and most persistent in the assertion that the possession of the Philippines is a "manifest destiny" are also asserting the following as good imperialist doctrine. An Administration paper asserts:

While it may seem a cold-blooded assertion, there is little more to regret in the death of 10,000 Filipinos than in the cutting down of as many pine trees in the United States. The American Indian is going the way pointed out by evolution; the Filipino must follow.

Let us be honest with ourselves and the world in this matter and admit that we are not altogether animated by humane motives, that in many respects this question with the present Administration is not one of humanity but one of profit. In the language of two of the leading papers of the country, which I quote, it is evident that it is not all a question of benevolence. A leading newspaper says editorially:

There is a good deal of nonsensical talk about humanity requiring us to keep possession of the Philippines. It is noteworthy, however, that it comes principally from those who advocate the wholesale slaughter of the Filipinos to teach them that the United States is not to be trifled with. If we retain the Philippines, we will not do so because we are animated by humane motives, but because we believe it will pay us to keep them.

The Washington Post, published at the national capital, adds:

Why not tell the truth and say, what is the fact, that we want Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Luzon, together with any other islands in either ocean that may hereafter commend themselves to our appetite, because we believe they will add to our national strength, and because we hope they will some day become purchasers at our bargain counters? We might as well throw off the pious mask and indulge ourselves in a little honest candor. It will cost us nothing, and it may profit much. At any rate we shall have the comfort and satisfaction of being honest with ourselves and the privilege of looking into the mirror without blushing.

If we want to Christianize these people, let us accord them independence with protection and secure harbors, coaling stations, trade and commercial advantages, which they will gladly give us. Let them reimburse us the twenty millions paid Spain, and let us send the message of the cross through Christian missionaries. You can never Christianize any people under the sun by cruelty, by oppression, or by a shotgun policy. The "manifest destiny" of this great Republic, this nation blessed of God, the greatest in wealth, in contiguous area, and in population (except Great Britain, Russia, and the Chinese Empire) is to show to all the world that men are capable of self-government, that a great nation can exist without great fleets, navies, and standing armies, and that we are the friends of liberty, of humanity, of the oppressed of every race in every clime under the sun.

FOREIGN ALLIANCES—ADVICE OF THE FOUNDERS OF THE REPUBLIC.

This present policy of the Republican Administration must necessarily lead to foreign entanglements and foreign alliances—the very things against which the founders of the Republic warned us. Thomas Jefferson, one of the founders, gave utterance to these sentiments many years ago:

SEPARATED FROM FOREIGN ENTANGLEMENTS.

Separated by a wide ocean from the nations of Europe and from the political interests which entangle them, with productions and wants which render our commerce and friendship useful to them and theirs to us, it can not be the interest of any to assail us nor ours to disturb them. We should be most unwise indeed were we to cast away the singular blessings of the position in which nature has placed us, the opportunity she has endowed us with of pursuing at a distance from foreign contentions the paths of industry, peace, and happiness, of cultivating general friendship, and of bringing collisions of interest to the umpirage of reason rather than of force. How desirous, then, must it be in a government like ours to see its citizens adopt, individually, the views, the interests, and the conduct which their country should pursue, divesting themselves of those passions and partialities which tend to lessen useful friendships and to embarrass and embroil us in the calamitous scenes of Europe.

The following sentiments of the Father of his Country are also applicable, it seems to me, to the present situation:

MAXIMS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON—THEY WERE UTTERED A HUNDRED YEARS AGO, BUT THEY ARE AS APPLICABLE NOW AS THEN.

Separated as we are by a world of water from other nations, we shall, if we are wise, surely avoid being drawn into the labyrinth of their politics and involved in their destructive wars.

America may think herself happy in having the Atlantic for a barrier.

THE TRUE POLICY OF AMERICA.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is to have with them as little political connection as possible.

A SAFEGUARD OF NATURE.

Kindly separated by nature and a wide ocean from the exterminating havoc of one-quarter of the globe; too high minded to endure the degradations of others; possessing a chosen country with room enough for our descendants to the thousandth and thousandth generation; entertaining a due sense of our equal right to the use of our own faculties, to the acquisitions of our own industry, to honor and confidence from our fellow-citizens, resulting not from birth, but from our actions and our sense of them; * * * with all these blessings, what more is necessary to make us a happy and a prosperous people? Still one thing more, fellow-citizens; a wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvements, and shall take not from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government, and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities.

The following utterances apply especially at this time to the tendency toward too strong a British-American alliance:

A passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation facilitates the illusion of imaginary common interests in cases where no real common interest exists, and, infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the other into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without inducement or justification.

WE WANT AN AMERICAN CHARACTER.

I can most religiously aver that I have no wish that is incompatible with the dignity, happiness, and true interest of the people of this country. My ardent desire is, and my aim has been, to comply strictly with all our engagements, foreign and domestic; but to keep the United States free from political connections with every other country, to see them independent of all and under the influence of none. In a word, I want an American character, that the powers of Europe may be convinced we act for ourselves and not for others. This, in my judgment, is the only way to be respected abroad and happy at home, and not, by becoming the partisans of Great Britain or France (or any other country), create dissensions, disturb the public tranquillity, and destroy, perhaps forever, the cement which binds the Union.

GUARD AGAINST FOREIGN INFLUENCE.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government.

Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause them whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil, and even to second, the arts of influence on the other.

ABANDONMENT OF THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

This new policy of imperialism in spirit is furthermore an abandonment of the doctrine enunciated by President Monroe in his message to Congress during his Administration, well known as the "Monroe doctrine." The exact language of this doctrine, as enunciated in the message, is as follows:

The occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers. We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and security.

With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere; but with the governments that have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

If we involve ourselves in foreign complications and the affairs of nations upon the European and Asiatic continents, necessarily we will be driven step by step from an adherence to this doctrine, enunciated by President Monroe, which has enabled us to maintain the peace of the Western Hemisphere and added to our strength among the nations of the earth.

THE COST OF IMPERIALISM.

Mr. Chairman, the cost of this present policy of the Administration, the cost of imperialism, is growing gradually greater year by year. I desire to submit, in connection with my remarks upon this subject the very carefully prepared and full, while brief, statement of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], made a few days ago in the House, showing the cost of imperialism—showing that we have had an annual increase of our expenses under the policy of imperialism pursued by President McKinley of more than $300,000,000 per annum since the Spanish war, including the appropriations for 1901:

The appropriations for 1897 were	$469,499,010.41
For fiscal year ended June 30, 1898, they were	485,002,044.72
A total for the two years of	954,496,055.13
This was an average each year of	477,248,027.56
Now take appropriations for fiscal year 1899	893,231,615.55
Now take appropriations for fiscal year 1900	674,981,022.99
Take the estimates and appropriations for 1901	767,850,540.94
The total for the three years is	2,336,063,178.78
Or an average each year of	778,687,726.26
The average per year before the Spanish war was	477,248,027.56
Which shows an annual increase of	301,439,698.70

Or—

an increase in three years over what the appropriations would have been, but for the changes from a republic to an empire, of over $900,000,000.

Objection is made, Mr. Chairman, by those who favor the Administration policy to the use of the words "empire" and "imperialism." They cloak imperialism behind the catch phrase "expansion." I am not an anti-expansionist, but I am opposed to imperialism. And when the Republican party repudiates the doctrine, as it has done in Porto Rico, that where the flag goes the Constitution goes as well and embarks upon a colonial policy, that is imperialism pure and simple, to which I am opposed.

THE MEANING OF THE ADMINISTRATION POLICY.

To summarize, Mr. Chairman, the permanent retention of the Philippines means a total departure from the past theory and practice of our Republic for the sake of trade with these islands, China, and Asiatic countries, the advantages of which have been greatly exaggerated.

It means the subjugation and forcible annexation of our former allies.

It means not a legitimate, homogeneous expansion, but, according to the McEnery resolution, the English colonial system or a similar system.

It means that the spirit of gain and commercial greed, the lust for gold, is to override and obscure the advice and warnings of the founders of the Republic under the plea of manifest destiny.

It means foreign alliances and foreign entanglements, from which heretofore we have happily been free.

It means a practical abandonment of the spirit, if not the letter, of the Monroe doctrine, which heretofore has preserved the peace and happiness, in a large measure, of the Western Hemisphere.

If we meddle—if we interfere in the affairs of Europe and of Asia, what right have we—how can we assert that doctrine if they meddle with the affairs of the Western Continent?

The permanent retention of the Philippines means also a large standing army and a navy quadruple at least its present size, the growth of militarism, and a constantly increasing expense for maintaining our fleets and armies and our position in the Philippine Archipelago.

It means the beginning of a career of acquisition and conquest upon which other republics have entered with the same belief in their superiority and their integrity, only to find that the end was disaster and the destruction of a republican form of government.

Mr. Chairman, the President asks, Who will haul down the flag? I reply, none but the same people who alone have the right to unfold that flag over our new possessions—the free people of this great Republic.

But the people—the representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States—may and should haul it down if ever it becomes the emblem of conquest or oppression.

I trust it may never float over conquered provinces.

I trust it may never be hailed by any people in any part of our country, except in the spirit of love and reverence and loyalty, and float over them always by their free consent.

By pursuing a policy like this, by observing the admonitions of the founders of the Republic, by maintaining the integrity and spirit of our institutions, by preserving a compact territory and homogeneous people and government on this continent, free from foreign complications and possessions on the Asiatic coast, we will keep that flag, as the emblem of liberty and of a happy and free Republic, in all its pristine purity, representing the principles for which our fathers struggled and toiled in 1776, and which we should and must transmit unimpaired to our children. [Applause.]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the Committee on Territories on the result of its patriotic, earnest, and painstaking efforts in connection with the bill which it now presents for the consideration of the House "for the government of the Territory of Hawaii." I congratulate the people of the new Territory on the prospect of the early passage of this bill, which will give them the long hoped for and much needed legislation as an American Territory.

I congratulate our common country on the provisions of this bill as an earnest and a promise of the wise and patriotic manner in which Congress may be depended upon to deal with the questions of government in our new possessions, as evidenced by this legislation for our first insular territory.

Fortunately for us, some of the important questions which must necessarily be met and courageously decided with reference to other insular possessions do not present themselves in the consideration of this legislation to a degree that demand any considerable departure from our Territorial legislation in the past. This fair daughter of the Republic came into the family circle, the legitimate offspring and growth of Christian, American influences, containing an educated citizenship, most of whom have had some experience in the exercise of the elective franchise.

American missionaries three-quarters of a century ago landed on the islands at an opportune moment when, by some mysterious movement in the law of racial evolution, the natives were in the process of discarding their ancient superstitions, carried to them the merciful dispensation of the gospel to succeed the cruel, barbarous reign of the Tabu.

The native Hawaiian did not escape the effect of that seemingly inexorable law of fate which attends the first contact of barbarous peoples with civilization. The missonaries were not the only white men who visited their beautiful shores, and while they brought the best features of civilization, the whaler and the adventurer brought the worst, and, unfortunately, the better influences were not powerful enough to overcome those evil influences and contaminations which led to the constant decrease in the numbers of the splendid race which Captain Cook found upon these islands. But the better influences, while not the most powerful at all times, have been the most insistently applied, with the result that the remnant of the native Hawaiian race has made notable progress in all the arts of civilization, is almost universally possessed of a fair education, and still retains the many splendid qualities which have ever characterized them.

It is to the credit of the early missionary influences that next to the unswerving loyalty and devotion to his hereditary chieftain, which has always characterized him, the Hawaiian has continuously displayed a sincere regard for and attachment to the Government and the people of the United States, while in the breasts of those of our countrymen who made these summer isles their homes there has ever burned the ardent fires of patriotic devotion to their native land, which have been transmitted to their children born and reared there, with scarcely diminished fervor, coupled with an attachment to the isles of their nativity, whose warmth can only be appreciated by those whose good fortune it is to have been brought for a brief space of time within the magic witchery of these gems of the Pacific.

Surrounded from the time of their arrival in the islands by such American influences and sentiments, it was but natural that all other immigrants to Hawaii, the dark-skinned Portuguese from the Azores as well as those from Europe, should catch some, at least, of that spirit which constantly drew the hopes of the islanders to the great Republic and which, in my opinion, was always a stronger bond of unity between native and foreign born than ever was the government which was evolved from the old feudal system and which passed by regular and generally orderly changes through successive stages of despotic, limited, and constitutional monarchy, and finally emerged by bloodless and inevitable evolution into the republic.

To the men in the island of American birth and American parentage, and not only to them, but to many others, who, through their influences, had learned to value our institutions and look to us for defense and development, the final raising of the Stars and Stripes, never more to be lowered, on August 12, 1898, above the palace of the Kamehameha's, was the consummation of a long, earnest, and unselfish effort to be brought within the protection of the banner of the free, an earnestly longed-for "coming home."

The committee in its bill provides for manhood suffrage, with an educational qualification, which will place the ballot in the hands of a great majority of male citizens, but exclude Asiatics from that privilege. This is a change in the original bill, which contained a property qualification for the voters for Senators; and in my opinion the change is a wise one. It is wise, first, that it puts all electors on an equality; and, second, because in my opinion there is no condition existent in Hawaii warranting such a departure from our former Territorial legislation as is contained in a proviso for a property qualification of electors.

It is true that some patriotic and intelligent men, both here and in the islands, consider a small property qualification necessary for the maintenance of a safe and stable government, and I do not pretend to say that a thirty days' sojourn in the islands better qualifies me to judge on this point than those who have thorough personal knowledge of the conditions. I am, however, on general principles, opposed to a proposition to deprive those who are able to read and write and therefore inform themselves, and who have had a reasonable training by participation in or by actual contact for a considerable length of time with the institutions of self-government, of the right to exercise the elective franchise for the reason that they are not the possessors of real estate.

It is pointed out by those who desire to restrict the franchise in Hawaii that the number of Caucasians in the islands is but a fraction of the entire population, as though upon our race rested the entire responsibility of government there; and those who hold this view seem to regard the less than 10,000 native and foreign born of American, English, French, and Scandinavian parentage as the saving remnant, the leaven which must be depended upon entirely to leaven the whole lump of Hawaiian citizenship.

I should feel much discouraged about the future of the new-born Territory did I share in the views of those who imagine that its future political weal depended entirely upon this restricted contingent of her citizenship, though I am willing to admit that undoubtedly the great proportion of her leaders in all matters, for the immediate future at least, will come from these latter classes, and for the comfort of those whose faith in the future of the islands is pinned solely to its Anglo-Saxon citizenship, I wish to bear testimony to their high character and intelligence.

Almost without exception, they are people of education and refinement, of industry and force, of energy and of high ideals, and I think I can also safely say, generally, of earnest piety. The new Territory of Hawaii seems never to have been the haven of those "who left their country for their country's good." The foundation of this portion of the citizenship was the families of the first missionaries, from which has sprung and to which has been added traders, planters, professional men, and latterly a liberal sprinkling of stalwart young Americans, rich only in honest character and ambition, who have sought these shores to establish homes and build up communities.

Such is the character of the men whom we all will admit are the first line of defense, the strongest bulwark of the Territory. While all this is true, those who fail to appreciate the sterling qualities of the 18,000 representatives of the Latin race who came to these shores first as contract laborers but a few years ago from the Azores mistake greatly the character of the people upon whom they pass judgment. I know no people who in the same length of time have so much improved their conditions as have these Portuguese, and I give more credit for this to their good qualities than to any advantageous conditions which have surrounded them.

They are the best gardeners and small farmers in the islands, and their little farms are scattered over every island from Hawaii to Niihau. They are mechanics in the towns, the machinists, engineers, and teamsters on the plantations. Their little homes each with its garden spot, luxuriant with its well-tilled profusion of the products of this favored clime, are models, and their youth eagerly seek the advantages of the splendid school system there established. A people who seek education, till the soil, learn trades, and have good homes can be depended upon anywhere to maintain the institutions of free government.

But, Mr. Chairman, the new Territory which we shall create will not have to depend, for the maintenance of the institutions which by this legislation we perpetuate, rather than establish, by any means wholly upon aliens to her soil or their descendants. Her native sons of the aboriginal blood will furnish the majority and by no means the least desirable element of her electorate. These people who have been so loyal in their devotion to the government of their fathers are and will be no less loyal to the great Republic whose honored citizens they now become. It is but natural and in fact commendable in them that they clung tenaciously to the monarchy, even when it had become but a shadow of the authority of their race over the land of their birth and affections.

Let us remember that though barbarians they were not savages when the first white man's bark approached their shores. The ruins of their temples and the water courses hewed from solid rock are still eloquent reminders of their skill and industry. When the Caucasians first sighted these isles of enchantment, their kuleanas, or homesteads, in a high state of cultivation dotted the lowlands and extended high up the hillsides, made verdant by ingenious and laborious irrigation, and their cunning handicraft fashioned from the woods and fibers of the land cloths and utensils of utility and beauty; endowed by nature with splendid build and form, kindly and generous to a fault, courageous and, under proper incentive, industrious, always venturesome and seldom vicious, they possessed, even as a primitive people, many of the virtues which other races have only attained after centuries of civilization and have now comparatively few of the vices that ordinarily characterize a primitive people's contact with civilization.

Thanks to a good school system and a laudable ambition to secure an education, illiteracy is rare among them and many members of the race have distinguished themselves in business affairs, statesmanship, and in the professions. Their young men and young women will compare favorably with the young men and young women of any race in ability and aptitude to learn, and of their grace and charm of manner our race may well take lessons. In working out the future destiny of their country they will perform an important and honored part; if I mistake not, a more important part than they performed even under their native monarchy.

The committee very wisely, in my opinion, amended the original bill by providing for the appointment of the judges of the supreme court by the President of the United States instead of by the governor of the Territory, as provided in the original bill; and I am of the opinion that the committee would have done well to have also provided for the appointment of the judges of the circuit court by the President of the United States, providing, as in the case of the judges of the supreme court, that such judges should be citizens of Hawaii.

I know of no reason why we should depart from the established custom in other Territories in this respect; in fact, I believe there are even stronger reasons why the judiciary of this new Territory should be appointed by the President than exist in connection with the appointments of this character on the mainland. I am an ardent believer in home rule, and I think under all circumstances men appointed to these positions should be citizens of the Territory, but I fear the centralization of authority which might result in leaving those appointments in the hands of the governor.

It is with somewhat of reluctance that I call attention to one amendment made by the committee in the bill, which I understand was given careful consideration, but which I believe is neither wise nor necessary. I refer to the proviso in section 73 which provides for the reference to the Secretary of the Interior of all transactions under the public-land laws, with the power to confirm, reverse, modify, suspend, or annul.

From a somewhat careful though, I admit, hurried investigation of the Hawaiian land laws and their workings, I am of the opinion that the present land laws of the Territory are better adapted to the conditions there and to accomplish the actual settlement, cultivation, and improvement of their public domain than are the land laws of the United States to-day, under the conditions existing, to bring about the same results here. I believe these land laws have been honestly and, in the main, wisely and intelligently administered, and in my opinion a people who had the wisdom to enact wise laws and who have satisfactorily administered them should be trusted to continue the administration of those laws, unhampered by a supervisory authority 5,000 miles distant, which can not, in the very nature of things, judge accurately of the equities or give proper weight to the testimony in real-estate transactions under laws and conditions essentially dissimilar from those existing here.

This legislation marks the beginning of Territorial government for insular possessions and is not necessarily a criterion for legislation for other territory, and in view of the much discussed question of a tariff for Puerto Rico it may not be out of the way in this connection to again call attention to the fact that nearly two years ago Congress legislated for these islands over which our sovereignty unquestionably extended and provided that its people should pay on goods shipped to our ports not 15 per cent or 25 per cent but 100 per cent of our tariff rates, and that our merchandise going there should pay the full rate of the Hawaiian duty, a rate which is absolutely prohibitory on many classes of our goods, and these rates are still in force and will be until this bill becomes law.

If the question is a constitutional one, how is it it did not apply to Hawaii as well as to Puerto Rico, if one of policy, and it be claimed that the tariff rate proposed for Puerto Rico is an injustice? Can it be said we owe more to Puerto Rico than to the people of these fair isles, the only people who have voluntarily brought their territory under the flag in all our history? This legislation meets the hopes and expectations, I believe, of those for whom it is to be enacted, and in my opinion is admirably suited for them. They deserve the most generous treatment at our hands, for they became freely, voluntarily, and gladly part of us and our territory. Every American citizen should rejoice that our flag waves over these beautiful islands; that here, at the meeting place of the thronging trade and commerce of the Pacific, where the Orient first meets the Occident, shall be seen of all men an object lesson of that peace, progress, and liberty which ever abides beneath the starry banner of the free. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HITT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein, and the officers thereof, and the disposition of pending causes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. BACON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McALEER. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

[Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. KNOX. Before yielding the balance of the time, I wish to say that this side of the House has occupied very much more than their proportion of the time. Certain gentlemen on the other side who desire to speak were not able to go on account of indisposition, so on this side we have consumed considerably more than our share of the time, and I would ask that to-morrow they be prepared to go on and use up the time until we get pretty near an equality of time consumed. I will yield the time until 5 o'clock to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of this measure and during the consideration last week of the military appropriation bill there was a great deal of irrelevant discussion, what the play bills would call incidental divertissement. Now, this collateral debate has disclosed a tendency on the part of our Democratic friends that is full of alarming portent for the future of the Democratic party. It appears that they have been reading the newspapers. It also appears that they have been reading many papers. And furthermore, it appears that they have been reading Republican papers. Herein lies the peril to your party, for the reading of newspapers begets intelligence, and intelligence begets observation, and observation stimulates inquiry, and inquiry leads to truth, and truth and Republicanism are one and the same thing. [Laughter.]

Now, the general reading of newspapers, I insist, is un-Democratic. At any rate, it is entirely un-Jeffersonian, and I do not know that I ever heard any gentleman on the other side of the Chamber speak for any length of time without asserting, in one form or another, that he was following in the footsteps of Thomas Jefferson. In all history I know of no psychological phenomenon more extraordinary than the hypnotic influence that Jefferson now exercises, three-quarters of a century after his death. [Laughter.] Democrats still claim him as the founder of their party and their first great leader, while at the same time they disclaim every principle that he stood by in his lifetime. [Laughter.]

I have said that this reading of many papers is thoroughly un-Jeffersonian, and in proof of my assertion I want to call your attention to some expressions of Jefferson on this subject. He realized in his later years that the greatest danger of the Democratic party lay in the intelligence of the people. [Laughter.] I will read an extract from a letter of his to Nathaniel Macon, dated the 12th of January, 1819. In this letter he said:

> I read no newspaper now but Ritchies', and in that chiefly the advertisements, for they contain the only truths to be relied upon in a newspaper.

[Laughter.]

Now, many of the newspaper extracts that were read by my eloquent and earnest friend from Mississippi last week were in the nature of strictures upon members of the Republican party and criticisms upon their vote on what is known as the Puerto Rican bill.

Now, I submit that the reading on the part of the gentleman from Mississippi of all these newspaper editorials was un-Jeffersonian. In respect to the part of the newspaper that he read, my friend was entirely un-Jeffersonian. If he had adhered loyally to the Jeffersonian view of the value of a newspaper, he should have read the advertisements of the stockbrokers setting forth that the passage by the House of the Puerto Rican bill had depressed the price of the stocks of industrial companies; that now was the time to invest in these stocks, because the chances of the ultimate free trade with Puerto Rico and the Philippines would send all these industrial stocks booming, and great profits could be made therefrom. [Laughter.] According to Jefferson these advertisements would be true, and I am inclined to agree with him on this one point. What do you say, my Jeffersonian friends? [Great laughter.]

But Thomas Jefferson went more into details in expressing his views respecting the value of newspapers. I read from a letter of his to John Norvell, dated June 14, 1807, and before reading it I submit that if you will give consideration to it, you will agree that the author of the Declaration of Independence, the apostle of freedom and the rights of man, held views which differ very materially from the views of those on this side of the House respecting the value of a free press:

> To your request of my opinion of the manner in which a newspaper should be conducted so as to be most useful, I should answer, "By restraining it to true facts and sound principles only." Yet I fear such a paper would find few subscribers. It is a melancholy truth that a suppression of the press could not more completely deprive the nation of its benefits than is done by its abandoned prostitution to falsehood. Nothing can now be believed which is seen in a newspaper. Truth itself becomes suspicious by being put into that polluted vehicle. The real extent of this state of misinformation is known only to those who are in situations to confront facts within their knowledge with the lies of the day.
> I really look with commiseration over the great body of my fellow-citizens, who, reading newspapers, live and die in the belief that they have known something of what has been passing in the world in their time; whereas the accounts they have read in newspapers are just as true a history of any other period of the world as of the present, except that the real names of the day are affixed to their fables. General facts may indeed be collected from them, such as that Europe is now at war; that Bonaparte has been a successful warrior; that he has subjected a great portion of Europe to his will, etc.; but no details can be relied on. I will add that the man who never looks into a newspaper is better informed than he who reads them, inasmuch as he who knows nothing is nearer to truth than he whose mind is filled with falsehoods and errors. He who reads nothing will still learn the great facts, and the details are all false.
>
> Perhaps an editor might begin a reformation in some such way as this: Divide his paper into four chapters, heading the first "Truths;" second, "Probabilities;" third, "Possibilities;" fourth, "Lies." The first chapter would be very short, as it would contain little more than authentic papers, and information from such sources as the editor would be willing to risk his own reputation for their truth. The second would contain what, from a mature consideration of all circumstances, his judgment should conclude to be probably true. This, however, should rather contain too little than too much. The third and fourth should be professedly for those readers who would rather have lies for their money than the blank paper they would occupy.
>
> Such an editor, too, would have to set his face against the demoralizing practice of feeding the public mind habitually on slander and the depravity of taste which this nauseous aliment induces. Defamation is becoming a necessary of life, insomuch that a dish of tea in the morning or evening can not be digested without this stimulant. Even those who do not believe these abominations still read them with complaisance to their auditors and, instead of the abhorrence and indignation which should fill a virtuous mind, betray a secret pleasure in the possibility that some may believe them, though they do not themselves. It seems to escape them that it is not he who prints but he who pays for printing a slander who is its real author.
> These thoughts on the subjects of your letter are hazarded at your request.

Now, this next sentence deserves the special attention of members of the committee, it is so thoroughly in keeping with the character of the statesman who, on the first occasion when a great constitutional question confronted the country, wrote to his friends in the Cabinet and in Congress urging them for political reasons to treat the Constitution of the United States sub silentio:

> Repeated instances of the publication of what has not been intended for the public eye, and the malignity with which political enemies torture every sentence from me into meanings imagined by their own wickedness only, justify my expressing a solicitude that this hasty communication may in no wise be permitted to find its way into the public papers.

You see he even wanted this letter treated like the Constitution, sub silentio. [Great laughter.]

And so, Mr. Chairman, it appears to have been the view of the founder of the Democratic party that it would be better to suppress the newspapers than have them criticise him or his party. How different we are on this side of the House to-day. For some days—nay, for some weeks—our motives and our judgment have been criticised by the press of the country, by a portion of the press of our own party; but we simply look upon this criticism as wholesome and helpful. [Laughter.] We welcome it. It calls attention to what we have done [laughter], and it will gradually change to hearty commendation. Now it is invigorating and stimulating. [Laughter.] We believe that the freedom of the press is essential to the success of free government. We believe that the Republican party, that has been so condemned during the past few weeks, will emerge from these clouds of censure as a splendid landscape emerges from the fog, in clearer outline and in greater strength and beauty than it has ever appeared before.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in closing these few observations on the real Jeffersonian view of the press, I would like to ask a question of the gentlemen on the other side. Do you really believe all of these articles that you have read, or do you think, with Jefferson, that not only the Constitution, but the press, ought to be treated sub silentio? [Laughter.] Really and honestly now, my friends of the militant Democracy, so long as you feel compelled by political necessity to experiment with the leadership of Mr. Bryan, to surrender your judgment to his dictates, and to adopt the reactionary principles of the Chicago platform, do you not think that, out of respect to his memory, you ought to treat Thomas Jefferson, the founder of your great historic party, and everything that he ever said sub silentio? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, there are no more speakers, I believe, for this afternoon; and although it lacks five minutes of 5 o'clock, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Senate bill 222, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request for unanimous consent that all gentlemen speaking on this bill have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. For how many days does the gentleman propose that this privilege shall continue?

Mr. KNOX. Five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KNOX] asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken or will speak upon the bill pending in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union may have five days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It ought to be five days from the day on which the bill is voted upon.

Mr. KNOX. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Five days from the disposition of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8128. An act to establish light and fog signals at Browns Point, in Puget Sound;

H. R. 7941. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901; and

H. R. 65. An act to authorize the holding of a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia in the city of Charlottsville, Va.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 739. An act for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrance.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting additional claims arising from damages alleged to have been caused by United States troops in the war with Spain—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a statement from the chief of division of loans and currency submitting an estimate of appropriation for expenses of currency—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and binding, Interior Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting an estimate of appropriation for post-office and subtreasury building at Boston, Mass.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a communication from Mr. S. J. Barrows, United States Commissioner, International Prison Commission, submitting a report on prison systems in the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. FLEMING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 60) to create the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia for judicial purposes and to fix the time and place for holding courts therein, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 897); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BULL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 133) to authorize the President to appoint, as an additional cadet to the Naval Academy, David Bagley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 896); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. JETT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 41) to authorize the President to place Andrew Geddes on the retired list with the rank of captain, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 898); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GILBERT: A resolution (H. Res. 210) requesting the Secretary of Agriculture to report to the House of Representatives whether horse flesh is being canned, cured, or otherwise prepared for human food in this country; and if so, at what places and to what extent—to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN of Maine: A bill (H. R. 10381) granting an increase of pension to G. T. Ridlon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOWERSOCK: A bill (H. R. 10382) granting an increase of pension to James Mason, Ottawa, Kans.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINGS (by request): A bill (H. R. 10383) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant unto Charles O'Neill, an enlisted man in the United States Marine Corps, the benefit of increased pay in his enlistment of October 17, 1893—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 10384) for the relief of Alexander McElyea—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10385) for the relief of Osie Greiffenstein, a Pottawatomie Indian—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GARDNER of Michigan: A bill (H. H. 10386) granting a pension to Adoniram J. Eastman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 10387) for the benefit of Henry F. Newland, executor of A. C. Newland, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HITT: A bill (H. R. 10388) to amend the military record of G. W. Rand—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOY (by request): A bill (H. R. 10389) to amend the military record of Henry G. Craft—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEYER of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 10390) for the relief of Alphonse Desmarc—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCULLOCH: A bill (H. R. 10391) to remove the charge of desertion standing against George W. Merry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 10392) granting a pension to Eunice M. Stickle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDGELY: A bill (H. R. 10393) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Louderback—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10394) granting a pension to Aaron Wright—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10395) granting a pension to Jeremiah Hagee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10396) granting a pension to Henry C. Rowley—to the Committee on invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10397) granting an increase of pension to Francis Rule, widow of Preston C. Rule—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10398) granting a pension to Stephen Malony—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10399) to remove the charge of desertion standing of record against Joseph E. Martin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH: A bill (H. R. 10400) for the relief of David Houk—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 10401) granting a pension to Margaret E. and Joanna A. Callahan, dependent sisters of Thomas W. Callahan, late a member of Company G, Ninth New York Volunteer Cavalry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R 10402) for the relief of William F. Strather, deceased, Holmes County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BABCOCK: Resolution of Tom Cox Post, No. 132, Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 4, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9140) providing that entrymen under the homestead laws who have served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Spanish War or the Philippine insurrection shall have certain service deducted from the time required to perfect title under homestead laws, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 65) to authorize the holding of a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia in the city of Charlottesville, Va.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDING OF CABLE IN CUBA.

Mr. STEWART. I present a petition of citizens of Cuba, representing a large amount of property, urging that the law may be changed so as to prevent the Department from refusing to allow a competing cable to be landed on that island. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and printed.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the petitioners are Cubans, and we have a rule that prohibits anyone from presenting a petition from citizens of a foreign country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions from citizens of a foreign country can only be presented through the President.

Mr. MORGAN. That is true. Now, I do not raise any question about Cubans being citizens of a foreign country at all; but as we are going along with our business we had better not fall into any unexpected pits about matters of this kind.

Mr. STEWART. The petition relates to a matter in which the Cubans are deeply interested—the landing of a competing cable on the island. There was a law passed by Congress in regard to that matter, the Foraker amendment, which is construed by the Department to require the interference of the War Department to prevent the landing of the cable. Cubans are very much interested. This is a business matter, and there is no other place to which they can go for relief except to Congress. It seems to me that these petitioners do not come under the rule of foreigners generally, because it is a matter of legislation directly affecting them to which they call attention in their petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But if the Senator from Alabama objects, the petition can only be received through the instrumentality of the President.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not object. I am very glad to see the petition here. I believe their petition ought to be here. I believe the people of Cuba hold a relation to us to-day that can not be dissolved except by an act of Congress. I believe they are politically under our jurisdiction, and therefore they have the right of petition. I merely wanted to call attention to the importance of the proposition which is now presented with a view of directing the attention of Senators to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think when the attention of the Chair is called to the rule it will appear that the petition ought not to be received in this way. The rule is founded in good sense. It is important that it should be observed. It is a perfectly easy thing for people who want to make such a communication to Congress to transmit it through the State Department.

Mr. STEWART. When it relates to legislation by Congress directly affecting them it seems to me that they should not be denied the right to come to Congress and ask to have that legislation modified. The legislation was enacted by Congress, and it seems to me that their right to ask for relief in this way can not be waived. I do not believe that the petition is within the rule referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. The Foraker amendment prohibited the granting of franchises. The competing cable asked for no franchise; but the Department holds that that provision of law made it incumbent upon them to use the military to prevent the company from landing their cable. All they ask is to be let alone. They ask that the competing cable be let alone, and these Cubans want to have the law so modified as to have it let alone. They do not ask for any relief except a modification of the legislation to such an extent that they can go into the courts. That is all they ask. It seems to me that the petition is not within the rule, because it relates to legislation which directly affects them. They are not foreigners in the sense of that rule. This is the only legislative body to which they can go, which legislates for them, and they have a right, it appears to me, to present a respectful petition in regard to that legislation which concerns them.

Mr. MORGAN. If the proposition stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is to be considered as an objection to receiving this petition and the Chair holds it in that way, I make no objection. Then I will move that the petition be printed and that the subject go over until to-morrow, so that the Senate may look into the matter with more care.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If objection is made, the petition can only be received by the Senate through the instrumentality of the President of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Then let it be printed.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. STEWART. Can it not even be printed?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; it can not be received at all if objection is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not be received at all. There is no way by which it can be done if objection is made.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know whether objection is made. I do not believe the objection is a good one, even if made. That is the proposition I desire the Senate to pass upon. I believe those people are subject to our authority. We are ruling them every day, and we are ruling them under the absolute law of military dominion, military power. We can never get rid of those people so as to give them their independence and sovereignty and autonomy otherwise than by an act of Congress. Being, therefore, subject to the power of Congress in regard to their release from the sovereign jurisdiction of the United States, they have the right to petition Congress, and they are not on the footing of the subjects of foreign countries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition, without objection, will be received, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4089) granting a pension to Emily Burke; and

EDWARD COTTFRIED.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to send to the Senate a copy of the memorial of Edward Cottfried, a citizen of Wilkesbarre, Luzerne County, Pa., and late a consular agent of the United States of America at Trujillo, Peru, sworn to March 21, 1900, now on file in the State Department, together with all papers, letters, and exhibits attached to said memorial in connection with the action of a party of Peruvian revolutionists against the constitutional government of Peru on and after August 28, 1898, the memorialist at the time being consular agent of the United States in Peru, the wrongdoers perpetrating, it is alleged, depredations on his property and injuries and indignities upon his person in violation of treaty rights.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9140) providing that entrymen under the homestead laws who have served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Spanish war or the Philippine insurrection shall have certain service deducted from the time required to perfect title under homestead laws, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, it is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections January 23, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "not."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to amend the resolution by striking out the word "not." The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, in obedience to the order of the Senate, this resolution is properly before the Senate at this time, and personally I should be very glad if it could be proceeded with. I will state, however, to the Senate that the Committee on Privileges and Elections at this time is engaged in listening to an argument by counsel on another very important election case, the case of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK], and probably that hearing will be concluded by Friday of this week. Of course, while that discussion is in progress the presence of every member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is not only desirable, but is important and necessary. It will therefore be impossible, so far as I am concerned, to enter upon the discussion of this case to-day, but I will be ready to do so on Monday or Tuesday of next week or at any time when the Senate has the opportunity to take it up.

I therefore ask, as a matter of courtesy, that the order may be postponed until next week, or from day to day, it makes no difference, but under the circumstances I would be glad if it could be laid over until that time.

Mr. STEWART. It is not necessary, as I understand the matter, for all Senators to be present when a speech is made. It may be very interesting to those gentlemen to be here when the Senator from Michigan makes his speech, but they can read it if they become extra anxious to know what he said. If we were to adjourn every proceeding until we got a full Senate to hear the speeches, we would not do very much business. I have made speeches here, and so have others, when very few paid attention to them, and we thought it was very important that they should be present. I appreciate the desire of the Senator from Michigan to have a full house when he delivers himself of his argument, but I know no rule of the Senate under which an adjournment should take place for such a reason.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly not.

Mr. BURROWS. I said nothing whatever about a full Senate, although that unusual condition seems to exist at this time. I only spoke about the Committee on Privileges and Elections being engaged in another matter which demanded the attention of the committee, and as the committee has this matter also in charge, I am sure the members of the committee would be glad to be present when the argument in the Quay case is entered upon. They are obliged to be present during the argument in the other contested-election case, which will close on Friday of this week, and early next week—Monday, if desired——

Mr. STEWART. That does not better the request or the statement at all.

Mr. BURROWS. It betters it in this regard, that I did not ask for a full Senate. I think the Senate is certainly full now, and yet I am not prepared to proceed to-day.

Mr. STEWART. Is it necessary to have all the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections here? Why could they not read the remarks, and let us go on with the Quay case? It has been delayed. It is a question of the highest privilege, and it has been too long delayed.

That is not fair. The case should be taken up and finally disposed of. It is here by unanimous consent, and I insist that it shall have its place, and that the consent agreement shall not be violated. Of course, it could come up without any unanimous consent against any business. I hope every minute of the time will be occupied until 2 o'clock at least every day until the case is disposed of, and I think it will be disposed of in a few days if the Senator having it in charge will insist on keeping it before the Senate. If it goes away from the Senate, let it go away on a vote. Let us have a vote. That is the only way to deal with a matter so important as this.

Mr. CHANDLER. What the Senator from Michigan says is quite true, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is now executing another order of the Senate in investigating the Montana case; that it is to hear arguments during the remaining portion of this week, and that all the members of the committee will wish to attend the hearing of those arguments.

But, Mr. President, that fact does not prevent debate in the Senate from going on upon this resolution, if any Senator wishes to debate it. The Committee on Privileges and Elections will not remain in session any day longer than 1 o'clock, and the debate in the Senate upon this resolution can go on, and it ought to go on, because since the resolution was reported in the middle of January there has been ample time for Senators to prepare themselves to speak.

Now, the friends of the resolution are willing to forego all further speech in its behalf and to have a vote taken on the question here and now. If, however, any Senator wishes to speak against the motion to amend which I have made, it is his privilege to speak, and I especially desire to hear from the Senator from Michigan, who I understand is prepared to speak. I ask him why he can not go on now. If other Senators desire to speak, I wish to say to them that they ought to be prepared to speak within a day or two upon this resolution, which has been so long before the Senate.

I am willing that there shall be delay for one or two days, until Senators shall have an opportunity to prepare themselves, if they need preparation, to give their views to the Senate upon this question of high privilege. I know of no reason why the Senator from Michigan, familiar with the subject and abundantly prepared, should not go on to-day. The Committee on Privileges and Elections does not meet to-day, and the Senator from Nevada is anxiously waiting to hear the views of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. STEWART. All are prepared now. All were agreed about taking it up, and of course they are prepared to carry out the agreement. Everybody is prepared to go on, and there can be no excuse for delay. They understood the condition when they made the agreement, and the case should go on from this day right along. I am opposed to a violation of that consent agreement. If there are no speeches to be made, there will be no difficulty in taking a vote. The gentlemen can come down from the committee room to vote, as they do in other cases, and record their vote and go back.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Michigan if he is ready to go on this morning?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am not ready to go on this morning. I will state further that I desire to be heard upon this case. I will also state that there are several Senators absent who have advised me of their desire to speak upon the case and who will return the latter part of this week.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan why he is not ready to vote or to go on this morning? Why not take it up and go on with it?

Mr. BURROWS. I will inform the Senator from Nevada that I understand no agreement was made to vote upon the case this morning.

Mr. STEWART. No; but to take it up and go on with it.

Mr. BURROWS. We are ready to take it up.

Mr. STEWART. Let us go on with it, then.

Mr. BURROWS. If any Senator is prepared to speak this morning, I have no objection to it. For myself I am not prepared this morning to go on, but I will be prepared on Monday.

Mr. STEWART. Then let the vote be taken. If you do not want to speak, let us vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not disposed to be unreasonable, but this high question of privilege must be dealt with unless the Senate, by a direct vote, orders otherwise. Is there no other Senator who can talk on the subject to-morrow or the next day?

Mr. STEWART. I object to any new agreements.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I am advised other Senators wish to speak; indeed, I have a list of some ten or twelve Senators who have indicated to me a desire to speak on this question, and I presume that some of them will be able to go on to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. You gave consent that this resolution should be disposed of, and that agreement will not be violated.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Michigan will allow me, I agree that this resolution may go over until to-morrow, to come up at the conclusion of the routine morning business, without any further action being taken upon it to-day. So far as I am concerned, I wish kindly to notify Senators who are upon the list of the Senator from Michigan that it is desirable that they should be ready to speak at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections a question while he is up? Can not some day be agreed upon for taking a vote on this case? It is four months since the case came here; two and a half months since it was reported. All the cases have been cited over and over again, and every possible view of this case has been presented. It is a question of high constitutional privilege, and yet it seems to be perpetually postponed. The State is without representation; the seat in the Senate is empty; the Government has not its complement of public officials; yet we here, day after day and week after week and month after month, wait until another week or some other time for some one to get ready to speak.

Can we not fix upon a day and let gentlemen be notified that if they wish to speak they must do so without any further and unreasonable delay? There is some courtesy due to the whole body of the Senate; there is some courtesy due to a State; there is some courtesy due to an applicant for a seat in this body, and that courtesy ought not to be extended over and over again simply for the convenience of members who have had abundance of opportunity to prepare themselves and to deliver their views, and who can deliver no views that have not been in recent years and at this session over and over again repeated to the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am personally greatly obliged to the Senator from Virginia for what he has just said. I have just a word or two to add respecting the consideration of this case. Before I do it, however, I should like to clear away, if I can, something of the atmospheric conditions of yesterday afternoon.

What was said at the close of yesterday came after a heated and busy day, in which we had taken some important votes upon a measure of great national moment, and it came at a time when we were all tired and some of us possibly irritable; and it was a little like heat lightning, that comes at the end of a sultry day, somewhat lurid, but doing no harm. In what I said I had no intention in the world of being in the slightest degree offensive to anybody. I can imagine no personal subject upon which I could have a difference with the Senator from Massachusetts, and if men in the Senate can not differ good naturedly upon matters of public moment they are not fit to discuss them. I desire to disclaim any sort of personal allusion in what was said on yesterday afternoon.

Now, Mr. President, something over two months ago the Quay case, so called, was reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections—a case of the highest possible privilege. When it first came here everybody assumed that it would take its due course and would soon be considered by the Senate. There was a natural reason for its delay, because there was another case before the Committee on Privileges and Elections which was consuming a great deal of time, and which from that day to this has been almost constantly before that committee. The Quay case would naturally and properly, when it came before the Senate, be under the charge and direction and control of some member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, all of whom have been almost constantly engaged in committee work, and for myself I desire and intend in the future consideration of this case to be guided loyally and wholly by such action as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] in charge of the resolution shall see fit to take.

But, Mr. President, we have waited along day after day very patiently, and we have heard intimations and statements of speeches to be made respecting the case again and again and yet again. On one day a Senator has had to go to New Hampshire; then on another day another Senator was not quite ready; and these have been invariably Senators who are opposed to the seating of Mr. Quay. We have waited and postponed very good naturedly from time to time the consideration of the case for the convenience of those Senators until there has come to be a general feeling in the air, an intimation in the press of the country, and a conviction in the minds of thousands of people that this case of the highest privilege is intended to be buried in this Senate without consideration.

Mr. President, when you consider that here is a State with 7,000,000 people, with almost as many intelligent American citizens in it as there are Tagals and other savages in the Philippines, it does seem as if some sense of justice should prompt members of the American Senate to vote upon the question as to whether this great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is or is not entitled to two Senators in this body; so that if we vote against her contention she may take such legislative action as she sees fit. It is not a question of seating Mr. Quay, it is not a case of voting that he shall be entitled to a seat, but it is a question of giving a great State fair consideration.

There are Senators in this Chamber, Mr. President, who, upon high constitutional grounds, believe that Mr. Quay should not be seated, because they believe that the governor of a State has no right to appoint in the interim if the legislature fails to elect. For Senators holding that view all of us cherish, of course, the greatest respect. There are other Senators in this body who believe that upon constitutional grounds Mr. Quay ought to be seated; and they take that view, not because of partisan politics, but upon the highest possible grounds—those of the proper construction of the Constitution of the United States. For those Senators also, everybody in the country must cherish great respect. But, Mr. President, it is to me utterly inconceivable that Senators in this Chamber should day after day postpone, without reason and for purposes of delay, the consideration of this great question of the highest privilege.

We talk of the courtesy of the Senate! What Senator is there here who, if he had been in a similar way named by the governor of his State, having served in this body for twelve years, and who found his fellow-Senators day after day postponing the consideration of his case and refusing him a hearing, would not feel himself outraged?

Here we have, Mr. President, the case of an honorable Senator, useful and strong, endeared to the people of his Commonwealth, overwhelmingly supported by them in election after election, with whom some of us have served for many years, and to whom we have become attached by ties of affection and respect; and we find that week after week and month after month excuses that seem paltry to some of us stand in the way of a fair consideration of his case.

Mr. President, it is not difficult to understand why this great opposition comes. There is an opposition to him, not alone upon constitutional grounds, but upon party and political and personal grounds. He has been subjected to more overwhelming and disgraceful attacks than any man who has been in public life for a generation, and he has survived them all; and it will be cruel and wicked if this Senate—in which he served honorably for twelve years—shall add the final stab to his reputation and to his character.

Mr. President, he is attacked principally because, first, he has been chairman of a great political party in its national elections. There never yet has been a chairman of a great party, who has had the disbursing of the necessary funds for the management of a political campaign, who has not come out of it as the center and the target of all the opprobrium and ill will of political opponents and the discontented people in his own party.

I know of no national chairman of a great political party in the last twenty years, since I have known anything of public life, who has not suffered by just that sort of attack. I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has come out of it freer from suspicion that anybody else; but he has had probably fewer funds to handle [laughter], and the chances are, Mr. President, if he is continued in that position, and his party adheres to the course it seems to have adopted, he will come out of the next election absolutely unsmirched. [Laughter.] But the moment a man accepts the chairmanship of a national committee he becomes the center of attack upon his character.

It is said—with how much justice I do not know—that some attitude of Mr. Quay at some former period respecting what is known as the force bill has led to certain hostility, unexpressed, by certain members on this side of the Chamber to the consideration of his case. He took his political life in his hands in whatever action he may have committed himself to respecting that bill. There was no vote, no bargain, and no agreement; but some of us who have served here for many years have learned that kindnesses and benefits are soon forgotten. Whatever may have been his attitude respecting that measure or any other, there is no sort of obligation resting upon anybody that in consideration of it he should be voted a seat in this Senate; but I submit to Senators on the other side of the Chamber who are interested respecting that and other measures that if there is one drop of red blood in their veins, they ought to stand as one man to see that this fellow-Senator has a vote as to whether he is entitled to a seat here or whether he shall remain out of the Senate.

It is also true, Mr. President, that the public press of certain of the cities of this country find that the receipts of a great annual income for the publication of long advertisements concerning "Heart to Heart Talks on Ginghams" and the like [laughter] are coupled with the condition that they shall oppose by fair means and foul the seating of Mr. Quay. That consideration, I regret to say, has been sufficient to overcome in certain instances the ordinary courtesies of life. But, Mr. President, if there is any fairness left to us, we ought to permit his case to come to a vote.

We talk of the courtesy of the Senate! We are polite with each other; but sometimes it becomes a thin veneer, and sometimes, if you look under it, you will find it is all because we serve on different committees; that each of us have measures we desire to have passed, and find it more convenient to treat in a spirit of mutual concession than otherwise all our brother Senators. But it is a pity, Mr. President, if the courtesies of the Senate die with the official life of a brother Senator. It would almost seem as if politics and the struggle for power resembled rather a pack of wolves, which, in pursuit of the chase, stop only when a fellow-member of the pack is wounded or injured, long enough to consume him and eat him up, and then follow the quarry.

For my part, Mr. President, I do appeal to members of the Senate that we at least be men and vote upon the question, and by no paltry spirit of delay, by no subterfuge, and by the intrusion of no unreasonable request that we come to some fair understanding as to whether or not Matthew S. Quay is entitled to a seat in the Senate.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has given notice that he will let the question go over until Monday; but in a spirit of fairness I do trust that the Senate will at least acquit itself like an honorable body and vote fairly upon the merits of the question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that when the lurid heat lightning disappeared from view a veritable Colorado thunderstorm followed it. [Laughter.]

I simply rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of repudiating as one Senator every imputation which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] has cast upon those of us who are opposed to the seating of Mr. Quay. The Senator from Colorado transgresses the proprieties of the occasion in calling attention to the fact that in the discharge of what I conceive to be a duty I took three or four days from the public service to go to my home a little time ago; but it will be remembered that before doing so I stated to the Senate that it was a matter of utter indifference to me when this matter was taken up, when it was completed, and whether I was present or absent when the vote was taken, announcing, as I did, that if the vote should be taken in my absence I would be paired against the proposition to seat Mr. Quay.

Mr. President, on more than one occasion this Senate has waited upon the distinguished Senator from Colorado when he has been absent from the Senate and interested in matters before this body; hence the Senator ought not to criticise other Senators for asking the same courtesy.

I simply wish to say now that, so far as I know, there has been no disposition whatever to unduly delay the consideration of this resolution. A few days ago I called attention to the fact that all measures that had been before the Senate for the past six or eight weeks were in charge of Senators who are in favor of seating Mr. Quay. Not a single measure has been projected before this body which has taken an hour's time that was in charge of a Senator who is opposed to the seating of Mr. Quay. It should also be remembered that there has been no opportunity for those of us who have wished to debate this subject to do so, and there has been no disposition on the part of those of us who are opposed to seating Mr. Quay unduly to delay the consideration of this resolution.

Personally, Mr. President, I am in favor of proceeding to the consideration of this matter at the earliest possible day; and, so far as I am individually concerned, I will state to the Senate, while it is a matter of very little concern to this body or to the country, that on to-morrow, if it shall be determined that this matter shall be then proceeded with, I shall occupy a few moments in presenting my reasons for voting against the proposition to seat Mr. Quay as a member of the Senate. I trust, in view of the circumstances, that this matter may go over until to-morrow; that then it may be taken up in good earnest, and considered from day to day, and that the vote may be reached as speedily as it is possible to reach it, giving every Senator an opportunity to discuss this question who chooses to do so. Certainly I shall do nothing to delay the consideration of the matter; on the contrary, I will do everything in my power to facilitate its consideration, because I quite agree with the Senator from Colorado that we owe a duty to ourselves, to this body, and to the country to vote upon this proposition.

Mr. BURROWS obtained the floor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield to me on a matter of personal privilege?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am very sorry if I have ruffled the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I did not mean to do so. I am apologizing this morning to anybody who will let me. [Laughter.] I did not mean to say anything personal to the Senator. I only cited the Senator's absence as an illustration of the reasons for delay and one of the causes for delay, but without the slightest intimation that there was any ulterior purpose or any possible opening for criticism in it. I hope the Senator will accept this in the spirit in which it is tendered.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, in view of the calm and dispassionate argument of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], I think it is due to the Senate that I should make a statement of the facts in the progress of this case to show how unfounded the statements of the Senator from Colorado are.

When the credentials of Mr. Quay were presented, it was moved that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; where they went without opposition. On the 16th day of December the case was taken up promptly by the committee for consideration; counsel were heard upon each side; and the discussion of the matter and the argument by counsel closed on the 5th day of January. On the 23d day of January, as soon as the minority of the committee were ready, a report was made to the Senate. So that the report of the committee and the views of the minority were presented to the Senate on the 23d day of January.

At that time, as every Senator knows, the Senate was pressed with the consideration of matters of great moment; so that not only was there no disposition, but scarcely an opportunity to take up the Quay case at once; but it was taken up on the 26th day of February. On that day the member of the committee who made the report, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], took the floor and occupied two days in the discussion of the case. On the 2d day of March the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] spoke. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. ROSS] addressed the Senate on the case March 3, the very next day. On March 5 the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] addressed the Senate upon the case; on the 6th, the next day, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] spoke; and on the 14th the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] called the case up and asked for its consideration. Then the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked for an agreement as to time when the case might be taken up and proceeded with; and on the 15th, by unanimous consent, it was agreed that the case should be taken up on the 3d day of April. That is the simple history of the case. So that, since the case was taken up at the request of the gentleman who reported it to the Senate, it has been considered from day to day whenever opportunity afforded.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan, when there is a unanimous-consent agreement to consider a case until its final termination, if it is not a violation of that agreement to ask to postpone it? I never have heard of it being done before, and I never have heard of it being tolerated before.

Mr. BURROWS. I say it is not a violation of the agreement; but if the Senator will kindly allow me to complete my statement, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Michigan declines to yield.

Mr. BURROWS. I decline to yield for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURROWS. On the 15th of last month it was agreed by the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that this case should be set down for the 3d day of April. By unanimous consent that was agreed to. At that time, I will say to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who has asked that a day be fixed for a vote, request was made to fix a day for a vote, but the Senator from Massachusetts declined to comply with the request, for the reason that at that time many Senators had not been heard who desired to speak and that the debate had not proceeded far enough to make such a request proper. This is the history of the case.

On the 15th of March, when an agreement was made to take the case up on the 3d of April, the Clark case was to be heard on the following Tuesday, a week ago yesterday, but unforeseen circumstances made it necessary to postpone the arguments on that case until yesterday. As I said before, we are now in the midst of the hearing of that case. We shall be ready to proceed with this case next week, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will probably be prepared to speak to-morrow.

I reaffirm and reassert, intimations to the contrary notwithstanding, that there is no disposition whatever to delay the hearing of this case or a vote upon its disposition under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to call attention——

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Michigan has yielded to me.

Mr. STEWART. But I want to call attention to the violation of a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator may do that when I get through.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is laboring under a wrong impression. As I understood his intimation, it was that certain Senators on the other side of the Chamber would probably oppose Mr. Quay because he had voted against what is known as the force bill. The Senator then used some language to the effect that if we had any gratitude on this side of the Chamber we would remember that circumstance. I think, Mr. President, a number of us have shown on various occasions that we did have gratitude to those on the Republican side of the Chamber who voted to defeat the force bill. We did certainly feel very grateful to the Senator from Colorado, who has just spoken, who made the motion which set aside that bill and brought up another for consideration, thereby defeating the force bill. That bill itself was never voted upon. It was pending here, and the Senator from Colorado made a motion to proceed to the consideration of the apportionment bill.

It was universally recognized that that was a test vote, and that if the motion of the Senator from Colorado carried it would kill the force bill. A vote was taken, and the Senator's motion was carried by a majority of one. The Senators on the other side of the Chamber who voted with us were the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], the Senators from Nevada [Mr. STEWART and Mr. JONES], the then Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Washburn, and the then Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Cameron. The then Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, was paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on the same side of the question. Mr. Quay voted against the motion of the Senator from Colorado to set aside the force bill and to take up the apportionment bill.

I thought it was due that this statement should be made to the Senate, so that we on this side might not be accused of ingratitude in the matter.

Mr STEWART. I wish to call attention to the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate. It seems to me that this is an open violation of it, which ought not to be continued. I read the unanimous-consent agreement, which is as follows:

> That on Tuesday, April 3, after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of S. R. 107, declaring "that the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania," and continue its consideration from day to day until the final disposition of the same, subject to the consideration of appropriation bills, conference reports, the present unfinished business, and S. 2355, "In relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of September, 1898." (March 16, 1900.) Notice given by Mr. CHANDLER that he would not call up the foregoing resolution until Wednesday, April 4, at the same hour. (March 31, 1900.)

Now, we are here under this agreement, and a motion to postpone is in violation of the agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has already been postponed for one day.

Mr. STEWART. It has not been.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly it has; from Tuesday.

Mr. STEWART. There was no vote at all to take it up, because the understanding was that it should not interfere with the Porto Rican bill, which had precedence over it. There was no postponement by any motion, but by force of the language of the agreement the unfinished business had precedence over it; but, subject to that precedence, it had the right of way day by day by the consent agreement, and such an agreement was never before openly violated in this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator seriously insist that a unanimous-consent agreement can not again be modified by unanimous consent?

Mr. STEWART. It may be by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has asked. He has asked unanimous consent. He has made no motion.

Mr. BURROWS. I have made no motion.

Mr. STEWART. I object to any unanimous consent or any motion to put the Quay case out of the way. I insist on adhering to the unanimous-consent agreement already had.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to interrogate the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], if he will permit me. I should like to ask him whether, when he read the history of the progress made in the Quay case, he mentioned the resolution which I was compelled to offer in this Senate several weeks ago, in order to bring the matter up? I do not recall whether or not he mentioned that.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know whether that occurred on one of the days I have mentioned. I have not the memoranda now at hand; but I referred to the Senator from Pennsylvania as making an effort to get up the Quay case; and I presume that was the occasion.

Mr. PENROSE. I remember the occasion. It was during the morning hour when, according to my recollection, there was no other business of any kind which could be interfered with by bringing the Pennsylvania Quay case up, in order that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] might have an opportunity to make a speech. I do not recall how the Senator from Michigan voted; but doubtless he exercised his privilege to advance the Quay case in every way in his power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless some Senator wishes to speak, I shall ask that the resolution go over until after the routine morning business to-morrow. I shall not now ask that a time may be fixed for voting upon the resolution, but will do so at a later stage. I give notice that I shall press this case for consideration as a question of the highest privilege until it is speedily disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the resolution go over until after the routine business to-morrow morning is completed. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. I object. I object to any postponement whatever, unless there can be unanimous consent to vote on some day. If there can be that consent, if we can fix on any day, however remote, when the vote can be taken, I shall not object.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I shall never make any motion in reference to the consideration of a question of as high privilege as is this. I ask that it may go over, and I shall be very glad to turn over the management of the case so far as I am concerned to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] if he thinks that he can get it voted on any quicker than I can.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator listen to me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to make a suggestion. I ask unanimous consent that the final vote may be taken on this case one week from next Tuesday, at 4 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is objected to, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow after the routine morning business.

Mr. STEWART. I object. That is in violation of the agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement, if that agreement is in existence; but I have no objection to terminating the unanimous-consent agreement, though I think the day far distant when the Senate of the United States will destroy the privilege that attaches to a question as to the right of a person to fill a vacant seat in this Senate. That agreement is not in force if a motion is made to postpone the Quay case without unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. If it can be understood that this unanimous-consent agreement shall be restated, and that it shall commence to-morrow morning after the routine morning business, and shall not thereafter be further violated——

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall object to any new unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. STEWART. Then I object to this entire proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] moves that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow morning after the routine morning business is completed. The question is on that motion.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. STEWART called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, having asked that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow, and the motion is that it shall go over until to-morrow, I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

I hope the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will return within a day or two, when we can have a discussion of what the meaning of this unanimous-consent agreement is. We had a discussion yesterday afternoon which was not particularly beneficial, according to my observation, and I have no desire to renew it now; but I protest, as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, against any idea that the unanimous-consent agreement, if it exists, shall be broken in this way against the objection of any Senator; and I also protest against any attempt to deprive the question of filling a vacant seat in this Senate of the high privilege which belongs to it at all times, unless it is disposed of by direct vote of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to call his attention to a part of the debate which occurred at the time the unanimous consent was granted. I hope the Senate will, in perfect good faith, carry out the unanimous-consent agreement as it was understood, and distinctly understood, at the time it was made. I ask the President of the Senate to have read the question addressed to the Chair by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the answer of the President of the Senate, which was clearly a part of the unanimous-consent agreement at the time it was made, and which clearly shows that the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is not in any sense a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. I ask the Chair to have that paragraph read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, under that agreement it would be quite in order that any Senator should make a motion to indefinitely postpone this resolution, to postpone it for one month, for three months, or for six months. Every subsidiary motion known to parliamentary law was explicitly reserved.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no question about that.

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then what becomes of the continuous consideration?

Mr. GALLINGER. It ends.

Mr. CHANDLER. If you can have the continuous consideration of a subject and postpone it by just as many motions as any Senator chooses to make, your agreement is destroyed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will not yield further. I have the floor.

Mr. STEWART. In view of the circumstances I will withdraw my objection and let the matter go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will be prepared to speak to-morrow, and I think it would be better for the resolution to go over by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEWART. I consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow? Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his motion?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I will, under the circumstances; and I shall exercise my right to speak to-morrow as I would have done if this discussion had not taken place. I will not speak because somebody has suggested that I ought to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will go over until to-morrow after the routine morning business.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 2053.

Mr. LODGE. Before the bill is taken up, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for one moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I will give way in one moment to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. President, the Pennsylvania case having been put over until to-morrow I desire simply to say that at 2 o'clock——

Mr. BURROWS. To-day.

Mr. LODGE. Two o'clock to-day I shall move to take up Senate bill 2355 and make it the unfinished business. What the correct interpretation of the unanimous-consent agreement is I do not pretend to say, but I think it must be plain to everyone that Senate bill 2355 is excepted, and that I am not breaking the unanimous-consent agreement if I move to take it up and make it the unfinished business, which is all I desire to do. I have not the remotest intention of using that bill, when it becomes the unfinished business, to interfere with the continuous consideration of the Quay case, which I understand was the primary point of that agreement, by which I hope to abide strictly.

Moreover, Mr. President, if nobody is ready to proceed upon the Philippine bill, I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to go on with the Alaska bill, the consideration of which I think ought to be completed at the earliest possible moment. I have no intention, and I had no intention, of using this bill in any way to obstruct. I desired simply that it should have the position which I understood it was entitled to under the unanimous-consent agreement.

I should like to add, Mr. President, before I take my seat that no explanation so far as I am personally concerned was needed from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I never should have suspected that he would make any personal reflection upon me; and I desire to say on my own part that whatever in the heat of the moment I may have said last night which may have seemed to imply that the unanimous-consent agreement was broken, or that any Senator intended or thought of breaking it, was said perfectly unintentionally and without meaning in any way to make such an implication against any Senator. Some of us interpret its meaning differently, but I believe there is but one desire in the Senate, and that is to live up strictly to a unanimous-consent agreement once entered into as this one was.

JOSEPH M'GRAW.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2053) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Joseph McGraw.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "rebellion," to insert:

Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Joseph McGraw, late a member of Company I, Eighty-second New York Infantry Volunteers, and grant the said Joseph McGraw an honorable discharge, to date from the close of the war of the rebellion: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire, inasmuch as I am chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to call up that bill which has been reported for some time past and is on the Calendar, with a view of asking the Senate to fix a day for its consideration. I do not expect to press the canal bill if it is taken up this morning, but I desire to call it up for the purpose of having a day fixed for its consideration. My reason is that I expect to be absent from Washington for perhaps ten or fifteen days on business that is personally important to myself, and I do not feel at all disposed to leave this body under any circumstances or for any reason in the world while that great measure is upon the Calendar and not disposed of. I will, therefore, ask the Senate to take up the bill with a view of allowing me to ask that a day be fixed for its consideration as the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield for that purpose?

Mr. CARTER. For the purpose of enabling the Senator from Alabama to address the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to address the Senate. I merely wish to get the bill up and to ask the Senate to fix a day for its consideration as the regular order.

Mr. CARTER. I yield to that request, provided it does not lead to extended debate.

Mr. MORGAN. There will not be any debate about it.

Mr. CARTER. I will then ask that the Alaska bill be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of the request of the Senator from Alabama. I do not wish, however, to be understood as yielding the floor or the place of this bill, but simply that it be set aside for a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill known as the Nicaragua Canal bill be laid before the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MASON. I object. I rise for a matter of inquiry. I desire to do all I can to assist in the passage of the Nicaragua Canal bill, but before it is taken up and disposed of I should be glad to be informed whether any action is to be taken on the treaty. I desire to know whether it is to be a bill to be passed under this treaty or whether the Senator expects to get a vote before the adoption or rejection of the treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. The day which I propose to suggest for the consideration of the canal bill will give ample time for the consideration of the treaty, if the Senate thinks it is best to consider and dispose of the treaty first. I will say, however, that the frame of the canal bill is not in the way of the provisions of that treaty. The canal bill was reported some time before the treaty was negotiated and concluded, and the two measures are not in the slightest degree in conflict, in my opinion; but I desire to have a day fixed for the consideration of the canal bill that will give ample time for the Senate to consider the treaty in advance, if they propose or prefer to do so. I do not care myself to undertake to give a preference to either measure over the other.

Mr. MASON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I can not hear him. Therefore I can not tell when he gets through. I do not want to interrupt him.

Mr. MORGAN. I have stated, and I will repeat it to the Senator from Illinois, that personally I have no preference in respect of these measures—none whatever. I propose to ask the Senate to fix a day for the consideration of this bill which will give ample time for the consideration of the treaty, if the Senate is disposed to consider that measure in advance of action upon the canal bill. But I further stated that the bill, which the committee reported some time before the treaty was negotiated, contains such language as would make room for the treaty if the Senate chooses to ratify that instrument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill known as the Nicaragua Canal bill be laid before the Senate, in order that he may make a request. Is there objection?

Mr. MASON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. MASON. I could not understand from what I could hear of the statement of the Senator from Alabama whether he expects to press the matter to a hearing. I hope the Senator can hear me, whether I could hear him or not.

Mr. MORGAN. I can hear the Senator from Illinois with great distinctness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter is not before the Senate.

Mr. MASON. I have the floor, I understand, and I wish to make a personal explanation. Does the Presiding Officer wish to take me off the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois can proceed by unanimous consent, but not otherwise.

Mr. MASON. The Chair——

Mr. CARTER. Since the matter is leading to debate and an objection has been interposed by the Senator from Illinois, I call for the regular order.

Mr. MASON. I was making a personal explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When an objection is made, that is the end of the matter where it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. MASON. Then I ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter is not before the Senate.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent for one minute to explain to the Senator from Alabama that I could not hear all of his request, and I do not wish him to understand that I shall oppose the Nicaragua Canal bill. I wish to be put right before my own people, who favor this bill. So far as I can learn, they are not in favor of a Nicaragua Canal under the treaty and under the terms of the treaty which has been negotiated by the State Department and sent to the Senate of the United States. Whether they will favor the treaty as proposed to be amended by the committee I am not advised. I simply object to taking it up in any way until I can have information whether it is to be an American canal or a canal to be controlled, as I think, by the greatest naval power in the world. I object for that reason.

Mr. MORGAN. Can I have the consent of the Senate to make myself understood to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MASON. The Senator can get unanimous consent, I have no doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose to call up the bill this morning for the purpose of having a day fixed for its consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The canal bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The canal bill, and not the treaty; and I propose to give no preference, so far as I am personally concerned, either to the treaty or to the bill, one over the other. What I want to do is to have action of this body taken, and I propose, with the consent of the Senate, to have a day fixed for the consideration of this bill so far distant that the Senate can either dispose of the treaty or not, at its pleasure, before that time arrives. But I stated at the same time that the provisions of this canal bill are not in conflict, in my judgment, with the provisions of that treaty. Now I hope the Senator from Illinois understands me.

Mr. MASON. I object to taking the bill up in any way.

Mr. CARTER. I call for the regular order.
